I believe that I have something else in common with the hon. Member for Worsley. As a teenager I was always very short of cash. I quickly realised that I could not afford to smoke and drink beer at the same time, or even in the same week. In my case, beer won—and so it has been ever since. I must confess that I dislike a smoky atmosphere. Like many hon. Members who have spoken, I go to great efforts to ensure that I sit in a non-smoking area in a restaurant. I almost rigidly apply a non-smoking rule in my office—with the sole exception of the occasional welcome visits from my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle).

I appreciate—indeed, I pay tribute to—the obvious sincerity of the hon. Member for Worsley in putting his arguments, although I felt that some of them were rather thin. I do not think that there is any disagreement about the deleterious effects of smoking on health. I agreed with some of the first part of the speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Honiton (Sir P. Emery) when he referred to the difficulties suffered by asthmatics. Indeed, so far all hon. Members who have spoken in the debate, which I think has been a slightly unbalanced debate, have been motivated by the best of intentions. We all know where the road that is paved with good intentions all too frequently leads. We have a duty to consider proposals of this sort carefully. A great danger exists today, as it has in past Sessions, especially in relation to smoking, of introducing legislation that leaves us all feeling good and that we have struck a great blow for the health of the nation. The Bill would make no difference.

The same strictures could be applied to this measure as were applied to the Bill that the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) introduced in the previous Session. I would call this placebo legislation—passing it may make us feel good, but it has no effect. We must ask whether the Bill is necessary. Among the member states of the European Community, Britain has, with the sole exception of the Netherlands, the most successful record in reducing the incidence of smoking. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys general household survey was published in January 1994. It showed that, in 1992 in Great Britain, 29 per cent. of men aged 16 or over and 28 per cent. of women smoked cigarettes. That was substantially less than in 1972, when 52 per cent. of men and 42 per cent. of women smoked. The Government's "The Health of the Nation" target is to reduce those percentages still further to 20 per cent. by the year 2000 for both men and women.

As has been admitted today, the reduction in the incidence of smoking is the outcome not of any one single measure, but of the implementation of an integrated package of comprehensive measures. Today, almost universal awareness exists of the health risks that arise from smoking tobacco. Whether people take any notice of that is a matter for them, but they are aware of it. Manufacturers' ability to promote their products is severely limited. Retail prices are high, primarily as a result of taxation rates, which exceed those applying to any other product. Of all the components of policy, the most effective means of reducing tobacco consumption is undoubtedly to raise the price.

Mr. John Carlisle: My hon. Friend might recall that, some two or three weeks ago in a debate in the House, Her Majesty's Opposition saw fit to oppose the latest taxation proposals in the second Budget by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. They do not share my hon. Friend's opinion that price is a necessary component. It seems as though official Labour party policy is now that taxation should not be used as a weapon against cigarettes. A future Labour Government might even reduce the taxation if they follow the course that they took some two weeks ago.

Sir George Gardiner: My hon. Friend makes an interesting point. I do not doubt that the Opposition spokesman will give him the answer.

Price is a key factor. Research from all around the world suggests that every 10 per cent. increase in tobacco prices leads generally to a fall in consumption of between 3 per cent. and 6 per cent. Since 1979, the price of cigarettes in real terms has risen by more than 80 per cent. In his Budget statement of November 1993, my right hon. and learned friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that he intended to raise excise duties by at least 2 per cent. per annum in real terms. The two Budgets in 1993 led to a combined increase of 21p for a pack of 20 cigarettes. That brought the total increase in excise duties on a pack of cigarettes between 1983 and 1993 to no less than 1,235 per cent. Cigarette consumption fell by nearly 5 per cent. in 1993.

[Sir George Gardiner]

In his Budget statement on 29 November last year, the Chancellor increased cigarette prices again by 10 per cent. per pack of 20. In the mini-Budget on 8 December, to which my hon. Friend referred, and which was effective from 1 January this year, a further 6p was added. A recent survey by the leading market research company Mintel predicts that cigarette consumption is expected to fall by 5 per cent. per annum.

Mr. Carlisle: My hon. Friend has been extremely tolerant and generous in giving way. Would he like to make the point that the yield from taxation on tobacco products approaches £9 billion per year? So far in the debate, not a word has been spoken about what would happen if smoking were virtually abolished, as I am sure many of the Bill's supporters would wish. Where would that tax come from, and what is the relationship between the cost of tobacco-related diseases and the revenue that is coming in? We have heard nothing on that score.

Sir George Gardiner: It would be interesting if the Opposition spokesman were to rise to that bait.

Although price is the key factor, public education is crucial, especially for young people. I agree that it is tragic to see young people, who are only too well aware of the health risks of smoking, nevertheless pushing them aside and bowing to peer pressure or pressure in their own homes to take up the habit. Often, there is almost a "mañana" effect. People think, "Smoking is all right for the next year or so, but by the time I am 30, I am sure I will have given up."

As we know, the Department of Health launched the biggest anti-smoking campaign ever at the end of last year. It has been referred to already. It cost more than £13 million. It will run for three years and it is aimed particularly at parents who smoke. Children whose parents smoke are twice as likely to smoke as children who come from non-smoking families. Tobacco advertising is already strictly controlled by voluntary agreement, and the effectiveness of that voluntary approach has been mentioned already. It was shown when Camel cigarettes agreed to end the use of new packaging that was arguably of greater appeal to children.

Health warnings appear on cigarette packets. In the UK, those warnings are larger than in any other European country, and 50 per cent. larger than required by the relevant European directive.

I also believe—I will not develop this point at great length because I am sure that other right hon. and hon. Members will do so—that there is a real danger that if the Bill is passed, it will undermine the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising, which was negotiated with the tobacco industry in good faith and which is proving extremely effective in restricting the promotion of tobacco products. If the Bill is passed, it may be counter-productive to that agreement.

I shall concentrate on the Bill's relationship to the European directive on the labelling of tobacco products and its effect on British industry. As has been said, this is central to the whole argument today. My views on membership of the European Community—the European Union as we are now told to call it—are quite well known. I am described as a Euro-sceptic although I certainly do not wish us to be outside the EC. The House knows full well the importance I attach to this country's ability to govern itself as it wishes and to the House's ability to determine legislation rather than having Brussels or Strasbourg calling the tune.

In one sense, I wish that the Bill could be considered entirely on its merits without the complication of law made in Brussels, albeit that I would still find the Bill objectionable on other grounds, as I shall explain later. The fact is, however, that we cannot consider the Bill without putting it in the context of the European directive which, under the treaty of Rome, the United Kingdom has long since implemented under domestic legislation. When the Bill is put in that context, one quickly sees what a ridiculous and damaging proposal it is.

The Bill would make one law for our industry which could not be applied to competing imports. Why? The answer is because the European directive says so. Clause 1(5) says that regulations may provide that the main requirements will not apply to imports from other member states. It should say, "They shall not apply to imports if they comply with domestic regulations in the member state of origin." That is what the European directive says, whether I or the hon. Member for Worsley like it or not.

Before allowing the Bill to continue its passage we must, therefore, consider whether it is a sensible proposition or whether the whole idea is fundamentally flawed. There is no doubt in my mind that it is certainly fundamentally flawed.

Mr. Nigel Evans: I immediately declare an interest as I have a retail business that sells tobacco products. My hon. Friend spoke about the European Community directive and about the fact that it would give an unfair advantage to tobacco products manufactured outside the United Kingdom. I certainly would not want to see my shop with its shelves packed full of foreign products when we produce good cigarettes in this country. If we take action at all on this issue, it should be taken at a pan-European level and not just in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Gardiner: My hon. Friend makes a good point and I shall cover certain aspects of it later. His experience as a tobacco retailer echoes the messages I have been given by tobacconists in my constituency about the Bill's likely effects, if it is passed.

The Bill would require the health warning on packs of tobacco products to be 12 sq cm or 25 per cent., whichever is the greater, on the front and the back. That compares with the size laid down by United Kingdom regulations, which provide that the area of the lettering of the warning must be 6 per cent. Of itself, this is an important point. In addition, the way in which the 6 per cent. warning is measured under the regulations is quite different from the measurement method proposed in the Bill. The Bill's proposal of 25 per cent. or more must be compared with the size of warnings used by other member states of the European Union. The figure is 4 per cent. in countries with one language, 6 per cent. in countries with two languages and 8 per cent. in countries with three languages. All that is laid down in the European directive on the labelling of tobacco products.

The European directive was introduced as a single market measure to avoid distortions of trade in tobacco products. In other words, it was intended to ensure that all products carried roughly the same size of health warning. Whatever I and other hon. Members may think about the European harmonisation process and where it may lead us, the fact is that the Bill is directly contrary to the directive. We should at least be aware of that when considering today whether the Bill has any merit.

We should be aware of the impact that the Bill may have on smoking habits and tobacco consumption. Given the choice of buying tobacco products that have health warnings very much larger than existing UK health warnings or buying products that have a warning two thirds or less of the existing UK size, as would be the case with imported products, it would not be surprising if smokers chose the packs with the smaller warning, not because they did not know of, did not understand or did not accept the health warnings, but simply because they found the design of the other packs more appealing. There is some psychology at work here. Many people could imagine that the packs that had the larger warnings carried the greater danger to health. Being aware of the health risk, they might buy the imported packs with the smaller health warning on them.

Mr. Couchman: I expect that my hon. Friend has received the letter from the British Thoracic Society, signed by Dr. James Friend, which mentions that Australian research has shown that adolescents, when given a choice of brands with a variety of warnings, do not choose the packs that carry prominent, strong, visible and legible health warnings. Does not that reinforce my hon. Friend's argument that people will buy packets that do not have strong warnings on them?

Sir George Gardiner: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that point. Australia, of course, has the luxury of not being a member of the European Union and it can make changes to the warning on cigarette packets without being concerned about the possibility of coming into conflict with legislation from Brussels. Whether unfortunately or not, we are not in the same position as the Australians.

Mr. Leigh: Did not the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis), the promoter of the Bill, give the game away earlier when he replied to interventions by me and my hon. Friends? He said that Commissioner van Miert proposed to change the regulations. The fact is that we have no change on the statute book at the moment. The hon. Gentleman did not deny that EC imports could flood in. Does not that make a powerful point in favour of my hon. Friend's views?

Sir George Gardiner: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for drawing the House's attention to that point, both earlier and now.

We must go on to consider the impact on trade and on our industry. The United Kingdom tobacco industry directly employs 11,000 people. Those jobs are divided throughout the country. The industry accounts for nearly 3,500 jobs in the south and south-east of England; nearly 1,500 jobs in the midlands; about 1,400 jobs in the north-east; more than 1,300 jobs in the north-west; nearly 1,300 jobs in Northern Ireland; nearly 600 jobs in the south-west; about 600 jobs in Wales; more than 300 jobs in Scotland and nearly 200 jobs in the north of England. Those people are directly employed in the manufacture of tobacco products. Additional tobacco-related employment accounts for about 70,000 full-time jobs. They are found in a wide variety of industries including retailing, wholesaling, packaging, engineering, marketing, advertising and distribution.

If the Bill became law, imported products would be far more attractive to the smoker. It would not cause people to smoke less or fewer people to take up smoking, but it would simply mean that those people smoked imported products, either the brand they were used to smoking or another one. Even given all my reservations about European legislation, I cannot see the point of our passing a Bill simply to provide manufacturers in other member states with a marketing advantage over our own industry. That would mean that the House was putting British jobs in jeopardy and transferring them to other member states. [Interruption.] [HON. MEMBERS: "Why are they laughing"?] I am amazed by the Opposition's reaction to that.

Has the hon. Member for Worsley taken into account the real possibility that British manufacturers, when they find that they are penalised, will start moving their manufacturing base abroad to import goods here to protect their own market share? Either way, Britain would lose out.

Whatever the hon. Member for Worsley has to say in reply to that point, let him not be under any illusions. Despite the fact that the United Kingdom's tobacco products market is declining rapidly, overseas manufacturers still want a larger share. They will take every opportunity, and the opportunities that the Bill would provide, to do just that.

If the hon. Member for Worsley wants evidence of how different conditions in the United Kingdom market can and do affect trade, he need look no further than the cross-channel trade in tobacco products, which is a live issue in the part of the world that I represent. That trade has resulted from the fact that tobacco tax rates and prices are not harmonised between this country and other member states. The smuggling of tobacco products from the continent to this country is therefore increasing. If we now disharmonise legislation on labelling, as the Bill would, imported products would be sucked straight into the United Kingdom market.

The promoter of the Bill is asking the House to shoot its own industry and the nation's best interests in the foot. He is asking us to do so on unsubstantiated grounds that larger and more prominent health warnings on cigarette packets will dissuade people from smoking and that, thereby, the take-up and incidence of smoking in this country will reduce at a faster rate than it otherwise will do.

Mr. Robert Banks: My hon. Friend has already mentioned the Australian example. We have had no evidence from the sponsors of the Bill to suggest that the larger warnings on Australian packets of cigarettes have had any effect on the warnings transmitted.

Sir George Gardiner: I would be interested in such evidence.

Another consequence that would flow from the Bill is the absolute certainty of long, drawn-out and expensive legal actions in the courts in this country and in Europe. I have some grounds for claiming that, because, not unusually, the European directive is confusingly and unclearly worded. It has already given rise to different views by Advocate General Lenz and the European Court of Justice on a reference from the High Court concerning the United Kingdom's regulations on health warnings in the context of the European directive.

If the Bill is approved, the legal argument could be revisited since the European Court of Justice is not bound, as we know, by its previous decisions. There are strong grounds for argument on the point of proportionality, particularly in relation to the prime objective of the directive, which is to harmonise laws to avoid distortion of trade.

There are other grounds for argument, because the directive sets down exhaustive rules in relation to the presentation, as opposed to the size, of warnings. The Bill appears to go far further than the directive allows. It certainly conflicts with that directive in permitting regulations to cover imports, for the directive says specifically that it cannot do so. Practical complications will, therefore, be caused by the implementation of the Bill's detailed provisions, contravening the requirements of the directive.

Mr. John Marshall: I apologise to my hon. Friend for being outside the Chamber for part of his speech. When I came back, I did not realise that I would have the good fortune to hear the rest of it.

My hon. Friend has referred to imports. Is he saying that under European law, imported cigarettes from France, Italy, Germany and Holland would carry the size of warning relevant in those countries whereas cigarettes manufactured here would carry a different-sized warning? Would he like to speculate whether that would encourage international companies to relocate their activities outside the United Kingdom, perhaps to Holland, to manufacture the cigarettes consumed in this country?

Sir George Gardiner: I am not certain whether my hon. Friend was present when I referred to that real danger, which would be a possible consequence if the Bill were to become law.

Mr. Illsley: The hon. Member has twice said that British companies would relocate to Europe because of the problems associated with carrying a larger health warning on British cigarette packs. How does he equate that with the social chapter and the cost upon business?

Sir George Gardiner: I accept that if the manufacturers of tobacco products moved from here to Europe they would be covered by the social chapter. They would certainly have to pay the added overheads that would be associated with that. I am glad that the hon. Gentleman recognises that. It would be a matter for those manufacturers' commercial judgment whether the loss that they would incur as a result of staying in this country and having to put larger warnings on their packets would outweigh the costs that the social chapter would impose upon them. Presumably that would be an argument in favour of the social chapter continuing on the continent but not here so as at least to protect some British jobs.

Mr. John Carlisle: That is precisely the point made by the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley). Because of the devastating effect that the Bill could have on tobacco companies, they are willing to take the enormous risk and face the enormous cost of the social chapter by moving their manufacturing to other countries—[Interruption.] Opposition Members may laugh about that, but we are talking about British jobs. By giving jobs away willy nilly and by taking no notice of the devastating effect that the Bill would have on employment in this country, Opposition Members are decrying their own constituents.

Sir George Gardiner: I thank my hon. Friend for his further intervention. I would like to conclude my speech as other hon. Members wish to participate in the debate.

All market research shows that there is a virtual 100 per cent. recognition and awareness among smokers of the health warnings on packets. There is also high awareness of the warnings themselves, even though there is one standard warning and six variants that are used in rotation. There is also a very high awareness of health warnings among children to whom the anti-smoking message is preached strongly every day inside and outside schools.

I must point out to the hon. Member for Worsley that it is quite possible, as he knows, to be an anti-smoker and to be at the same time opposed to the Bill as I am. He assumes that people smoke and that children experiment with smoking because they do not understand the health risks that they might be running. Whether the hon. Gentleman likes it or not, he must accept that adult smokers continue to smoke with full knowledge and awareness of what is said about the health risks of smoking. They may delude themselves by saying, "Perhaps I'll give up the habit next year," or "Let's try it as a new year's resolution," or what have you—

Mr. Lewis: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Sir George Gardiner: Let me complete the point. I would back any measures through the health service or elsewhere to encourage people who want to give up smoking to do that and any measures to make it easier for them to do that.

Mr. Lewis: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that giving up is not a question of choice? Nicotine is an addictive drug.

Sir George Gardiner: Yes, that is stating the obvious. We all know friends who smoke who say, "Yes, I wish I could give it up and save the money that I spend." There is no doubt that people are very well informed about the warnings.

Children, no less than adults, are also aware of the warnings. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) said earlier, there is often a certain perversity about children and particularly teenagers. If we tell them not to do something, it is a challenge that they really must overcome, and all the more so if it relates to something that they think makes them appear rather more adult and when all the peer pressure is to do just that thing.

The Bill exhibits a particular and rather peculiar view of human life and behaviour. It presumes that by forcing warnings on people which they already know and understand, the Bill will change their behaviour and they will make choices that the hon. Member for Worsley and I would prefer them to make.

I take a very different view. I believe that people should be allowed to make their own decisions on a well-informed basis as I believe they already do on smoking, drinking, eating and all the other risky and pleasurable things in life. It is not relevant that I personally might not like the decisions that people make. I do not believe that we need a disproportionate measure such as the Bill, not least because it would damage the country's interests without any guarantee that the hon. Member for Worsley would succeed in his fundamental, and I accept sincere, objective.

Finland fully understood that point when it decided most recently to comply with the European directive on the labelling of tobacco products. Finland reduced the size of health warnings on packs from 33 per cent., which was the national requirement before Finland joined the European Community, to 6 per cent. as required by the European directive in a two-language country.

I have no desire to promote the cause of a European super-state—far from it. That is not what I am doing in opposing the Bill. I am seeking simply to inject a note of realism into the debate and, in doing so, I am trying to put emotional considerations to one side. I ask my colleagues to do the same. If they do that, I hope and believe that the House will today reject this unnecessary Bill.

Mr. Eric Illsley (Barnsley, Central): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on his good fortune in the ballot for private Members' Bills and on introducing a Bill that is designed to improve public health, in particular the health of our children. I was interested in the comments by the hon. Member for Reigate (Sir. G. Gardiner) about the nation's best interests in terms of producing tobacco and cigarettes. Perhaps the nation's best interests are in improving its health.

Over the past two or three years, the House has shown its willingness to allow progress—albeit limited progress—on Bills relating to smoking. The majority of hon. Members accept that we need to emphasise the dangers of smoking and to accelerate as much as possible a reduction in the prevalence of smoking. I sincerely hope that the House will allow the Bill a Second Reading today and will ensure that some of the issues that have been raised—they range widely from health matters to the European directive and to our position in Europe—are debated in Committee.

The Bill strengthens existing legislation on health warnings on cigarette packets and on packets of other tobacco products. By doing that, the effectiveness of health warnings will be increased, thus discouraging people from taking up smoking or, perhaps, from continuing to smoke. The Bill is aimed at young people who contemplate smoking and others who are trying to give up. The Bill reinforces the warning in order to dissuade people from smoking.

Conservative Members have said that everybody knows about the health problems of cigarettes and about warnings on packets. If that is the case, why not allow the size of health warnings to be increased? If everybody knows about the health hazards, it would not make much difference. Hon. Members have talked about differences in health warnings. They can see the effectiveness of that in what I am holding up. Warnings that have been increased by 25 per cent. have greater visibility and effect.

The health hazards of smoking are well documented. They were first highlighted in the 1960s. Warnings on cigarette packets date from 1971. We have had health warnings for more than 20 years, but there are still people who insist that smoking has no link to illness, lung cancer, strokes or chronic coronary disease. A letter was circulated recently by the Freedom Organisation for the Right to Enjoy Smoking Tobacco—FOREST—in which it said:

"In the first place, we of course differ from them"— that is, the promoters—

"in contesting the notion that smoking is unique in giving rise to 'health hazards'."

We do not say that smoking is unique in causing health hazards. Smoking remains the largest single cause of preventable mortality in this country. That is the point that we want to get across. The 110,000 smoking-related deaths each year can, to a large extent, be prevented.

The hon. Members for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) and for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) said that there are no health warnings about excessive alcohol consumption. I do not dispute that for a moment. However, the difference is that cigarettes, when used as the manufacturer directs, cause deaths. We are talking not about the excessive consumption of tobacco but about the consumption of tobacco at any level, which can cause illness, death and so on. The point is the use of the word "excessive".

Mr. Barron: My hon. Friend, like myself, will have received a letter from a Member of the other place, who is the chairman of FOREST, which argues that we should take action against smoking. However, he said that there is also danger in articles such as kitchen knives and electric chainsaws. Does my hon. Friend think that, if a person purchases an electric chainsaw and uses it as the manufacturer says that it should be used, it is hardly likely to cause death?

Mr. Illsley: My hon. Friend makes a fair and valid point. The implements that he mentioned carry warnings about their use. If used properly, those implements should not cause problems. Such implements could cause accidents if used in the wrong manner, but they will not harm other people, whereas smoking does—through passive smoking.

More than 110,000 deaths each year are attributed to smoking. One person dies every day from passive smoking. That is not my figure, but was given by the right hon. Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) at the Dispatch Box a year ago during the debate on the Bill on tobacco advertising introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron). The right hon. Gentleman said that 50 children under the age of five were admitted to hospital with illnesses related to passive smoking. Those are Government figures that are accepted by the House. Those are the health issues with which we should be primarily concerned when debating the Bill.

The Government White Paper, "The Health of the Nation", recognised the dangers of smoking and devoted a considerable amount of space to that issue. The White Paper states that there are several hundred lung cancer deaths each year in non-smokers as a result of passive smoking. It states that smoking is linked to foetal and neo-natal mortality and low birth weight. It states that smoking contributes to 30 per cent. of all cancer deaths, and 80 per cent. of deaths from lung cancer; smoking accounts for 18 per cent. of coronary heart disease deaths and 11 per cent. of stroke deaths. That is Government information on targets, levels of sickness, illness and deaths contained in their White Paper, "The Health of the Nation". There is a health problem.

"The Health of the Nation" sets Government targets in relation to smoking. Its aims include reducing

[Mr. Illsley]

"the prevalence of cigarette smoking to no more than 20 per cent. by the year 2000"

"consumption of cigarettes by at least 40 per cent. by the year 2000."

The paper also states that, in addition to the overall reduction in prevalence, at least 33 per cent. of women smokers should stop smoking at the start of pregnancy by the year 2000. The targets also include reducing the prevalence of smoking among those aged under 15 by at least 33 per cent. by 1994.

I should be interested to see whether Conservative Members questioned the Secretary of State for Health when the document was released on how many jobs in the tobacco industry would be lost by the year 2000 as a result of achieving those aims. I suggest that people welcomed the targets without mentioning the problems that would be caused to British industry.

Mr. Robert Banks: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will refer to the point that has reasonably been made that British cigarette manufacturers will be at a great disadvantage if they have a larger health warning on their packets. People will assume that those cigarettes are more dangerous than those purchased in packets from abroad which have smaller health warnings. Is it not true that, if a campaign were mounted to ensure the same definition on health warning sizes across the European Union, the House would support it?

Mr. Illsley: The hon. Gentleman makes an interesting point. He was right to say that there is a distinctive difference in the size of the warnings—a fact also mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley. The hon. Gentleman believes that people will automatically assume that some cigarettes are more dangerous than others. That might be so, but he will see that the two packets that I have before me contain the same cigarettes.

My hon. Friend the Member for Worsley mentioned consumer protection. If cigarette packets contained more product information, and if the levels of nicotine, tar and other elements of tobacco were included in the health warning, people might understand that they were buying exactly the same cigarettes, with exactly the same levels of tar and nicotine.

At the same time, I accept that it is an argument that we should consider. I would support consideration of a European-wide increase in the size of the health warning on packets of cigarettes. If the Bill is considered in Committee, we can debate that development at some length and perhaps accommodate the points made in interventions by the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh).

Mr. Leigh: That is fair. Why do not we seek to arrive at a European-wide agreement? Having secured that, we can then introduce appropriate legislation.

Mr. Illsley: The purpose of the Bill is to put the United Kingdom in front of the European Union by increasing the size of our health warning to 25 per cent. of the surface area of the packet. We are seeking to lead the debate in Europe. As my hon. Friend the Member for Worsley has said, the matter is to be considered again by the European Union later this year. Perhaps there can be recommendations for an increase in the size of the label at that stage.

A comparison could be made with animal welfare, on which the Government are supposedly leading the debate in Europe. Why are they not leading the debate in public health matters, such as the labelling of cigarette packets?

Mr. Leigh: Fine. We should lead the debate in Europe. But we lead a debate in Europe in the council chambers of Europe. We do not unilaterally disadvantage our industry first. That is madness.

Mr. Illsley: How are we to lead the debate in Europe unless we can persuade the Government of the day to lead the debate in the council chambers of Europe? If we cannot persuade our Government—they need persuading because they rejected a Bill on tobacco advertising last year, and it is likely that they will not accept the Bill that is before us—how can we lead the debate in Europe? The Government should accept the Bill's Second Reading and allow a full debate in Committee. There are obvious differences on both sides of the House when it comes to the European directive and the Bill's provisions. My hon. Friend the Member for Worsley maintains that the Bill should not disadvantage us in Europe if the Government press for a similar increase in the size of warnings on European products.

In the debate on tobacco advertising that took place last year, it was accepted by my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley that adult smoking rates had fallen. There is, however, a dispute among hon. Members on both sides of the House about the extent to which levels of smoking have fallen. It was accepted in the debate last year that from 1982 to 1992 the prevalence of smoking among adults had fallen from 35 per cent. to 28 per cent. My hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley described that as a "significant improvement". I endorse that comment wholeheartedly.

For 15-year-olds, the story is different. Between 1982 and 1992, the comparable figures are 24 per cent. and 23 per cent. The prevalence of smoking among 15-year-olds has hardly changed, hence the need for increased warnings to address ourselves to the problem of young people smoking, especially girls and young women, who are now the most vulnerable group in terms of smoking.

It has been well documented that by the age of 15 years eight out of 10 adults who become regular smokers have adopted the habit. The age of 15 is not particularly old for children who smoke. The figures tell us that 500 young people a day take up smoking. It is obvious that that figure is far too high.

When it comes to children aged between 11 and 15 years, the target imposed by the Government's White Paper is clearly failing. It was hoped to reduce the prevalence of smoking in that age group to 6 per cent. Sadly, by 1993 it had risen to 10 per cent. The trend is reversing among children aged between 11 and 15 years. We are going the wrong way. Therefore, we must deal with the question of warnings.

The Government targets for young people are not being met, although the trends for adults are encouraging. I must return to "The Health of the Nation" White Paper, which says:

"Predictions of future trends are hard to make and subject to wide error. It cannot be assumed that current trends in the reduction of smoking prevalence will necessarily continue, since the smokers that remain are likely to be the heavier and more dependent ones who find it hard to give up. Considerable effort will therefore be required even to maintain the present trends"— to maintain present trends among adult smokers and reverse the trend among younger smokers. What better measure to try to buck that trend than the Bill?

The White Paper continues, under the heading "Smoking cessation":

"To achieve the objective it will be necessary that new smokers are not recruited to the habit and also that those who already smoke are able to stop."

The provisions of the Bill are exactly what the White Paper refers to—an increase in the size of the health warning to deter people from starting to smoke. The bigger the health warning, the bigger the shock at seeing it. That is obvious. It is an incentive to people not to buy cigarettes or, perhaps, not to use them. We must take the steps outlined in Government—not Opposition—policy to reduce the prevalence of smoking.

On the provisions of the Bill and the arguments surrounding it, as my hon. Friend the Member for Worsley pointed out, it will increase the size of the health warning on a packet of cigarettes to cover 25 per cent. of the pack's surface area. It has been argued that the present level of 6 per cent. is about 50 per cent. higher than the size of warning required by our European partners—that is 6 per cent. of the surface area against 4 per cent.

Australia and Canada have adopted 25 per cent. As far as I am aware, little research is available from those countries, mainly because Australia adopted the 25 per cent. level only in January and Canada adopted it in September 1994 and so it is far too early to judge the impact of those warnings on smoking prevalence.

The Bill also calls for different colours to be used for health warnings on packets and for the lettering to be in black on white with a black border, or the reverse if the lettering is white. In the past, the lettering on the health warning on some packets was the same colour as that on the rest of the pack and was thus disguised, not easily readable and merely part of the rest of the wording.

When the labelling regime was put in place, the Government admitted that they had received representations warning them that the labelling and the health warning were too small. The Health Education Authority said that the effect would be marginal because it was difficult to read the warning, which was easily ignored. It suggested 33 per cent., which is higher than the requirement in the Bill.

The Cancer Research Campaign wanted an increased size in the warning, consistent with Government policy on reducing smoking rates. The International Union Against Cancer said that the figure should be 25 per cent. and the British Medical Association said that warnings would be a deterrent only if they were substantially increased in size.

I have seen examples of the various cigarette packets available in Canada and Australia and my hon. Friend the Member for Worsley circulated a colour photocopy of some of the packs available. Any hon. Members who have seen the photocopies can see instantly the difference in the effectiveness of the larger health warning, compared with that required on British packs.

The warning on the bottom of a packet of cigarettes can be easily hidden if packets are stacked on shelves. As the lettering is the same as on the rest of the packet, it can be easily disguised, so its size needs to be increased. The current warning on Australian and Canadian packets can be seen from a few feet away whereas it is impossible to see the warning on a British packet from that distance. Moreover, the colour contrast of the black and white labelling makes it extremely effective.

The wording should continue to warn of the dangers of smoking. We risk becoming complacent about the current warning. This morning we heard hon. Members say that, as everyone knows about the warning, we do not need to change the area of the packet subject to labelling. It is clear that we need to repeat the warning and, if we have reached the stage where everyone is aware of it but we still have a high prevalence of smoking, perhaps the time has come to jog people's memories and reinforce the message in the White Paper, "The Health of the Nation".

As we continue to learn of the harmful effects of cigarettes, we should continue to reinforce the message about the dangers of smoking. We should reflect the new evidence of those dangers in the warning and make the message direct. We must say that cigarettes are addictive and can harm children, and that smoking while pregnant is likely to harm the unborn child. Perhaps we should also reinforce the message about passive smoking. I shall say no more about that in view of hon. Members' comments following a visit to the House by the late Roy Castle.

It is well known and accepted that young people associate certain images with brands of cigarettes. When I was younger, the John Player Special brand was associated with motor racing, and Marlboro is still associated with McLaren and motor racing. I imagine that that image appeals to young people and we must deal with that if we are to reduce the prevalence of smoking among young people.

The hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) warned that smuggling was affecting jobs in his constituency and that, if we increased the size of health warnings on cigarette packets, more contraband tobacco would enter the country and damage jobs in his constituency. Like my hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley, I come from a mining area and need no lectures on protecting jobs, as my constituency lost as many jobs as anywhere else. We lost those jobs because the country no longer wants coal. There is some dispute about whether we think that the country needs coal, but the Government accept that it no longer wants coal and forced a decision on the coal mining industry which lost hundreds of thousands of jobs through evolution and the increased use of gas turbine technology.

By the same token, as the country becomes more educated about the dangers of smoking, we shall need less tobacco. Sadly for the hon. Member for Ealing, North, jobs will be lost in his constituency. He will not lose overnight the hundreds of thousands of jobs that were lost within a few years in the coal mining industry, but he will lose jobs. He must face the fact that the country wants a reduction in tobacco smoking and that that is the Government's health policy. The hon. Gentleman must come to terms with that.

Some of my hon. Friends and I argued on successive Finance Bills for the assimilation of levels of duty on tobacco and alcohol to try to prevent contraband tobacco entering the country and the high level of smuggling, which affect jobs in this country. It is a supreme irony that coal miners from my constituency have been charged with importing contraband alcohol and cigarettes. It is a pity that the hon. Member for Ealing, North is not in his place because I am sure that he would have appreciated that irony.

The argument that tobacco manufacturers might turn to Europe and that more cigarettes will be imported does not hold sway. As the health warning area in this country is 6 per cent. and in Europe 4 per cent., why has not production switched overseas and imports increased? They remain at 6 million cigarettes, compared with 82 million cigarettes manufactured in this country.

Mr. Robert Banks: Perhaps I can answer that question. There is little difference between a warning area of 4 per cent. and 6 per cent., but a heck of a difference between 6 per cent. and 25 per cent.

Mr. Illsley: The tobacco industry did not think so, because it took the Government to court. It felt that the 50 per cent. difference between 4 per cent. and 6 per cent. to which the Minister referred earlier was significant enough to initiate litigation. The danger of European imports has been overstated. Provision is made in the Bill to deal with such matters. There are differences between both sides of the House on the European directive, but it is worth allowing the Bill to proceed so that they may be argued in detail.

Action on Smoking and Health produced a report for the Health Education Authority in December 1990 on the impact of the first Council directive on tobacco labelling. Unfortunately, it is not specific about the number interviewed in assessing popular views of health warnings. It stated:

"The impact of the new cigarette pack warnings exposed in this research is likely to be marginal whatever the nature of the message, because of their comparatively small size . . . There is a tendency to interpret the smallness of the warnings as evidence of government duplicity. More worryingly"— this point was raised by the hon. Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks)—

"there also seems to be a tendency to equate the size of the warning with the magnitude of the risk."

The message is, increase the size of the warning and the perception of risk will also increase. The report continued:

"To maximise the impact of the new back-of-pack warnings, the optimum strategy would be to increase their size, position them near the top of the pack, rotate them frequently and ensure maximum colour clash with brand livery."

Opponents of the Bill argue that brand identity and trade marks, which tobacco companies spend much time developing, would be affected by larger warnings. The hon. Member for Luton, North, who is not in his place, commented from a sedentary position that packs would have to be redesigned. We saw from the photocopies circulated by my hon. Friend the Member for Worsley and from cigarette packs displayed in the Chamber that pack colours remain the same. Customers identify brand names—they do not go into a tobacconist and say, "I will have those cigarettes in the shiny black and white pack." Packs have already been redesigned to accommodate Canadian and Australian requirements, so the effect on trade marks would not be as bad as some people suggest. A 25 per cent. warning area would not obscure the majority of pack names.

Mr. Alexander: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that cigarettes imported to Canada must have the same size of label, whereas that would not be a requirement under the Bill?

Mr. Illsley: I am. That brings me to the argument on the European directive, as to whether we should enforce the requirements on imported cigarettes. That point was raised several times this morning, and the hon. Gentleman has been present for most of the debate. That is another argument for allowing the Bill to proceed.

It has been said that health warnings would infringe on the right to freedom of expression, but I do not accept that. The country wants to protect its health and that should be the main issue of the debate. It has also been said that the state or the European Union has no business to legislate in this area. The Government have produced a White Paper, have set targets and are pushing on the issue of smoking. Sadly, they are not doing enough in relation to the targets, which are now being reduced. Therefore, that argument does not add up.

It is said that consumers already know about the dangers of smoking. Many of them do, and many know about the health warning which has been with us for 22 years. That means that there should be no problem about increasing its size because, if that argument is valid, people will just say, "Oh, it is just the health warning again." The idea is to reinforce it so as to make it more effective to younger people and to those who want to stop.

It is said that health warnings have no effect on consumer awareness, but I do not think that that is true. Health warnings do have an effect on consumer awareness and a 25 per cent. warning would have an even better effect.

The Government have tried to reduce the consumption of tobacco through duty. There has been a reduction in the prevalence of smoking, but it is interesting to note that in 1985 tax as the share of the price of a packet of cigarettes was 74.6 per cent. In 1994 it was 76.4 per cent. so the Government are not doing much through duty to reduce consumption. The manufacturers may be able to increase prices dramatically, but the Government's share by way of duty is not having the influence that many of us would like to think it has.

Smoking among children is increasing. My hon. Friend the Member for Rother Valley has said that 500 young recruits are needed every day to replace the 300 who die every day. The Bill is a sensible measure which deserves a Second Reading and time in Committee. It deserves to become part of the law of the land and I hope that the House will vote for it.

1.6 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Tom Sackville): I welcome this opportunity to contribute on behalf of the Government to this Second Reading debate on the Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis), whose constituency borders mine. His utterances and his activities are reported in my local newspaper and I can assure the House that he is a model Member of Parliament. He has even been known to put up posters on poster sites at Christmas wishing his constituents a happy Christmas.

Mr. Lewis: No health warning though.

Mr. Sackville: Perhaps they need one. He has been involved in many high-profile campaigns for the public good to do with telephone services. It is no surprise that in a totally unselfish way, he should seek to improve the health of the nation through this Bill.

There is surely common ground in the House on the importance of reducing tobacco consumption, and agreement on the illnesses and premature deaths that it causes. The Government and, I hope, all hon. Members are fully committed to that objective. However, we differ in our approach and in deciding how effectively to achieve a reduction in smoking. Government strategy is based on identifying the factors that are known to affect smoking behaviour and on taking firm, effective action on all fronts.

I stress that that strategy has proved successful. Over the past 20 years, levels of smoking have fallen from 45 per cent. of the population to about 28 per cent. As has been said, that is one of the best records in Europe and is second only to that of the Netherlands.

Ms Tessa Jowell (Dulwich): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Sackville: I should like to carry on with my speech for a little longer.

In considering the Bill, we need to assess whether it would help to deliver the further reduction in smoking to which we are all committed. To reduce the damage caused by tobacco use, about which there is no dispute, the Government set ambitious long-term targets in "The Health of the Nation" White Paper. There are separate strategies for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland. The World Health Organisation has commended our target-based approach as a model for other countries. The targets we have set are ambitious not just because they require quicker progress than would be achieved on the basis of historic trends, but because the minority of people who now smoke are likely to be more dependent on their habit.

It is essential that strategies to meet the targets are based on the factors most likely to achieve actual behavioural change. We are making good progress against three of the four targets. For example, in the four years to June 1994, the actual number of cigarettes consumed fell by 14.5 billion, a reduction of 15 per cent. However, there are sectors in which we are not making progress. We must be frank and say that the behaviour of, in particular, 11 to 15-year-olds is very worrying. That underlines the continuing importance of not only specific initiatives targeting young people but effective measures to reduce smoking among the population as a whole. Parents have a strong influence on children's smoking habits, which is why our entire strategy to reduce smoking is focused on young people.

Ms Jowell: The Minister is stumbling over his Government's apology for their failure to reduce the number of young people smoking, especially young girls. He will be aware that 99 per cent. of smokers are established in the habit by the time they are 20. Therefore, it is important that we adopt any measure that will reduce the rate of recruitment to smoking. Britain has been less successful than almost any other European country, especially France, Spain and Greece, in the rate of reduction in the number of young people who smoke—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): Order. The hon. Lady has made her point.

Mr. Sackville: I must correct the hon. Lady—I did not stumble through any apology; it was simply my usual diffident speaking style. The whole strategy that we have adopted accords with what the hon. Lady has said in that it is focused on young people. We must stop them taking up smoking.

We have developed strategies on a number of fronts. In February 1994 we published the Government's action plan, "Smoke-Free for Health". It provides a clear and comprehensive framework within which national and local organisations can play their part in reducing smoking. I shall describe some of the main areas. One of the most important parts of any effective strategy to reduce smoking must be to ensure progressive increases in the price of tobacco.

Research from all round the world shows that every 10 per cent. increase in the price of tobacco leads to a reduction in consumption of between 3 and 6 per cent. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has given a commitment to increase tobacco duty by at least 3 per cent. a year in real terms. The last two years' Budget changes have increased the price of 20 cigarettes by 37p, an increase of 13.5 per cent. in real terms. That means that the United Kingdom has the second-highest cigarette prices in Europe and the highest prices for hand-rolling tobacco.

We have also been active in trying to persuade other European countries to consider the health benefits of raising taxes on tobacco—not only out of regard for the health of our fellow Europeans, but so that the health impact of UK prices is not undermined by cross-border shipping within a single market. We have continued to ensure that there are effective controls on the advertising and promotion of tobacco products.

On 1 January, the main provisions of a revised, strengthened, voluntary agreement on advertising came into force. That includes the withdrawal of all permanent shop front advertising for all tobacco products by the end of next year, a dramatic cut in permitted spending on cigarette poster advertising to below 30 per cent. of the 1980 level in real terms, and the removal of all mobile advertising and all advertising on bus shelters and other small sites.

When we published the new agreement, we announced a new separate agreement with the industry to ensure that cigarette packets did not contain any pictorial matter likely to appeal especially to children. The hon. Member for Worsley mentioned Camel and advertising that looked as though it might be especially appealing to children. That was withdrawn, and that demonstrates the value of a voluntary agreement.

Other key parts of the strategy include action to ensure that retailers follow the law preventing illegal sales to under-16s, to encourage managers of public places and workplaces to introduce effective policies to protect non-smokers from tobacco smoke, to improve scientific understanding of the risks from tobacco and to reduce harm from tobacco products. We remain convinced of the value of a voluntary agreement.

[Mr. Sackville]

On the issue at the heart of the Bill, it is a central part of the Government's overall strategy to ensure that the public understand the serious health risks of smoking. Wherever possible, the aim should be to discourage people, especially children, from taking up the habit in the first place. We must also ensure that smokers who want to quit receive all the support that they can.

Health warnings on tobacco products form part of a wide range of initiatives. For instance, we are continuing to expand national health education campaigns. In December, the Department of Health announced the biggest-ever national campaign on smoking, investing £13.5 million, which will run for three years and focus particularly on parents. Children with parents who both smoke are at least twice more likely to be regular smokers than children with non-smoking parents.

Education on the health risks of smoking is a statutory requirement in the national curriculum for children between the ages of seven and 16. There are new arrangements to encourage general practitioners to give their patients advice on smoking. Under the voluntary agreement, health warnings appear on all items of advertising. The new agreement increases the size and clarity of warnings on press and poster advertisements. Unlike warnings on packets, those serve as a reminder of the health risks of smoking for people who have not taken up the habit.

It is against the background of those initiatives and of the many other measures to reduce smoking that the hon. Gentleman's Bill needs to be considered. Since the early 1970s, health warnings on packets have helped to provide basic health information to smokers. In 1992, we introduced new health warnings, following the adoption of the European Community directive. UK health warnings are now the largest of any European country. They are 50 per cent. bigger than the minimum required by the directive.

As has been acknowledged, the Government successfully defended an industry challenge in the European Court of Justice to try to reduce the size to the level of other countries. So we can be fairly confident of our bona fides in our commitment to reduce smoking. We probably have the strongest health warnings of any European country, including the warning "Smoking Kills". Little doubt exists that, along with all the other initiatives that I have outlined, those health warnings achieve their objective. Few smokers do not know that smoking damages health.

Mr. Barron: Will the Minister respond to what the former Secretary of State for Health, the right hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), said in July 1991 in a press release about the regulations on labelling that were introduced in 1992? He said:

> "I believe that the new system of labelling will make a real contribution to achieving . . . the targets . . . in 'The Health of the Nation'."

In my speech, I quoted a Tory central office briefing which said that the health warnings on cigarette packets did not make a difference. There is a clear contradiction here. Will the Minister tell me and the House why there was a change in the view of the Department of Health between 1991 and 1995? Can he answer that question?

Mr. Sackville: I cannot be responsible for all the various briefing papers that the hon. Gentleman has read. I can say that the view of the then Secretary of State for Health was that 6 per cent. was the appropriate size of warning. The Bill would require 25 per cent. When the directive was introduced, the majority of the various European Governments and the Commission took the view that 4 per cent. was the appropriate size. This is really a debating point. If the size of warning is such a powerful factor, why not make it 100 per cent? Why not cover all cigarette packets with all sorts of health details? If the hon. Member for Worsley thinks that that is a good idea, why was the Bill not drafted in that way?

Mr. Lewis: Why not sell cigarettes in brown paper packets? I have no problem with that. We tried to make the Bill fair and we have argued on an incremental scale. I share the Minister's ambition to go beyond the targets in "The Health of the Nation". The Bill is an incremental move; it is a serious move which will be commensurate with the risk.

Mr. Sackville: If the Bill is an incremental move, does that mean that the hon. Gentleman will introduce a Bill to provide for a larger size of warning next time? I do not know. The hon. Gentleman talks about fairness. The Government take the view that it is fair to have a 6 per cent. health warning, which is more than our learned colleagues in Europe appear to think. It is a matter of opinion. As I have said, if the larger the better, why stop at 25 per cent? The British Government have decided that 6 per cent. is an appropriate warning.

Mr. Barron: The Government consider that the 6 per cent. warning is appropriate; it was defended in the European Court, a matter on which I congratulate the Government. On the basis of what studies have the Government decided that 6 per cent. is the optimum size of warning on cigarette packets, as opposed to 25 per cent.? Why did the Department of Health take the decision that 6 per cent. should be the limit? It is the biggest size in Europe. On what basis did the Government take the decision that they could not accept the Bill?

Mr. Sackville: We could go round this all day. The 6 per cent. size provides a legible warning that can be seen by anybody who holds a packet. That is what was decided. I am glad to say that the warning is larger than the size decided by Europe.

Mr. Lewis: Will the Minister take on board the point that we are talking not just about the size of the warning? That is only one element. Perhaps the Minister should go to the nearest tobacconist and get a supply of a whole range of cigarette packets. If he does, he will see that the 6 per cent. warning is cleverly disguised against the background of the pack by the media people who work for the industry. One of the essential elements of the Bill is to make the lettering distinctive—black on white with a border or white on black with a border. It is not just a matter of size; it is also a matter of the way in which the warning is portrayed on the packet.

Mr. Sackville: That is the hon. Gentleman's opinion. I have to say that the available research evidence does not justify the claim that a more prominent health warning would encourage a greater number of smokers to quit or discourage more non-smokers from taking up the habit.

Mr. Leigh: Do the Government have any evidence from the Law Officers or from anybody else to suggest that if the Bill were passed, they could prevent imports of cigarette packets bearing health warnings of only 4 to 6 per cent?

Mr. Sackville: The hon. Member for Worsley suggested that it would be possible for the Secretary of State for Health to take powers to impose the requirements in the Bill on all imported cigarettes. The legal advice that I have is that she could not take those powers. It is clear that the directive gives member states some discretion about the size of the warnings on domestically produced packets, but tobacco products imported from other EU countries must be allowed on the market if they conform with the labelling requirements of the directive. That is clear.

Mr. Lewis: I have received contrary advice. In any case, the advice given by Law Officers on other matters hardly offers a good track record. We could take up that matter in Committee.

Mr. Sackville: That is the legal advice I was given, but obviously such things could be changed if the hon. Gentleman wanted to travel to Brussels.

There can be little doubt that the health warnings are appropriate. That is why we have brought in a voluntary regime that allows a great variety of warnings.

Ms Jowell: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Sackville: No. I must carry on because other hon. Members want to speak.

If we are to influence behaviour, that is more likely to be achieved by a combination of factors, such as price and carefully targeted health promotion messages. One of the main themes of our national health education campaign is to get parents to think about the dangers of smoking not just to their own health, but to that of their children. Unfortunately, it takes more than a message on cigarette packs to get that signal across.

Supporters of the Bill have referred to the example of the health warnings carried on cigarette packets in Canada and in Australia. The United Kingdom's record on smoking should be assessed not by looking at narrow differences of approach with other countries but by considering how successful we have been in reducing tobacco consumption. Our record is not just one of the best in Europe, but one of the best in the world. From 1974 to 1990, tobacco consumption among adults fell by 39 per cent. That is a slightly greater reduction than that recorded in either Canada or Australia. It is also worth noting that there has been no real change in the Canadian level of smoking since 1986. Adult prevalence is still about between 31 and 32 per cent., whereas prevalence in the United Kingdom has continued to fall steadily from 33 per cent. in 1986 to 28 per cent. in 1992.

I have made it clear that the Government believe that the detailed regulation proposed in the Bill goes far beyond what is sensibly required regarding helpful information on tobacco products. It has been argued that, should the Bill become law, tobacco manufacturers might seek to substitute imported goods. As things stand, it would be impossible to impose the regulations proposed in the Bill on such imported products.

Although we should not overlook some of the practical and legal considerations against the Bill, the central point is that we already have a comprehensive strategy to ensure that both smokers and non-smokers understand the harm caused by tobacco products. It is unrealistic to believe that the Bill would significantly improve public awareness, let alone affect actual behaviour.

We have an excellent record on reducing smoking, but we are far from complacent. We must make further progress through price, health promotion initiatives and the steady and consistent application of effective and reasonable policies. I therefore regret to advise the House that the Government will not support the Bill, but we will continue to take a series of initiatives to discourage smoking.

Mr. Richard Alexander (Newark): I pay tribute to the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis), who introduced his Bill this morning in a most courteous way. I disagree with his conclusions, but he gave way most generously to many interventions and that was appreciated by Conservative Members.

Three thousand jobs in Nottinghamshire are involved directly in the manufacture of tobacco. They make a significant contribution to the city and to my county. Thirteen thousand other jobs around the country are also involved directly in the manufacture of tobacco.

Quite understandably, the hon. Member for Worsley has taken a break from the Chamber. However, on the Opposition Benches, there is the hon. Member for Dulwich (Ms Jowell), who is waiting to make her speech, and the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron). Where are the Labour Members from Nottinghamshire who should be supporting jobs that are at risk because of the Bill? Where are the Labour Members from Liverpool? They have gone. They take no interest in the matter. The Bill will do severe harm to jobs in their area.

Mr. Barron: How many coal mining jobs have been lost in the Nottinghamshire coalfields since October 1992?

Mr. Alexander: The hon. Gentleman and I are at one on that.

Mr. Barron: Just tell me how many.

Mr. Alexander: We know that many jobs have been lost. However, I said in my intervention in the speech made by the hon. Member for Worsley that two wrongs do not make a right. The fact that thousands of jobs have been lost in the coalfields must mean that Opposition Members should be far more assiduous in ensuring that jobs are not lost unnecessarily as a result of minor and perhaps silly pieces of legislation.

Parliament is today once again having its annual swipe against the tobacco industry. The proposals become dottier and more unrealistic year by year. As everyone knows inside and outside the House, smoking is a perfectly lawful habit. Done in moderation, it does no harm to anyone. It is dangerous only if indulged in too heavily, like many other pastimes and aspects of people's consumption. People do that freely and lawfully during their lives.

Rev. William McCrea (Mid-Ulster): In the light of the hon. Gentleman's comment about smoking being such an innocent pastime, why did the Minister say, "We must stop people taking up smoking"? If it is so innocent, why would the Minister make such a statement?

Mr. Alexander: I am glad to answer that, although I cannot answer for my hon. Friend the Minister. I do not seek to encourage people to take up smoking. That is not my object and it may or may not be the object of the tobacco manufacturers. However, we certainly do not want people who have taken up smoking to do so to excess because tobacco consumption taken to excess can kill.

People of all ages are aware of that fact. We have had tobacco advertisements on packets and on our roadsides for so long that anyone who is not aware of that fact, almost as a fundamental, must be incredibly stupid.

Ms Jowell: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that there is absolutely no medical evidence to suggest that there is a safe level of smoking?

Mr. Alexander: That may well be so, but I shall refer to things taken in moderation in a moment. We are certainly aware that people who smoke moderately do not suffer from tobacco-related diseases. The real problem with tobacco-related diseases relates to heavy consumers. That is why I continue my point that tobacco is a lawful product.

Ms Jowell: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Alexander: I have given way once and I want now to make progress.

I do not smoke cigarettes, like my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Sir G. Gardiner). It is probably 40 years since a cigarette passed my lips—I think that the last time was when I was at college; I did not care for smoking—but I occasionally take the odd small cigar. What I am fed up with—many Conservative Members are fed up with it, too—is the continuous exaggeration of the case against moderate smoking.

All hon. Members have had a briefing from the very eminent Lord Harris of High Cross, who had the—[HON. MEMBERS: "Hear, hear."] It was a significant contribution to the debate, and it would be remiss if it was not heard in the Chamber. He made the point that many other activities that are indulged in by members of the public, such as eating, drinking, horse-riding, skiing and mountaineering, involve a severe risk of injury or death if done to excess or if consumed foolishly. He makes the further point that it is daft for Parliament in particular to resolve everything by trying to give us a risk-free existence. Good for Lord Harris of High Cross. That is a point about which I personally feel strongly.

We hear much about smoking-related illnesses—indeed, rightly so; it is part of what we are debating—but it needs to be borne in mind that the cost of treating those illnesses is more than outweighed by the tax take from tobacco consumers, the majority of whom smoke in moderation.

Mr. Key: Nonsense.

Mr. John Carlisle: Perhaps the figures should be stated, particularly for my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), who says that my hon. Friend is speaking nonsense. About £9 billion a year comes from taxation on tobacco. My hon. Friend will probably know that the latest figure on smoking-related disease and the cost to the national health is less than £1 billion a year. Perhaps my hon. Friend will offer my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury the chance to intervene, because he obviously believes that £9 billion is not needed by the Exchequer.

Mr. Alexander: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. He makes an additional important point.

The arrangements for health warnings, as we know, are a consequence of the implementation of the EC directive on the labelling of tobacco products.

Mr. John Marshall: My hon. Friend refers to the EC. I think that he means the EU directive. We must be up to date; it is the European Union directive. Does he accept that there is something strange about the European Union, in that it spends hundreds of millions of pounds encouraging the production of tobacco by farmers in Greece and other parts of the EU and it then spends a small amount on trying to discourage tobacco consumption? Is not it strange that an organisation that encourages the production of a commodity should discourage the consumption of it? Is not that Alice-in-Wonderland economics? Does not it underline the need for British Commissioners—perhaps Commissioner Kinnock in his tireless campaign—to stop the EU encouraging the production of tobacco?

Mr. Alexander: Quite so. My other hon. Friend makes a valid contribution to this important debate. I apologise for calling it the EC. Perhaps I am old-fashioned enough to call it that for a little while yet, but there we are.

Tobacco manufacturers have always accepted, although reluctantly and fighting their corner, the need to fulfil their obligations in regard to health warnings and the directive. There is a danger that those voluntary arrangements, if pushed too far by the health freaks in this country and the House, could well break down. We must recognise that tobacco manufacturers advertise their product in order to persuade people to use their brand, not another one. Their advertisements are not invitations to take up smoking. If they were, they would be illegal and would be banned. No tobacco advertising tempts me to take up smoking.

Those who ask us to support the Bill say that it would reduce tobacco consumption. I do not see how, of itself, the Bill could do that. Since 1971, there have been health warnings, and young and old in this country are aware of the risk of smoking to excess. There is the Health Education Authority's teenage smoking programme on television, and other advertising messages constantly reinforce that information.

We discussed the issues in last year's debate on the proposal of the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) to ban tobacco advertising. I do not wish to repeat them all, but I shall deal with the subject of children—a matter that has already been stressed in the House. There is a lack of understanding of children's motivation. Earlier, my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) said that young people do things for devilment—for a dare. Placing a bigger warning on a cigarette packet will not cause young people to think again before experimenting with tobacco. Advertising is not directed at children. There are many pressures on children other than advertising to take up cigarette smoking and tobacco. The Advertising Standards Authority would soon stamp on any advertisement that promoted a macho or sexual image.

My main argument against the Bill is that tobacco manufacturers are acting legally. What consumers do with the product is lawful. If the Bill's supporters and the hon. Member for Rother Valley were honest in their objectives, they would introduce a Bill to ban the manufacture and consumption of tobacco. We could have a proper debate on that, instead of debating the nit-picking little Bills that we seem to get every year, particularly from the Opposition.

Mr. Bendall: Does my hon. Friend agree that there has been a slicing over the years? The next Bill on the Order Paper, the Tobacco Smoking (Public Places) Bill, results in further slicing away.

Mr. Alexander: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend.

Most of the cigarette packet now consists of a brand message. If, as a result of the Bill, that brand message is dulled, the information to the consumer about what he or she may choose to buy is also dulled, making it easier for importers to make their brand message known in shops. We return to the issue of brand choice and trade mark protection.

A trade mark is a valuable commercial commodity, which the Bill will damage. Canada has been mentioned in the debate. I intervened in the speech of the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley), but he did not seem to take the point. If one uses Canada as an example, one must be aware of the fact that Canada's advertising warnings have to be carried on imported tobacco as well as on locally produced tobacco. That, perhaps, would be fair. The Bill, however, would not be fair, and that should be stressed.

We would be putting things seriously at risk if we followed the route suggested by the hon. Member for Worsley. As I have said, the tobacco companies have willingly accepted their obligations. They have accepted advertising standards restrictions and they have fulfilled their duties to educate those in the retail sector about their obligations, especially their legislative duties. They are entitled, however, to resist, and to ask hon. Members to resist, further inroads into and restrictions of their legitimate market freedoms. It is foolish to put a fine industry at risk only to pass the trade over to foreign manufacturer competitors. Our manufacturers are not in the business of selling Government health warnings. Instead, they are in the business of making a lawful product.

Mr. Couchman: Does my hon. Friend agree that if British manufacturers felt compelled to move their manufacturing processes to another EU country, the industry would leave these shores for ever and jobs within it, similarly, would never return to these shores? Is not that the point?

Mr. Alexander: My hon. Friend makes an additional and valuable point, which even at this late hour in the debate has not been sufficiently covered. I was talking to a senior member of Imperial Tobacco only the other day. He told me that there was a serious possibility that if the Bill were enacted, his company would consider moving its manufacturing operations abroad.

There is much more at risk than would appear on reading the Bill. If the Bill results in using tobacco manufacturers to sell Government health warnings, it will harm our industry. It will offer no perceptible advantage to the nation's health. It will not change children's habits. I hope that the House will reject it.

1.47 pm

Mr. David Atkinson (Bournemouth, East): I add my congratulations to the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on the choice of his Bill and on the simplicity of it. I have no doubt that he considered many more detailed proposals to discourage people, especially young people, from smoking. Similarly, I have no doubt that most of them would have encouraged strong argument and opposition, not least from the tobacco industry. I would have sympathised with some of the arguments.

I would not have believed until this debate that anyone could have grounds for opposing the Bill, which is designed simply to draw greater attention to the lethality of the product as close as possible to the product itself. I applaud the hon. Member for Worsley on being so single-minded in the aim of his Bill.

Like most of us, I had a constituency interest today. I had accepted an invitation to attend the annual founder's day of the Bournemouth school for girls, which is located in my constituency. It is one of the most successful girls' grammar schools in the country. It has become even more so since it became grant maintained. I explained to the headteacher that I felt that it was in the interests of her pupils and those who followed them that I should be present to support the Bill. I do not have any evidence that any pupil at the school would dream of going behind the bicycle shed for a quick one—[Laughter.]—with or without the encouragement of boys from Bournemouth school for boys, which is located nearby. Perhaps I should ask my son, who goes there. On second thoughts, perhaps I should not.

The fact is that teenagers are still smoking in the same numbers as they were 10 years ago, as we have heard in the many references from impeccable sources today, including my hon. Friend the Minister, despite increased health education, as well as ever higher taxation of tobacco products. What is even more important, from the point of view of girls at the Bournemouth school for girls, teenage girls are more likely to be smokers than boys of the same age.

According to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' research on smoking among secondary school pupils in England, 11 per cent. of 11 to 15-year-old girls are regular smokers compared with 8 per cent. of boys of the same age. If only those girls knew or thought about the fact that lung cancer is overtaking breast cancer as the leading cancer killer for women, that women who smoke and use the contraceptive pill have 10 times the risk of heart disease and stroke, and that babies born to mothers who smoke have a lower birth weight, by about half a pound, and a higher risk of death and disease in early childhood.

Many of us in this Chamber will have relatives and friends and certainly some colleagues in this place who died agonising and premature deaths because of lung cancer and other smoking-induced diseases.

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): I am in sympathy with my hon. Friend in that I support the Bill, at least in principle, although I envisage some practical difficulties. Does he agree that there are probably more effective ways to stop teenage smokers, especially the young girls he mentioned, starting to smoke than health warnings on cigarette packets, which might include the rigorous control of the supply and availability of cigarettes for that age group?

Mr. Atkinson: I agree and thank my hon. Friend for that positive contribution. No doubt there are more effective ways, which the House could pursue, to discourage young people in particular from taking up smoking. We have one such opportunity today, upon which we will be obliged to make a judgment shortly, and it deserves the fullest possible support from the House.

I was saying that we all have many friends, relatives and colleagues who unfortunately died because of smoking. My children will never forget the agony of a grandmother who died in that way. As the hon. Member for Worsley pointed out, she was of a generation that was denied the warnings on tobacco products that the Bill would only enhance. The first suspicions about tobacco's role in the cause of various diseases were not confirmed until the 1950s, with all the doubts dispelled in a report to the Royal College of Physicians in 1962 and another to the US Surgeon General in 1964.

Today, there can be no excuse for not appreciating that smoking kills and that it is a very painful way to die. The Bill will get that message across more clearly than ever before. That must be of interest to the tobacco companies that my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle) represents and I see that he wants to intervene on their behalf. I will let him.

Mr. John Carlisle: My hon. Friend must say what evidence, if any, he has to suggest that a larger label—to give the warnings that he rightly outlined—will prevent more deaths. Is he questioning the intelligence of the British people and their decision whether to smoke? Is he telling the House that there would be fewer deaths if a larger warning appeared on the packet? If he is saying so, please will he give us the evidence?

Mr. Atkinson: Although I am fond of my hon. Friend, common sense suggests that it is self-evident that the clearer the warning, the more effective the message.

Mr. Carlisle: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Atkinson: No, I have just responded to my hon. Friend's point, although I know that he does not accept my response. It is in the interests of tobacco companies—I understand that my hon. Friend has some interest in such companies—

Mr. Key: My hon. Friend has not declared an interest.

Mr. Atkinson: He may have an opportunity to do so later in the debate. Tobacco companies will come under increasing pressure of being sued by their customers, with the help of legal aid, for failing to put clear warnings on their products that smoking kills.

I should have liked to ask the hon. Member for Worsley what thought he has given not just to the size of the warning on cigarette packets but to the content of the message. Only recently have coroners been allowed to state that smoking was the cause of death. That must result in including new, more persuasive information in the clearer message that the hon. Gentleman seeks to promote.

I welcome the Bill and, despite what my hon. Friend the Minister said, I believe that it complements existing measures introduced by the Government, including ever higher taxation, to discourage smoking. I thought and hoped that it would avoid opening up arguments with the vested interests, but the reaction of several of my hon. Friends has dissuaded me from that. The Bill merely seeks to invoke the simple message that, like lead, asbestos and drugs, tobacco is lethal and that smoking is the largest preventable cause of death, especially among young people. I wish the Bill every success.

1.56 pm

Mr. James Couchman (Gillingham): I shall be brief, as an awful lot has already been said from both sides of the argument. I suspect that, in these days of transparency, one should always declare any interest that one has. Mine is that I recently enjoyed hospitality from the tobacco industry, during which time I was briefed. Between enjoying watching England thrash France on the rugger field, I received the main, all-important message, which is that the Bill is not about dissuading people from smoking.

Mr. Barron: It's not cricket.

Mr. Couchman: The hon. Gentleman is quite right; nor was it rugby league.

There should be no doubt that we all wish to reduce smoking among children and young people—and among adults. I have not smoked for 17 years. I say that because it seems to be a roll of honour in this debate to declare whether one smokes. My wife had a serious brush with cancer in 1990 and freely admits that it was probably due to the fact that she smoked until that time. So I am no friend of the tobacco industry nor a lover of tobacco or smoking. Indeed, I find the habit foul and revolting. However, the Bill's serious impact on employment should be considered. I tried to make the point in an intervention in the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) that, once jobs are lost, they will not return. I shall return to that point in a moment.

There has been much contention during this debate about whether smoking among young people has increased or decreased over certain periods.

Mr. Bendall: Much of this morning's debate has been about smoking by young people. We all know that it is illegal for tobacconists to sell cigarettes to young people and I sometimes wonder how young people manage to get tobacco. Do tobacconists sell to them illegally? It has always been illegal to sell cigarettes or tobacco to young people. Are not parents responsible for warning young people under the age of 16 that tobacco is harmful?

Mr. Couchman: I am sure that my hon. Friend is right. The number of parents who now smoke has dropped dramatically. In 1972, 52 per cent. of men smoked but in 1992, only 29 per cent. did so. In 1972, 41 per cent. of women smoked but by 1992, the figure was 28 per cent. Parents have clearly accepted the message. Young people are well aware of the dangers of smoking and it is for them to decide, in maturity, whether they wish to continue smoking. I have two children who have never smoked, to their eternal credit.

The House agrees that since 1984, smoking among young people declined but that from 1988 there appears to have been a slight upturn. In an intervention, I suggested that smoking among young people may have increased recently as a form of rebellion against the heavy anti-smoking campaigns of the past six or seven years. It is in the nature of young people that they will often try something that they have been told is bad for them.

Mr. Bill Walker (Tayside, North): People of my generation were given free cigarettes while serving for His Majesty in certain parts of the world. It was inevitable that most of my compatriots smoked, but I never did.

Mr. Couchman: I admire the strong will that my hon. Friend showed in those days.

Mr. John Marshall: This morning, we may have heard a most unusual confession—that a Scotsman was offered something for nothing and turned it down.

Mr. Walker: I would not want anyone to think that I did not turn that situation to some advantage. We also received air crew sweet rations, which were a good swap for cigarettes.

Mr. Couchman: That was a splendid further intervention from my hon. Friend. My constituency contained the former Royal Naval base at Chatham, many of whose sailors would have enjoyed free cigarettes. They were those dreadful RN brand that one had to keep in the horizontal rather than the vertical, otherwise all the tobacco fell out.

Mr. John Carlisle: Such anecdotes, which are relevant to the Bill—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If they had not been relevant, I would have called the hon. Members to order.

Mr. Carlisle: If I may be allowed to expound, Mr. Deputy Speaker, perhaps then you can make a judgment. I am glad that the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) has arrived in the Chamber. It is said that she used to smoke—I know not whether she does now—because in her fine acting career, she was offered cigarettes as part of her job. I do not know whether she refused, but the serious point is that when smoking is part of a person's job or cigarettes are offered by Her Majesty's services, it is difficult to stop smoking. All credit to those people, probably including the hon. Lady, who give up smoking at the end of the day.

Ms Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): I have by no means given up smoking, but my interest in the Bill stems from my awareness of the addictive nature of smoking. I would not want any young person to follow the trail that I am still on.

Mr. Couchman: Clearly the hon. Lady is less strong-willed than my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker).

The Bill would require packets containing tobacco products to carry health warnings of much greater size than required by the EU directive, which was introduced, agreed and implemented by all member states as a single market measure. Its function was to harmonise and to remove impediments to the operation of the internal market. That is confirmed in the directive's preamble, which states that it is necessary to approximate the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of member states concerning tobacco product labelling; eliminate possible barriers to trade; and prevent impediments to the establishment and operation of the single internal market.

I take a rather different view of the single internal market from that of my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Sir G. Gardiner), which he explained in his long and interesting speech. The common rules in the directive take due account of public health protection. The directive states that its beneficial effect would be increased if it were coupled with health education programmes in schools and with information and public awareness campaigns. Who could disagree with that?

The Minister said that we continue to make considerable efforts to dissuade young people from taking up the smoking habit. We shall continue to do so, and that is to be applauded. It is part of "The Health of the Nation" initiative and I am sure that we all applaud the efforts by the Department of Health in that matter.

The requirement is for packets to carry warnings of at least 4 per cent. of the surface area or 6 per cent. if there are two languages in the member state. Three languages require 8 per cent. of the surface area of the packet to be taken up by a health warning. Only in Belgium, which has three languages, is there a necessity for 8 per cent. All member states have chosen to comply only with the directive's minimum requirement, which is 4 per cent. of the back and the front in states with a single language such as ours. In Britain, the Government chose to exceed that requirement by 50 per cent., and 6 per cent. of the area is covered by the warning.

I looked at a packet of cigarettes this morning—the first time for many years that I have done that—and I noted that the warning is quite clear and is couched in stark terms. It states: "Smoking causes cancer". That could not be plainer. Anyone who has ever had a packet of cigarettes and proposes to smoke will have read that warning and will choose whether to ignore it.

The regulations that give effect to the 6 per cent. warning are made under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 and impose rigorous requirements. As a result, the clarity and impact of health warnings in the United Kingdom are greater than they are anywhere else in the EU. The European Commission is reviewing national compliance with the directive and I understand that it is unlikely to be satisfied on full compliance by a number of member states. However, let there be no doubt that the United Kingdom is implementing the terms of the directive in full.

While I am on the subject of the directive's terms, I should like to highlight the provisions of article 8, which are of great relevance and have been mentioned in the debate. The article states that member states cannot for labelling reasons prohibit or restrict the sale of tobacco products which comply with the terms of the directive. Member states may, as provided for by the treaty of Rome, set down requirements for the import, sale and consumption of tobacco products which the member state deems necessary to protect the public health, but such requirements must not imply any changes to the labelling regime established by the directive. That means that, provided imported tobacco products meet the requirements of the labelling directive, their import into, and sale in, a member state cannot be prohibited.

If the Bill became law, it would require cigarettes manufactured in the United Kingdom for sale here to carry health warnings covering 25 per cent. or more of the front and back of the packet. However, under the terms of the directive the United Kingdom would be unable to prohibit the import and sale of cigarettes carrying health warnings which complied with legislation enforced in the member state in which they originated. The Minister confirmed that.

The Bill rather grudgingly accepts that because clause 1(5) states that the regulations may provide for an exemption from the Bill's provisions for products imported into the UK from other member states. There is no choice whatever. Like it or not, the Bill must recognise that imported products would be able to carry much smaller warnings complying with legislative requirements elsewhere and would be beyond the terms of any UK legislation.

That cold fact alone makes a mockery of the claim that the Bill would help to reduce the problem of smuggled tobacco. It is almost certain that the Bill would in fact increase dramatically the amount of cigarettes that come into this country from other member states, which would tend to camouflage rather than highlight smuggled packets of cigarettes—those that are part of the enormous bootlegging trade.

It is interesting that Customs and Excise, in its recent appropriation accounts which were revealed to the Public Accounts Committee the other day, makes it clear that there appears to be a shortfall of about £100 million—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It appearing that fewer than 100 Members voted in the majority in support of the motion, the Question is not decided in the affirmative.

Debate resumed.

2.20 pm

Mr. Couchman: Before we were rudely interrupted, I was saying that it would become impossible to determine which cigarettes were being imported legally and which were being smuggled in to be sold on the bootleg market. I was mentioning the fact that Customs and Excise has recently revealed that a revenue shortfall of approximately £100 million between 1992-93 and 1993-94 has become evident. The Treasury must be worried that it will hit a point of diminishing returns on its substantial revenue from tobacco. That is extremely worrying. Although the decline in revenue may suggest to some people that the smoking habit is declining, it is much more the case that a substantial proportion of cigarettes is being imported, legally or illegally.

Mr. John Carlisle: Part of the sadness of this morning's debate is that no one has said what a substantial contribution taxpayers make to the Revenue, albeit that they are using a product that may be harmful to their health. We have not yet heard—we may in the limited time now available—about the proportionately small amount that has to be spent on treating the smoking-related diseases of those who fall foul of the habit. Perhaps my hon. Friend can enlarge on that point.

Mr. Couchman: My hon. Friend is right. While he was taking a well-earned break, we heard that the ratio of revenue to the Treasury against revenue from the Treasury to treat smoking-related diseases is about 9:1.

Mr. Key: My vow of silence is over now that we have had the vote. I taught economics for 16 years and I am familiar with the maxim that there are lies, damned lies and statistics. I have been unable to find any evidence about the balance between tax revenue and expenditure on the health service. I am interested to hear my hon. Friend's figures. He has defied the economists of the past decade.

Mr. Couchman: I apologise to my hon. Friend because I may be falling into the trap of taking an hon. Friend's figures as correct. The revenue to the Treasury is undeniable. The figures are available in volume XII of the 1993-94 appropriation accounts at paragraphs 24 to 30. My hon. Friend may care to look them up. They were the subject of a recent interrogation of the head of Customs and Excise by the Public Accounts Committee.

My hon. Friend the Member for Newark spoke about United Kingdom manufacturing; he has a particular constituency interest in that. I made the point that manufacturers might decide to take their production to another member state. That is a sinister possibility. To the extent that the consumers' choice of brand or product might be affected by the Bill, so imports would be advantaged and the United Kingdom industry would be damaged. All that would happen for no good reason according to those of us who want tobacco products to become a fast-declining purchase, as it is already.

Mr. Key: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Couchman: I should just like to finish this section of my speech.

Mr. Carlisle: Give way.

Mr. Key: I am grateful to my hon. Friends. My hon. Friends have fallen into the trap of the argument about the export of jobs. I believe that the employment argument is the weakest of all the arguments deployed in the debate. I would take the tobacco lobby more seriously if it came clean and admitted to people that tobacco accounts for a small part of most of its business empires and conglomerates. Gallaher, for example, has 150 subsidiaries ranging from videos to whisky. B.A.T Industries has an interest in everything from insurance down to jewellery.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is becoming a speech rather than an intervention.

Mr. Couchman: I am tempted to join my hon. Friend in comparing the figures.

I received the annual report of Hanson plc, which reveals that sales by Imperial Tobacco, a Hanson subsidiary, were worth £3.25 billion last year. Imperial Tobacco is obviously an important part of Hanson's business. It manufactures cigarettes in Nottinghamshire, in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Newark.

If my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) wants another reason why we should be cautious about the exportation of British jobs and British manufacturing, he should note that the British tobacco industry gives us a positive trade balance of £500 million. Nowadays, we have to worry about all our exports and trade, so we should not be willing to throw away that money. Not only would we throw away a positive trade surplus, but we would be likely to incur a substantial deficit in terms of imported tobacco products, which would flood in as a result of the loss of cigarette manufacturing from this country. I do not want to overdo that point, but I am conscious of the passionate contribution from my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), who is worried about his constituents' jobs. We should not dismiss that concern lightly.

Mr. Carlisle: My hon. Friend should overdo that point, because our hon. Friends who have seen fit to reject the Bill have the jobs of our constituents and those of other relevant Members at heart. One of the most distressing factors of the debate has been the way in which its supporters, especially Opposition Members, have totally dismissed the Bill's likely effect on jobs. That is a disgrace.

Mr. Couchman: The supporters' arguments—

Mr. Harry Greenway: Opposition Members advocated that my constituents should lose their jobs. If any hon. Member is not passionate in defence of the jobs of his constituents, he is not much of a Member.

Mr. Couchman: My hon. Friend is right.

The problem of smuggling has been taken up on more than one occasion with Customs and Excise.

Mr. Illsley: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Couchman: I must continue, because I have been almost as generous in giving way as the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) was when he began his speech at 9.30 am, which seems an awfully long time ago.

The only way to deal effectively with smuggled tobacco is to harmonise tax levels within the European Community. I hope that it is clear to the House that the Government's policy on combating tobacco consumption is working well. I hope that it is also clear that the labelling directive is a single market measure to prevent the distortion of trade and I hope that the House recognises that, of all European Union member states, no one has implemented the terms of the directive more strictly and effectively than the United Kingdom.

I also want to draw the attention of the House to the graphic illustration of how important the directive is as a single market harmonisation measure. We heard earlier that three new nations have just come into the European Union—Finland, Austria and Sweden. I am entirely in favour of that development. I wish to see the European Union broadened and access to the treaty—

Ordered,

That the provisions of paragraph (2) of Standing Order No. 84 (Constitution of standing committees), paragraph (1) of Standing Order No. 86 (Nomination of standing committees) and Standing Order No. 101 (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments, &c.) shall apply to the draft Undertaking by the Secretary of State for Scotland with the consent of Her Majesty's Treasury and of Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd. as if it were a draft statutory instrument; and that the said draft Undertaking be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.—[Mr. Burns.]

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE (PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS)

Ordered,

That, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (4) of the Sessional Order [19th December] relating to Sittings of the House (Private Members' Business), on the last Wednesday before any adjournment of the House for more than four days, the subject for debate on the motion for the adjournment between Ten o'clock and One o'clock shall be 'matters to be considered before the forthcoming adjournment'.—[Mr. Burns.]

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Burns.]

2.32 pm

Mr. Robert Ainsworth (Coventry, North-East) rose—

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Can it possibly be right for Opposition Members, and in particular the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham), to object to the Second Reading of my Bill which is designed to bring safety and—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): Order. The hon. Lady knows that that is not a point of order for the Chair.

Mr. Ainsworth: I welcome the opportunity to raise this issue in the House. I want to explore with the Minister policies to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and to review at some length programmes that are supposed to deliver those reductions. I want to elicit clear answers from the Minister about his current targets and his exact up-to-date plans to put his programmes back on track. I want to raise some of the social consequences of the Government's method of implementing their programme and to question their sincerity and real priorities.

I shall first deal with some facts. The Government signed the Rio convention and committed themselves to reducing CO_2 emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000. They accepted the need to address that important environmental issue, but there are criticisms of the Government's record on reducing CO_2 to which I shall refer.

The targets that the Government have set for themselves are very modest. The 6 per cent. cut in emissions compares very poorly with other European countries, some of which have pledged cuts of up to 20 per cent. The President of the Board of Trade, when he was Secretary of State for the Environment, said that he believed that 20 per cent. cuts could easily be achieved. The targets were not ambitious.

My final complaint on targets is that there are still no long-term targets. In his previous life as Chairman of the Environment Select Committee, the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones), wrote a report a principal recommendation of which was that

"by the end of 1995 a rolling programme of targets should be developed and strategies outlined for achieving longer term goals for the years up to 2010."

I was disappointed that the hon. Gentleman will not reply today, as he obviously has much sympathy with my point of view. Perhaps that is why he has been kept away. However, as he is in the Department, I hope that he can persuade the Government and his hon. Friend the Minister, the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Sir P. Beresford), to act on that recommendation. I hope that the Minister will tell us if and when that will happen.

On policy and policy failures, "Climate Change: the UK Programme" said:

"the centrepiece of the programme is the set of measures designed to limit emissions of CO_2."

The centrepiece of the centrepiece, therefore, was the Energy Saving Trust. It was set up in 1992, with the task of delivering 25 per cent. of the Rio target. Lord Moore was put in charge of it and sent away to devise a plan. He came back claiming that, to achieve its target, the trust would need £1.5 billion to spend by 2000. That money was to be supplied predominantly by the electricity and gas industries in equal parts. When Lord Moore was reminded by the then Chairman of the Environment Select Committee that the electricity companies anticipated putting in only £100 million, he said:

"My job is to try to be objective on this. I am saying that . . . to achieve the 2.5 million tons of carbon emission reductions, that [£1.5 billion] is what I believe we will need."

He continued that, if the view of the regulators was that the money would not be forthcoming, he would fail to reach the target that had been set.

Let us remember that we are not talking about a loony green-fringe activist. Lord Moore is an ex-Tory Minister, and he should not be the type to cause too much trouble.

On Lord Moore's prediction, we will not reach the target set. After a number of run-ins with the electricity and gas regulators, the Energy Saving Trust is woefully underfunded. Recent questions suggest that, if current funding is sustained until 2000, the total spend will be £158 million, a mere 10 per cent. of Lord Moore's requirements. Lord Moore, when he met the Environment Select Committee on Wednesday, confirmed that because of that he will achieve only 10 per cent. of his target savings.

On Thursday 9 February, Clare Spottiswoode's rejection of the vast majority of the Energy Saving Trust's latest proposals confirmed the continuing funding crisis. That came, by the way, after a delay of seven months in assessing the proposals, which has led to a formal complaint being lodged with the citizens charter unit by Andrew Warren of the Association for the Conservation of Energy. However, the Government appear to be totally incapable of preventing that unelected appointee from continuing to frustrate their policy, and unable to do anything about the social problems that arise from the decisions that she takes.

Spottiswoode has rejected every single proposal from the Energy Saving Trust aimed at helping poorer households with their fuel bills. That is an indication of the ideology that steers the Government and the individuals whom they appoint to their quangos.

The second major policy aimed at reducing emissions was VAT on fuel. The effectiveness of the measure was always questioned, with many analysts believing that low price elasticities would mean that rising costs would have only a small effect on consumption. Green groups said that the tax would work only if the barriers to energy efficiency were brought down. European research suggests that energy prices would have to be trebled to have a lasting effect on fuel use.

The Association for the Conservation of Energy claimed that a 10 per cent. rise in prices would lead to just a 1 per cent. drop in energy use. However, the Government claimed that they would deliver 15 per cent. of their targets. For the sake of argument, let us accept that figure. I simply want to know how the Government intend to fill the gap that has been left since they were prevented from introducing the second tranche of VAT on fuel. They were prevented from doing so because they showed no concern for the consequences that it would bring for ordinary people. People saw through the Government and realised that they were hiding their tax-raising priorities beneath a green veneer. The Association for the Conservation of Energy calculates that the lower VAT rate will produce savings of 0.6 million tonnes of carbon against a target of 1.5 million tonnes—close to my simple calculation that half the tax hike will deliver half the savings.

Other policies, including the policy to encourage combined heat and power generators, are not delivering planned savings. In 1990, there was 2,000 MW of capacity of combined heat and power. To reach the target of 5,000 MW, new CHP schemes must be built at a rate of 300 MW a year—but only half that rate has been achieved over the past five years. I suspect that the 1 million tonne savings target will not be reached. Matters are getting worse. Last year, only 94 MW were built—a mere one third of what is needed.

Between 1990 and 1993, we achieved 221 MW of new renewable capacity—an increase of 74 MW a year. At that rate, we shall achieve only half the target of 1,500 MW of new renewable capacity by the year 2000. That casts doubt on the 0.5 million tonnes of carbon saving that the Government said that they intended to deliver in that way.

Improved building regulations are to be introduced too late. The aim was for new building regulations to be published in early 1994 and introduced later that year. Those measures are now to be introduced in July 1995—a year late—but the Government have not altered their estimate of the CO_2 savings that were supposed to flow. Logically, the savings will be 20 per cent. under the 0.25 million tonne target that they announced, as houses built before the regulations are introduced will not conform to them.

To do their bit for the environment, Government Departments were to cut their energy use by 15 per cent. over the five years up to 1995-96, but some Departments are still not producing figures and the figures that are produced show that overall progress towards those targets is being made at only half the rate necessary to achieve them.

Health authorities were set targets for energy savings of 15 per cent. over the five years to 1995-96. With just one year to go, they have managed only 7.9 per cent. It was also announced that longer-term targets were to be set, but that has not happened. That part of the programme was due to provide 1 million tonnes of carbon savings, but it appears that only half that amount will be achieved.

The policy on domestic appliance standards appears to have been almost completely abandoned. In their original plans, the Government expressed support for EC standards to raise the efficiency of domestic appliances by 40 per cent. by the year 2000—to save 0.5 million tonnes of carbon emissions. They are now relying on joint voluntary initiatives in some sectors. They talk about continuing assessment of energy labelling and other policies, but make no reference to setting targets, and that represents a considerable retreat from policy. We can only assume that the target will not be met.

Research from the United States research agency, D.R.I. McGraw Hill, shows that the targets will be missed and UK CO_2 emissions will increase over the period by 4.1 per cent. Despite all that, I have little doubt that the Minister will say that he is still confident that CO_2 emissions in the year 2000 will be the same as those in 1990, as promised at Rio. That seems surprising, given that Government policies now lie in tatters. He must be keeping something from us if he can be so confident. It is rumoured that the secret is that the Department has calculated that none of these programmes is necessary as emissions will stay constant without any effort from the Minister.

The Government have reached that conclusion for two reasons. First, they have changed their estimate of the proportion of electricity generated using gas and nuclear power, which lowers their prediction of CO_2 emissions for the year 2000 without needing to reduce the total amount of electricity used. Energy paper 59—this was after consultation with the national grid—stated that 12 GW of gas-fired capacity was predicted for the year 2000. Energy paper 65 will predict, it appears, that 18 GW of gas-fired capacity will be reached. To reach that figure, 6.9 GW of capacity—it is only just past the first planning stage—has been included. Much of that will probably never be built, and still less is likely to be part of the national grid base load.

Similarly, it appears that problems with the nuclear generating capacity are being ignored. Dungeness and Heysham 1 have both been closed down since the end of last year and could be offstream for a long time yet. These two huge reactors represent about 30 per cent. of Britain's nuclear capacity. Yet Government figures rely on all this capacity being up and running in the year 2000. This great reliance on some broken-down reactors and a load of rather old Magnox stations staggering on into the next century is certainly cause for concern.

Secondly, it has been rumoured that the assumption of medium growth, which was used in deciding a target of 10 million tonnes, is to be altered to a low-growth assumption, meaning that CO_2 emissions will not rise as high as first thought.

It is refreshing that the Government are being slightly more candid about the lack of success with their economic policies, but having to lower a target which would have reduced CO_2 output by 6 per cent. shows a serious lack of commitment to the environment. Surely the Minister should be continuing to pursue policies aimed at reducing emissions by at least 6 per cent., which the programmes were supposed to deliver, and treating any additional savings from continuing slow growth as an environmental bonus. After all, he is not relying on better weather than usual in the year 2000. He should not rely on fickle energy markets and poor economic performance. We should remember that many experts always considered that the 10 million tonne target was very conservative. Halving the target would make it laughable.

I shall make three allegations. I hope that the Minister will respond to them by telling us what his future plans now are. First, the programmes for the environment targets have never been allowed to affect the Government's policy of privatisation. The privatisation of the gas and electricity industries has systematically taken priority over the environment. The sale of the generating companies and grids and the introduction of competition into the gas market continue to worsen the shambles. The Government are more concerned to sell energy producers than to conserve energy.

Secondly, the Government's ideology has led them to attempt to meet their targets without offering any assistance to people on low incomes. They have not invested money sensibly in energy conservation. They have done the reverse in trying to bolster their own revenues by dressing up their taxes in green clothes. That is what led to the value added tax fiasco.

Thirdly, the Government have been happy to set targets without the means of achieving them. They have sought to kick the political football up the field to a time, as it were, when they feel that they will not be in office and, therefore, not responsible to answer for their failures.

Having made three allegations as a humble seeker of the truth, I shall pose some questions. How does the Minister intend to break the funding deadlock of the EST? Will he introduce legislation? Will he use gas legislation to force the regulator to fund environmental projects? Will he act on the recommendations of his colleague in the Department, the Under-Secretary of State, and issue regular bulletins setting out the performance of individual programmes and setting rolling targets for CO_2 emissions beyond the year 2000? If so, when will that happen? Can he confirm that the Government continue to be dedicated to reducing CO_2 emissions by 10 million tonnes by promoting energy efficiency? What does he intend to do to make up the shortfall—I estimate that it will be about 40 per cent.—caused by the failure of his present programmes?

Finally, and most interestingly, how can Ministers continue to be so brazenly confident about achieving 1990 levels of CO_2 by the year 2000, as they sit surrounded by their failed policies? What is the secret?

2.49 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Sir Paul Beresford): Some people manage to read out Christmas carols and make them sound like a funereal dirge. To use a similar analogy of a football, I am afraid that when the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth) kicked it, it went flat. The reality is that the Government are firmly committed to meeting the challenge of sustainable development. I shall try to answer as many of his questions as possible, but I will have to write to him on any that I fail to answer and I am sure that he will understand as the minutes available have been eaten into severely.

We are committed to meeting the challenge of sustainable development, including the threat of global climate change. A great deal of progress has been made since the publication last January of the sustainable development strategy, the climate change programme and other associated documents.

The United Kingdom has played a leading role in the international negotiations, under the United Nations climate change convention. While the scientific evidence of human-induced global warming is not yet conclusive, it is clearly right for us to take precautions now to safeguard our future.

The challenge is global, but the onus must initially be on those countries that have the scientific and industrial base to take effective action, which includes us. We must make changes and demonstrate what can be done, so that others in developing countries can follow. That is why the United Kingdom has been at the forefront of international action under the United Nations climate change convention.

The convention's ultimate objective is to achieve stabilisation of greenhouse gas concentrations at levels that would prevent dangerous human interference with the climate system. As a first step, the convention commits developed countries to take measures aimed at returning emissions of CO_2 and other greenhouse gases to their 1990 levels by the year 2000.

We were the first country to present our national programme under the convention and the first to publish a detailed programme demonstrating how we were aiming to meet those commitments, and we are fully committed to fulfilling our obligations under that convention.

The United Kingdom climate change programme was published in January 1994. The centrepiece is the set of measures to limit CO_2 emissions. It was based on the Government's energy projections, published in 1992, which suggested that—on the basis of a central scenario without any new measures—CO_2 emissions would be about 10 million tonnes of carbon above the 1990 level by the year 2000.

The CO_2 programme is based on a partnership approach, and was drawn up following extensive consultation, which included representatives of all sectors of the economy. The programme was developed on the basis of that detailed discussion and debate of the most cost-effective options. During the consultation process, many organisations expressed a willingness to play their part by taking action to improve their own energy efficiency and helping others to do so—a genuine partnership approach.

The CO_2 programme contains a balanced package of measures covering all sectors of the economy. We want to achieve energy savings as cost-effectively as possible. Our priority is to exploit the potential that exists for improving energy efficiency. That can bring social and environmental benefits, as well as reducing CO_2. The programme is aimed, therefore, at ensuring that both individuals and organisations exploit the considerable scope for taking action that is cost-effective in its own right.

We are encouraging action through the climate change programme. The Government have provided the framework for change, but it is the decision makers in households and businesses, including the energy suppliers, who will take the action that will lead to lower emissions. Thus, a key element in the programme, the dissemination of advice and information on action that we can all take to achieve savings, is vital.

The domestic energy campaign, "Helping the Earth Begins at Home", which we have run for the past few years, has successfully increased awareness of global warming. We have now introduced a new phase, called "Wasting Energy Costs the Earth", which will encourage domestic consumers to turn that awareness into cost-effective action in their homes.

We seek the maximum co-operation from the private sector in the campaign, and it was recently launched with an initial promotion on low-energy light bulbs. That was very successful and met its target of increasing sales of those light bulbs by a million units, which alone is expected to save 98,000 tonnes of CO_2.

[Sir Paul Beresford]

Implementation of the programme is still in its early stages but there is already evidence of the success of a number of the measures that it contains.

First, the "Making a Corporate Commitment" campaign encourages top management in organisations in the private and public sectors to make a commitment to energy efficiency. Some 1,800 organisations have signed up, and a recent survey showed that their energy management performance is significantly better than that for businesses generally. The campaign is succeeding by changing board-level attitudes.

Secondly, as part of our programme to stimulate the development of new and renewable energy technologies, the third renewable non-fossil fuel obligation order was announced last December. It is expected to double the capacity of electricity from renewable sources already operational under the first two rounds. It keeps the Government on course as we work towards 1,500 MW of new and renewable generating capacity in the United Kingdom by the year 2000.

Thirdly, new building regulations to come into effect in July are expected to improve the energy performance of space and water heating in new homes by 25 to 35 per cent. compared with current standards. We expect similar improvements in the non-domestic sector.

Fourthly, as part of the long-term strategy of increasing fuel duties in the transport sector by at least 5 per cent. a year above the rate of inflation, duties were increased recently by 8.6 per cent. in real terms. That also provides an incentive to improve the fuel efficiency of vehicles and of driving patterns.

There are additional measures which, although primarily aimed at achieving other benefits, have been effective in contributing to reductions in CO_2 emissions. For example, the home energy efficiency scheme has already provided grants and free advice to improve the energy efficiency of a million homes since it began in its present form three years ago. The budget for the scheme in the current financial year has been increased by a further £8.6 million, bringing the total available for grant to £77 million. In each of the next three years, the sum available for grants will be increased again to around £100 million—enabling about 600,000 homes a year to be insulated. Those improvements to the housing stock are long lasting and will benefit future occupiers of the homes and contribute to long-term CO_2 reductions.

The hon. Gentleman touched on one or two other points, which I shall try to pick up as I go along. For instance, he mentioned combined heat and power. Considerable progress has been made in the use of combined heat and power, which has been encouraged since the privatisation of the gas and electricity industries. We now have 3,000 MW installed CHP capacity in the United Kingdom on more than 1,100 sites. I opened such a site on a housing estate north of London, which is using redundant tank engines. That is an interesting turn-round, considering the international situation.

The scorn which the hon. Gentleman poured on the public sector was utterly unjust because we accept that the public sector, particularly central Government, has a special role to play—if for no other reason than to set an example. The Government are fully committed to an ambitious target of improving energy efficiency on their own estate by 15 per cent. over the five years ending in March 1996. The 1993 results are being analysed, but the 1992-93 CO_2 emissions per square metre and CO_2 total emissions had reduced by 6 per cent. and 3 per cent. respectively. After March 1996, further targets will be set to take Government estate energy use to well below 80 per cent. of 1990 levels by the year 2000.

On efficiency standards for appliances, the Government have always supported the European Commission in developing measures to bring about improvements in the energy efficiency of domestic appliances. A directive covering the mandatory energy labelling of refrigerators and freezers came into force in the UK on 1 January. Further directives are under way covering the mandatory labelling of washing machines and tumble dryers, and progress has clearly been made in that direction.

Clearly, with an innovative programme of that scale, it is crucial that we monitor the progress towards achieving our overall target. Our programmes have quantitative targets. We monitor and report on them, for example, in an annual White Paper. We are also questioned on them regularly in the House. The hon. Gentleman is vigorous in doing so.

It is inevitable that some elements of the programme will save more CO_2 than expected, and others will save less. Continuous monitoring is, and will continue to be, an essential part of the process of developing a response within the flexible programme that the Government have laid out. I have already mentioned some elements of the programme where we have carried out some adjustments.

Some items in the programme are more experimental than others and further adjustments must be made. I accept that the Energy Saving Trust had a difficult and uncertain year. I am abundantly aware of that because Lord Moore was my predecessor as Member of Parliament for my constituency and lives just down the road. On Monday, my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Industry announced that the Government will take powers to contribute to the trust's running costs. That will enable the trust to reconsider its plans, and it represents an important first step in establishing funding for the trust and the schemes that it brings forward.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the role of the regulators. Their independence is an important principle. They must balance their various duties, and the hon. Gentleman would not expect me to comment on legislation that is not yet before this House and that is not for my Department.

Our monitoring shows that we are currently on course. Provisional figures for 1993 show a reduction of 6 million tonnes of carbon compared with 1990 levels. With the economy beginning to grow again, we cannot afford to be complacent, and we are currently considering whether further measures will be needed in the light of recent developments. We will draw our conclusions from that review as soon as possible.

The convention represents an important first step in tackling the threat of climate change, but it is only a beginning. The adequacy of existing commitments will be reviewed at the first conference of parties to the convention that starts next month in Berlin. It is expected that the conference will set in place the machinery for agreeing further far-reaching commitments.

The Government will support the position of the European Union, agreed at the meeting of the Environment Council in December, which calls for the current commitments in the climate change convention to be strengthened and extended. The conference will begin to examine what more could or should be done under the next phase of the convention.

Our programme sets out possible options for further measures beyond the year 2000, and we will examine them carefully, taking into account the national conference to look beyond 2000 that was held last year. We will also take account of the new energy projections, to ensure that the UK is well placed to contribute towards achieving the convention's ultimate objective.

The Government emphatically remain fully committed to fulfilling their obligations under the climate change convention. The threat of climate change is a global problem and must be solved by global action. That is why we remain committed to active participation in the international process under the climate change convention and to fulfilling our own obligations. We will continue to monitor and review our programme, taking whatever steps are necessary to ensure that we remain on course to meet our commitments.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at two minutes past Three o'clock.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will reassess the performance criteria of permanent, deputy and under secretaries within the civil service.

Mr. David Hunt: No. My Department completed work to identify the core criteria for grades 1 to 3 in March 1994. A new annual performance review system for grades 2 and 3 was introduced from 1 January 1995 which included assessment against these criteria. The arrangements proposed for determining permanent secretaries' pay will also involve a system of formal annual appraisal.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider introducing policy target agreements and individual fixed term contracts for permanent, deputy and under secretaries within the civil service.

Mr. David Hunt: Senior managers in executive agencies work within the framework of the key targets set out in the organisation's framework document, while in core departments, senior managers work within the framework of policy objectives set out in each Department's published annual report.

In the Command Paper, "The Civil Service: Taking Forward Continuity and Change" (CM 2748), the Government stated that they would proceed with the introduction of written contracts of employment for members of the new senior civil service. The Government do not favour using fixed term contracts generally for senior civil servants, a view which is shared by the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee in its report, "Role of the Civil Service".

Performance Criteria

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps are being taken to clarify performance criteria and establish a clear division of responsibility between Ministers and their officials.

Mr. David Hunt: Framework documents for executive agencies and organisations working on next steps lines describe the division of responsibilities between Ministers and officials. Taken together with an agency's corporate and business plans they also set out the indicators and targets used to assess performance. Sixty-two per cent. of the home civil service work in agencies and the executive structures of the two Revenue departments. Another 17 per cent. are in functions identified as definite or possible agency candidates.

In core departments, published annual reports already set out departmental aims, objectives and achievements against previous plans or targets. "The Civil Service: Taking Forward Continuity and Change" (Cm 2748) builds on the arrangements already in place in sets out the Government's view that there should be an increasing emphasis on extending, throughout the civil service, many of the principles of next steps, including maximum clarity about objectives and targets.

Ministry of Justice

Mr. Booth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the grounds for rejecting proposals for a Ministry of Justice.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government consider that existing arrangements continue to be effective.

A variety of proposals for a Ministry of Justice have been made, but the Government are not convinced that any of them have made a case for the significant and complex constitutional change which would be involved.

Public Bodies

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many non-departmental public bodies are currently in existence; and when the annual list of such bodies will be published.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: On 1 April 1994 there were 1,345 non-departmental public bodies—a fall of 44 since 1993. Since 1979, the number of non-departmental public bodies has been reduced by 38 per cent. from 2,167. Details can be found in "Public Bodies 1994" published today. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Committee on Standards in Public Life

Sir Giles Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a copy of the evidence he has submitted to the Committee on Standards in Public Life; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A copy of my evidence has been placed in the Library of the House.

The Government are committed to the principle that selection for public appointments should be made on merit by the well-informed choice of individuals who through their qualifications, experience and qualities match the needs of the public body and the post in question. The arrangements in place and the reforms already introduced by a range of Departments are all designed to emphasise, against a background of many different kinds of appointments, this overriding principle. It was, however, a concern that central guidance to Departments should be clearer and firmer on these issues that led the Prime Minister last May to request a review of the guidance on these matters.

That review has now been completed by the Cabinet Office public appointments unit and I have submitted a copy of its report to the committee. The "Review of Guidance on Public Appointments" explains the varied nature of public appointments, the majority of them unpaid; describes a number of the initiatives which are being taken by Departments to improve procedures; and recommends ways in which best practice can be extended. The main focus of improvements is on greater openness about, for example, who holds posts and how people can apply for them, including the greater use of advertising. It also concentrates on arrangements to demonstrate probity; on sustained measures to promote equal opportunities; and on reflecting citizens charter principles for accountability and responsiveness.

The Government have accepted the recommendations of the review and I have asked that work be set in hand straight away to implement the review as we revise the central guidance. I have asked the committee for its views on the review and the new central guidance will be issued as soon as the Government have been able to consider its comments.

Although I did not wish to anticipate or pre-judge the committee's deliberations on issues of conduct and propriety, I have provided in my evidence an overview of Government public service reforms as they apply to public bodies; and emphasised the high standards of impartiality, objectivity and financial integrity, including through codes of conduct for board members in public bodies and the national health service.

The committee has written separately to the Cabinet Secretary about gifts and hospitality for Ministers and the rules which govern the employment of officials when they leave the civil service, and he has replied. I have also placed a copy of this correspondence in the Library of the House.

I am making my evidence and the committee's correspondence with Sir Robin Butler generally available to interested parties.

Research Councils

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the amount of Government assistance granted to research councils for each year since 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Government grant-in-aid to the research councils from the science budget since 1986–87 was as follows:

£ million

	AFRC	ESRC	MRC	NERC	SERC
1986–87	57.1	23.8	128.3	70.3	316.2
1987–88	54.9	24.8	139.8	73.3	357.5
1988–89	61.1	27.0	149.6	91.9	367.6
1989–90	74.3	31.5	176.3	115.0	406.2
1990–91	88.4	36.6	185.7	135.2	440.8
1991–92	96.6	35.6	202.9	122.6	456.4
1992–93	105.4	45.9	227.6	129.7	523.0
1993–94	109.4	53.2	262.7	140.3	583.5

Estimated outturn in 1994–95 is as follows:

£ million

BBSRC	146.9
EPSRC	367.9
ESRC	58.9
MRC	269.3
NERC	153.5
PPARC	180.1
Swindon Research Councils Pensions Scheme	30.1

The allocations of the science budget for 1995–96 will be announced on 2 February.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. David Hunt: The Departments for which I have ministerial responsibility are not responsible for any regulation legislation and have, therefore, not withdrawn any such legislation in the last 12 months.

Citizens Charters

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the sections of all citizens charters in operation which cover the public services used by elderly people.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Public services should be accessible to all those who need them, including elderly people. The 40 charters issued by public services are intended to help raise the standards and responsiveness of those services to all their customers, which include elderly people.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to establish a charter for the retired covering all services used by retired people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: There are no plans to introduce such a charter. Public services should be accessible to all those who need them, including retired people. In drawing up or revising a charter, a service provider should consult its customers and, as far as possible reflect their particular needs in the service standards and commitments which that charter sets.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electric Shock Equipment

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences have been granted for the export of electric shock equipment since 1988, for which countries and for how many devices.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether export licences have been granted for the transfer of electric shock equipment to Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: It would be possible to establish whether any export licences had been sought for such exports only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what stocks of shock batons were supplied directly of indirectly to Saudi Arabia (a) under the Al Yamamah programme and (b) in any other transaction in the period (i) three years before and (ii) six years after the signing of the Al Yamamah deal (1) by the British Government, (2) by British companies or (3) by arrangement with any company with offices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 January 1995]: Both British Aerospace and the Ministry of Defence have denied that any electric batons were supplied under the Al Yamamah programme. It would be possible to establish whether any export licences had been sought for such exports only at disproportionate cost. Deals not involving export from the UK require no licence.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with ICL Technical Plastics about the sale or export of electro-shock equipment; and what support his Department has provided.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 January 1995]: There is no record of support to ICL Technical Plastics for this purpose. My officials have spoken to representatives of the company who have denied the allegations in the Channel 4 television programme "Dispatches" on 11 January 1995.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the export of electric shock batons and other equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am aware of the allegations made in the channel 4 television programme "Dispatches" on 11 January 1995. The companies concerned have made public denials of the allegations.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with BAe Royal Ordnance about the sale of electric shock batons to (a) Saudi Arabia and (b) other countries.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My officials contacted British Aerospace following the screening of the Channel 4 television programme "Dispatches" on 11 January 1995. The company has denied the allegations made in the programme.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his criteria for judging whether an anti-personnel mine reaches sufficiently high standards to be judged self-destructing of self-neutralising so as to be allowed to be exported.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Decisions on whether or not to grant a licence for the export of such mines would involve a number of considerations, only one of which would be an assessment of failure rates. The munitions lists in part III group 1 of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 are modelled on the former COCOM munitions list headings and contain no standards for land mines; all mines are controlled.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications he received in 1994 for export licences for self-destructing or self-neutralising anti-personnel mines; by whom they were manufactured; which applications were approved; and for which countries the mines were destined.

Mr. Ian Taylor: None.

Unsolicited Mail

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from Birmingham city council about unsolicited direct mail offering business opportunities, profitable gambling or football pool plans and other money-making schemes, purporting to offer substantial profit from very little effort or expenditure; and whether he will seek to amend the Unsolicited Goods and Services Act 1971 and its amendment of 1975 to prohibit the distribution of such unsolicited literature.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have received no such representations. I have no plans to amend the Unsolicited Goods and Services Acts to prohibit the distribution of unsolicited literature.

Lloyd's

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what timetable he envisages for the 1995 solvency test for Lloyd's of London

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In previous years the statement and certificates demonstrating Lloyd's solvency, which are required by part IV of the Insurance Companies Act 1982, have normally been received towards the end of August. I have no reason to expect the timetable to be different this year.

Ferries, Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to revisit the inquiry into ferry fares and services to and from the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Director General of Fair Trading is due to review the market for the supply cross-Solent ferry services this year, as requested by the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in 1992 following publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report.

Arbitration Bill

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received during the consultation period that followed the publishing of the White Paper on the draft Arbitration Bill of February 1994; and what conclusions he has drawn as a result of these representations.

Mr. Heseltine: Some 158 often extremely detailed submissions were received during the consultation period that followed the publication in February 1994 of the consultation document on the draft Arbitration Bill. These are currently being considered. A Bill taking account of the responses will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: A list of those rules and regulations withdrawn in the past 12 months follows. The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed. The implications for the Department's overall manpower will not be significant, and will be taken into account in the Department's MINIS round, the results of which are published annually.

Rules and Regulations withdrawn in the last twelve months

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to its clients' interests.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 31 January 1995]: In so far as we have been able to establish there were no meetings between departmental officials and representatives of Ian Greer Associates on 26 January.

Recruitment

Mr. Donhoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 27 January 1995]: The Department of Trade and Industry, and its executive agencies, spent £554,959 recruiting 108 staff during 1994.

Business Link

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set up an independent evaluation of the progress to date on the business link network.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 2 February 1995]: The Department of Trade and Industry is currently commissioning an independent evaluation of the business link network. The evaluation will begin in March and is due to be completed in autumn 1995.

East Timor

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1994, Official Report, column 299, if the United Kingdom company that is licensed to explore for oil and gas in the East Timor gap has been granted an export licence under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1981.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 10 January 1995]: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to reveal details of export licences or applications for licences unless the requirements of confidentiality are outweighed by the public interest.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 299, if the United Kingdom company that is licensed to explore for oil and gas in the East Timor gap requires an export licence under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1981.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 10 January 1995]: A licence is required under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended, to export from the United Kingdom goods identified in the schedules to that order, unless the goods are specified in article 3(b) to (e) of the order.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Ellesmere Port Magistrates Court

Mr. Miller: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what plans he has to replace the Ellesmere Port magistrates court;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the suitability of the Ellesmere Port magistrates courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The provision of magistrates courthouse accommodation is a matter for the magistrates courts committee concerned in conjunction with the local paying authority; there is no requirement of notification or representation to the Lord Chancellor. A local authority that is aggrieved by a decision of the magistrates courts committee to close a courthouse has the right of appeal to the Lord Chancellor. In the absence of such an appeal the Lord Chancellor has no locus in the matter.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Miller: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to allow private sector funding for the development of magistrates courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Accommodation for magistrates courts is the responsibility of local authorities albeit substantially funded by central Government grants. The decision whether to use private sector funding is therefore primarily a matter for individual local authorities. My Department is, however, keen to support the private finance initiative, and for PFI solutions to be followed where practicable.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for each of the area advisory committees on justices of the peace in the Greater London area, how many applications were received to become a JP in each of the last three years for which statistics are available; how many of these applications were from ethnic minority applicants; how many of the total applications were accepted; how many of these were from ethnic minority applicants.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The figures for each of the advisory committees on justices of the peace in the Greater London area for the last three years are as follows:

Area Advisory Committee	Number of applications received			Number of appointments			Number of ethnic minority applicants appointed
	1992	1993	1994	1992	1993	1994	1992	1993	1994
Inner London	140	173	149	75	88	72	9	21	11
City of London	23	23	12	10	10	6	2	0	1
South west London	93	84	73	24	32	35	4	3	1
South east London	96	71	83	33	19	23	3	2	3
North east London	166	132	111	37	48	42	8	9	8
Middlesex	262	103	162	97	29	56	4	11	16

No figures are available to show how many of the total applications were from ethnic minority applicants.

Community Charge Payers

Mr. David Young: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recourse to compensation exist for those community charge payers wrongly committed to prison; and what action is to be taken against the magistrates who committed them.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Legal proceedings may be taken against a magistrate only if he has acted outside his jurisdiction and if it is proved that he has acted in bad faith. The Lord Chancellor does not intervene in judicial matters and there are no grounds for him to take action.

Posthumous Pardon

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) if he will list the main principles governing the release of documents held in the Public Record Office relating to the trials and executions for murder in British gaols on application by next of kin or their legal representatives for the purpose of pursuing a case for posthumous pardon;

(2) what is his Department's policy in relation to the application of the 75-year-rule, and requests made for reducing it with regard to papers held in the Public Record Office relating to the trial and execution for murder in British gaols, by the next of kin for the purpose of pursuing the case for a posthumous pardon; what policy his Department has on charging for photocopying of such records for such purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: All assize records over 30 years old and closed for 75 years are being re-reviewed in line with the provisions of the White Paper on open government, chapter 9. Dependent on the nature of the inquiry from the next of kin, documents are either made available to them, or they are invited to visit my Department to read the file. Public Record Office charges for photocopies from files and my Department follows the same course of action. After review, and where sensitivity has passed, files are being released into the public domain.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when his Department received the application to supply copies of the papers relating to the trial for the murder of Lily Volpert, and execution in Cardiff gaol in 1952 of Mahmood Hussein Mattan: on what date the records were located at the Cardif Public Record Office; and on what date the Mattan family and their solicitor were informed of their existence.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A letter dated 2 September 1994 was received by the Court of Appeal on 6 September 1994, and passed to my Department's record section for action. They requisitioned Mattan's case file from the Public Record Office at Kew on 8 September 1994, and supplied copies of documents from the file to the solicitors under cover of a letter dated 16 September 1994.

Legal Aid Fund (Barristers' Fees)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will name those barristers paid more than £200,000 from the legal aid fund in 1992–93 and 1993–94 and the amount each individual was paid in each year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Berry: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) what steps he takes to avoid a statutory instrument (a) being made or (b) coming into force before the making of any separate statutory instrument without which it would be ultra vires;

(2) what steps he takes to avoid a statutory instrument being approved before the approval of any separate statutory instrument without which it would be ultra vires.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The guidance in "Statutory Instrument Practice" reminds Departments of the need to ensure that provisions in subordinate legislation are intra vires.

ENVIRONMENT

Objective 1 Funding

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place a copy of the final agreement programme for objective 1 for Merseyside in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have placed a copy of the objective 1 single programming document for Merseyside in the Library today.

The programming which the single programme's document sets out provides an important opportunity for Merseyside. It includes a broad range of measures which will improve the competitiveness of local industry, increase the skills and employment opportunities for local people and enhance the quality of life. These measures give effect to a strategy agreed with the European Commission and prepared in partnership between the Government and others active locally: the local authorities, the training and enterprise councils, statutory agencies such as English Partnerships and the Merseyside development corporation and participants from institutions, further and higher education and the voluntary sector. I welcome the constructive and pragmatic spirit in which all concerned in the local partnership have driven forward planning for the Merseyside objective 1 programme, which will continue to have the Government's full support.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies have been carried out by his Department into the long-term storage of radioactive waste.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1981 my Department has carried out the following studies into the long-term storage of radioactive waste. These are available through the Library of the House:

A Design Study of Long Term Storage and Underground Disposal System for Highly Active Waste.

W. R. Burton and J. R. Griffin

Pre-disposal Storage, Transport and Handling of Vitrified High-Level Waste.

T. F. Kempe and A. Martin

Surface Storage of Vitrified High-Level Radioactive Waste in Reinforced Concrete Casks.

H. Beale, M. W. George and T. Robertson

Implications of Long-term Surface or Near-Surface Storage of Intermediate and Low Level Waste in the United Kingdom.

N. Murray, D. Vande Putte and R. J. Wade.

Long-term Storage of Radioactive Solid Waste Within Disposal Facilities.

M. Wakerley and J. Edmunds

Assessment of Best Practicable Environment Options (BPEOs) for Management of Low and Intermediate-Level Solid Wastes.

In addition, over the same period, there have been a number of studies into short-term storage.

Local Referendums

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of giving powers to local authorities to hold local referendums.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend has made no such assessment.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds are available through his Department in the current financial year for coastal protection and repair.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My Department has no specific funds in respect of work on coastal protection and repair.

Where the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food expect to issue credit approvals for capital expenditure in respect of such work these credit approvals will be taken into account in calculating standard spending assessments. Consequently local authorities will receive a contribution through the revenue support grant towards the borrowing costs associated with the balance of capital costs of approved schemes net of other grants.

Local authorities also receive contributions through their revenue support grant entitlements in respect of revenue expenditure which they undertake for coastal protection and repair.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has regarding legislation or other action to ensure that the needs of the disabled are provided for in decisions on planning applications.

Sir Paul Beresford: Guidance on access issues is contained in my Department's planning policy guidance note 1 "General Policy and Principles" and in planning policy guidance note 3, "Housing". This guidance encourages developers and local authorities to consider access issues at an early stage in the design process. In general, however, the needs of disabled people to have access to buildings are secured through the Building Regulations. Part M of these regulations now define the access requirements to all storeys of non-domestic buildings and to most extensions. On 12 January, my Department issued a consultation paper proposing that the scope of the regulations should be extended to cover access for disabled people to all new dwellings.

Education Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the figures for the education standard spending assessment for Hertfordshire for (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96 and the percentage change between the two years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The figures are:

1994–95 Unadjusted a.	1994–95 Adjusted[1] b.	1995–96 c.	Change (b/c) per cent. d.
351.155	361.089	371.417	+2.9

[1] The adjusted figure takes account of net income from recoupment in 1994-95, so as to make it broadly comparable with the SSA for 1995–96.

Homelessness

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what recent consultations he has undertaken on proposals to reform homelessness legislation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what further consultations he plans in advance of legislation on homelessness; and if he will undertake to consult all the responders to the Green Paper "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies".

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We consulted extensively during the early part of last year, and our conclusions were announced to the House on 18 July 1994 by my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction. Since then my Department has sought views on certain matters of detail from a number of key organisations interested in this subject. The policy remains as announced last July, and we have no plans for any further general consultation.

Regional Offices

Mr. McAllison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific tasks and objectives each senior regional director and staff member of Government offices for the regions have been and will be set for the years ending 31 March 1995 to 31 March 1996.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government have given the Government offices for the regions the role of working in partnership with local people to maximise the competitiveness, prosperity and quality of life of each region. The central objectives of the offices are to:

Meet the operational requirements of Departments and Ministers

Contribute local views and experience to the formation and communication of Government policy

Promote a coherent approach to competitiveness, sustainable economic development and regeneration using public and private resources and through the exercise of its statutory responsibilities.

Develop the skills of staff and methods of working to achieve these objectives and to demonstrate their success in doing so

Develop partnerships with and between all the local interests to promote and secure these objectives

Provide a single point of contact for local people and deliver high quality services on citizens charter principles.

Detailed objectives for the offices for 1995–96 will be set out in GO-MINIS management planning documents which will be published in the spring.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Sir Paul Beresford: The following list shows the 27 statutory instruments revoked by this Department during 1994.

The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed. The manpower implications will be taken into account in the Department's central manpower plans which will be published in the Department's annual report in March.

Community Charge

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities that have illegally prosecuted people unable to pay the community charge; and what action his Department will take to compensate those concerned.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Community Charge (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 include provision for an authority to apply for a warrant of commitment against a debtor where other enforcement measures have been unsuccessful. It is for the magistrates court to consider any such application. The court may issue a warrant only after it has inquired of the person's means, and is satisfied that the failure to pay is the result of wilful refusal or culpable neglect. It has discretion to remit all or part of the outstanding amount.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount provided by his Department for the construction of gipsy sites in Devon in each year since 1993; and how much will be provided in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996-97.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My Department has neither made nor will make any payment of gipsy site grant for sites in Devon in the financial years 1993–94 to 1996–97, because no local authority application for grant for sites in that area has received or is awaiting approval to proceed to tender.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will allow Devon county council to use the grant from his Department, originally designated for a gipsy site at Tamerton Foliot, for an alternative gipsy site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The application from Devon county council for gipsy site grant for a site at Tamerton Foliot was rejected by my Department on the ground of excessive cost. No grant has therefore been allocated for that site. Section 80 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, which came into force on 3 November 1994, repealed the Secretary of State's power to approve grant other than for applications received before commencement date.

Regional Operations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff his Department employs on a regional basis in each standard English region; what is the cost of running these regional operations; what was the total budget for each region in the latest available year; and what are the main purposes for which the budget is used.

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department currently employs the following number of staff in each of the Government offices for the regions:

	Number
Government Office for the North East	99
Government Office for the North West	164
Government Office for Yorkshire and Humberside	134
Government Office for Merseyside	65
Government Office for the West Midlands	120
Government Office for the East Midlands	104
Government Office for the Eastern Region	71
Government Office for the South West	77
Government Office for the South East	90
Government Office for London	131

These figures exclude regionally based Property Holdings, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and rent assessment panel staff.

Information about the cost to my Department of running each office, the activities carried out by the offices and the programme budgets of each office was given in my replies to the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham), Official Report, 25 January 1995, columns 210-12.

Countryside Stewardship Sites

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by county for countryside stewardship sites, the date when each site was designated and the date when each site's designation is due to be terminated.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 30 January 1995]: The countryside stewardship scheme is operated by the Countryside Commission. Agreements under the scheme begin on 1 October of the relevant year, and normally run for ten years. Information supplied by the Countryside Commission on the sites currently under agreement in each of their administrative areas, together with the date of the commencement and termination of each agreement, is given in the table. Information on agreements entering the scheme in 1994 is provisional.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crime Victims

31. Mr. Heald: To ask the Attorney-General to what extent victims are taken into account when a decision to prosecute is taken by the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Solicitor-General: When taking a decision to prosecute, the interests of the victim are an important factor in determining the balance of the public interest.

Appeals

34. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the procedure of ensuring equity to people who appeal against a decision of an earlier court.

The Solicitor-General: The procedures are well established and effective in ensuring justice.

Combat 18

35. Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what action he is taking in respect of members of Combat 18.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has not yet received a report from the Metropolitan police, whose investigation into Combat 18 continues.

Asil Nadir

36. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the handling by the Serious Fraud Office of the Asil Nadir case.

The Solicitor-General: A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Asil Nadir. The Crown is ready to proceed when he returns or is returned to the jurisdiction.

Departmental Review

37. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make it his policy to instigate an independent review of the administration of his Department to facilitate decision making and accountability.

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to commission such a review.

Serious Fraud Office

38. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to review the operation of the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: On 1 February 1995, I received the report of the consideration of merger group on the merits and feasibility of merging all or part of the fraud divisions of the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office. I shall take my decision after consulting colleagues.

Electro-shock Equipment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will seek to prosecute ICL Technical Plastics for breaches of section 5(1) (b) of the Firearms Act 1968 for selling electro-shock equipment;

(2) if he will seek to prosecute ICL Technical Plastics for breaches of section 5(1) (b) of the Firearms Act 1968 for manufacturing electro-shock equipment without his authority;

(3) if he will seek to prosecute ICL Technical Plastics for breaches of section 5(1) (b) of the Firearms Act 1968 for the possession of electro-shock equipment.

The Attorney-General: Decisions about prosecution can be taken only on the basis of evidence gathered during the course of a criminal investigation. It is for the relevant chief officer of police to decide in relation to the alleged offences whether such investigation is warranted. I understand that the Strathclyde police are investigating certain matters arising from a recent television documentary programme about ICL Technical Plastics Limited, which is a Glasgow-based company. Any evidence which may justify the institution of criminal proceedings will be considered by the independent prosecuting authorities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the numbers, role and cost of European Union monitors in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Goodlad: There are 60 EU monitors in Bosnia, of whom five are British. Their primary role is to monitor political opinion, military capabilities, humanitarian aid supplies, human rights and the economic situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

In 1994 the total budget for the EU monitoring mission in former Yugoslavia was D28 million or £11.6 million.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the objectives, time scale, staff and budget of the EU administration of the city of Mostar; and what plans there are for similar initiatives elsewhere in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Goodlad: The European Union was asked by the Bosnian-Croat and Muslim communities to administer the city of Mostar for two years, beginning July 1994. The EU's objective is to foster reconciliation and reunite the divided city. The EU administrator is Mr Hans Koschnik—German—who has a multi-national staff of experts to assist him, including several British nationals. This year's budget is 32 million ecu or £25 million. Next year's budget is still to be finalised.

Land Mines

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what opinion of the Secretary-General of the United Nations in respect of land mines has been conveyed to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Secretary-General of the United Nations has called for a complete ban on the use, production and transfer of anti-personnel land mines in his proposals for an agenda for development and an agency for peace which were published recently.

No detailed discussions of the Secretary-General's proposals have yet taken place at the United Nations.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if United Kingdom policy at the review of the United Nations inhumane weapons convention supports the mapping and marking of minefields in all circumstances.

Mr. Goodlad: We support a prohibition on the emplacement of anti-personnel land mines without a self-destructing capability outside perimeter-marked areas monitored by military personnel. We also support proposals for the location of all minefields and mined areas to be recorded.

Sexual Offences (Children)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens have been prosecuted for sexual offences involving children outside the United Kingdom for each year since records have been kept.

Mr. Baldry: There have been 135 reported cases of British citizens prosecuted outside the United Kingdom for sexual offences since 1974. Our records do not show which of those cases involved children.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of countries which have announced their support for an international ban on the production, stockpiling, sale and use of anti-personnel mines.

Mr. Baldry: The following countries have announced their support for an international ban on the use, production, stockpiling and transfer of anti-personnel land mines: Australia, Belgium, Cambodia, Columbia, Ireland, Mexico and Sweden.

The 49th session of the General Assembly adopted by consensus a resolution supporting further international efforts to seek solutions to the problems caused by anti-personnel land mines, with a view to their eventual elimination.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the International Committee of the Red Cross in respect of United Kingdom proposals to control the international use of anti-personnel mines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No such representations have been received.

Bosnia

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Jovan Zametica is covered by the travel curbs imposed by the United Nations on the Bosnian-Serb leadership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The list of those Bosnian Serbs whose movements would be restricted under Security Council resolution 942 remains under consideration in the UN Sanctions Committee. We cannot comment on which individuals might be included until the Committee's consideration is completed.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those persons included in the travel curbs imposed by the United Nations on Bosnian-Serb leaders and others residing in Pale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The list of those Bosnian Serbs whose movements would be restricted under SCR 942 remains under consideration by the UN Sanctions Committee.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those persons who have been permitted to represent in the United Kingdom the interests of the Bosnian Serbs led by Dr. Radovan Karadzic over the past four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Bosnian Serbs have no official representation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often, and on what basis, Jovan Zametica has communicated with General Sir Michael Rose during the past eight weeks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: UNPROFOR is in regular contact with all parties, including the Bosnian Serbs. Mr. Zametica, as a spokesman for the Bosnian Serbs, is a regular interlocutor.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Baldry: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office issues very few rules and regulations. Secondary legislation is made by Order in Council. In 1994 at least 27 orders were revoked. The majority of these related to the lifting of the United Nations arms embargo on South Africa. There were no implications for the Department's manpower. The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed.

Humanitarian Medical Treatment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 1069, what arrangements have been made to assist Llandugh hospital with suitable security arrangements for the duration of the treatment of defected Iraqi army Major Safa Al-Battat for thallium poisoning.

Mr. Goodlad: We wrote to Llandugh hospital on 31 January following an inquiry from it about arrangements for press interviews for Major Al-Battat, the victim of thallium poisoning by the Iraqi regime. We discussed access for the press with the hospital administration, and recognised that it was for the hospital to judge whether the media should be allowed access to the patient.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 1069, if he will list the general principles governing Her Majesty's Government's approach to requests for urgent humanitarian medical treatment for those injured in civil wars or uprisings against (a) the Iraqi regime and (b) other conflicts.

Mr. Goodlad: All cases are considered on their individual merits.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, column, 1069, if he will provide details of the arrangements for the acceptance on urgent medical humanitarian grounds of entry clearance of defected Iraqi army Major Safa Al-Battat for anti-poisoning treatment at Llandugh hospital, South Glamorgan.

Mr. Goodlad: We condemn the Iraqi regime's efforts to poison Major Al-Battat. This is another example of the continuing brutality in Iraq, and yet more evidence that the regime is still involved in terrorist activities. We are therefore glad to have been able to help the Iraqi National Congress arrange Major Al-Battat's treatment here, and to ensure that his visa application was given prompt consideration in accordance with normal immigration rules.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 1069, what representations he has received concerning that arrangements for the treatment at Llandugh hospital, South Glamorgan of defected Iraqi army Major Safa Al-Battat for thallium, poisoning.

Mr. Goodlad: We discussed the arrangements for media access to Major Al-Battat with the hospital administrators and officials in the Welsh Office.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid

41. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of overseas aid.

Mr. Baldry: The aid budget for the current year is some £2.2 billion.

Know-how Funds

42. Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the contributions of British know-how funds relative to other aid given to the former Soviet Union and central and eastern Europe.

Mr. Baldry: The know-how fund is an important contributor to the transition process in the former Soviet Union and eastern Europe. The fund has a deservedly enviable reputation in the region.

45. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what work is being undertaken by the know-how fund in Albania.

Mr. Baldry: The know-how fund is supporting a range of activities in Albania. At present the main emphasis of the programme is health care and local government reform. Projects are also under way in many other fields, including agriculture, small business and the environment.

World Bank

43. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work of the World bank inspection panel.

Mr. Baldry: The World bank's independent inspection panel became operational last August. To date, it has received one request for an inspection. We hope the panel will prove a useful addition to the existing systems of control provided by the board of directors and by bank management.

Reproductive Health Care

44. Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what work the Overseas Development Administration is doing to improve reproductive health care.

Mr. Baldry: The Overseas Development Administration's strategy to improve reproductive health is expressed in its children by choice, not chance policy. It focuses on improving access to good quality contraception; helping to prevent and treat sexually transmitted infection, including HIV; and making pregnancy and childbirth safer. The ODA expects to have committed at least £100 million over 1994 and 1995 to reproductive health programmes.

Indonesia

46. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial support he is giving to the democratic trade union movement in Indonesia.

Mr. Baldry: Our aid programme to Indonesia does not include any financial support to the trade union movement.

Sri Lanka

47. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present amount of aid funding being given to Sri Lanka.

Mr. Baldry: On present plans we expect to spend some £8.94 million on bilateral aid projects for Sri Lanka in 1994–95.

Baltic States

48. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to widen the scope of aid to the Baltic states.

Mr. Baldry: The know how fund will continue to provide rapid and flexible assistance to the reform process in the Baltic states. The countries concerned very much welcome our support.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the United Nations development programme-sponsored conference on Rwanda in Geneva that has just concluded; how much was pledged by each of the participants; and for what purposes.

Mr. Baldry: Participants at the UNDP round table welcomed the priorities set out in the Government of Rwanda's programme of national reconciliation and socio-economic rehabilitation and recovery. They pledged almost $583 million in support of the programme and related activities. Individual pledges are set out in the table. The United Kingdom has also pledged a further £4 million to the United Nations consolidated inter-agency appeal for Rwanda, to meet emergency needs within Rwanda and in the region. Since April 1994, Britain has committed £66 million in emergency and rehabilitation assistance bilaterally and through the EU to help Rwandans affected by the crisis.

Sub-programme 1: financial support.
Sub-programme 2: reintegration of refugees and displaced—some duplication with consolidated inter-agency appeal.
Sub-programme 3: rehabilitation/development.
Pledges by Austria, Ireland, Spain and Sweden remain to be allocated into specific sub-programmes.
Thus the total of funds allocated to sub-programmes do not add up to the total.

Dams (Ecological Effect)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what study his Department is making of the ecological effect of dams.

Mr. Baldry: The only study which the ODA has in progress concerns the prediction of reservoir sedimentation rates. Guidance on how to take account of the ecological effect of dams is covered in the ODA's "Manual of Environmental Appraisal", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Gynaecological Departments

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses there are in gynaecological out-patient and in-patient departments in the Northumberland health authority and Cheviot and Wansbeck hospital.

Mr. Sackville: The information available centrally is shown in the table. For more information the hon. Member may wish to contact the vice-chairman of Northumberland health authority, Mr. David Wright, and the chairman of Cheviot and Wansbeck NHS trust, Mr. Roger Baker.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met the Royal College of Surgeons to discuss the regulating of cosmetic surgery.

Mr. Sackville: We have had no such meeting.

Mental Illness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many physical assaults on staff and patients, including self-inflicted injuries, occurred on psychiatric wards in London in the last year that figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: National health service trusts and other providers of in-patient psychiatric services will collect information on assaults and self-inflicted injuries by patients to help them monitor the quality of service they provide. Health authorities and other purchasers can obtain details through the contracting process. We do not require information to be submitted to the Department.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the bed occupancy rate for psychiatric wards in national health service hospitals and trusts in (a) London, (b) Birmingham and (c) Manchester; and what is the method by which the bed occupancy rate is measured.

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities and providers of acute psychiatric services are familiar with the concept of bed occupancy and the Department has not sought to specify the method they should use to calculate occupancy rates. Average bed occupancy rates can be agreed as part of the contracting process and will relate to local circumstances. We do not require information about bed occupancy rates to be submitted to the Department.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what mechanism her Department monitors the effectiveness of mental health care services in London, Birmingham and Manchester; how often data are collected; what measurements are used; and how long after any data are collected they are published.

Mr. Bowis: The North Thames and South Thames, West Midlands and North West regional offices of the National Health Service Executive monitor the effectiveness of mental health services in London, Birmingham and Manchester respectively by working closely with district health authorities which are responsible for assessing the health needs of their local population and securing an appropriate range of services to meet those needs.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accident and emergency departments there are in the United Kingdom at present; and what was the corresponding figure in each year since 1986.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have had accident and emergency facilities in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table. Since 1991–92 information has been collected on the basis of national health service trusts and directly managed units with accident and emergency facilities. Before that, information was collected on an individual hospital basis. Comparable information for earlier years is not therefore available.

Trusts[1] and directly managed units with Accident and Emergency departments[2] England

The provision of information about accident and emergency services in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the functions currently carried out by regional health authorities; and who will be responsible for each function after the implementation of the Health Authorities Bill.

Mr. Malone: The transfer of functions currently carried out by regional health authorities has already been determined in all but two significant areas, in which detailed discussions are still under way.

National Health Service Executive headquarters, with advice from regional offices, will set the strategic framework, make revenue allocations to the new health authorities and make appointments to health authorities and NHS trusts. NHS Executive regional offices will be responsible for performance management of health authorities and NHS trusts and for admissions to the general practitioner fundholder scheme and allocations to GP fundholders. Regional offices will also be responsible through postgraduate deans for commissioning postgraduate medical education and training, for medical work force planning and for GP vocational training.

Consortia of health authorities and NHS trusts will take on responsibility for commissioning non-medical education and training and for non-medical work force planning. They will be supported, especially initially, by the regional offices and by a national strategy set by headquarters. Health authorities will take on purchasing of most specialised services and most public health functions, often on a lead purchaser basis or in consortia. Health authorities will also take on supervision of midwifery practice and responsibility for current RHA functions under the Mental Health Act 1983.

The contracts of junior doctors are under discussion with the profession. Future arrangements for handling complaints will be announced shortly in the light of the Government's response to the report of the Wilson committee.

Full details are contained in the Government document "Managing the New NHS—Functions and Responsibilities in the new NHS" published in July 1994.

NHS Treatment (Non-UK Citizens)

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the cost to the NHS of providing NHS treatment to non-UK citizens who are not entitled to receive it.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance issued to health authorities and national health service trusts sets out the procedures to be followed in obtaining payment where patients are not exempt from charges for NHS hospital treatment under the NHS (Charges to Overseas Visitors) Regulations 1989 (as amended). Those who believe they have evidence of such fraudulent behaviour should contact the chief executive of the NHS unit concerned.

Private Sector Contracts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts have been awarded by (a) health authorities and (b) local authority social services departments to the private sector in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment for information on local authority social services department contracts with the private sector.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she gives to local health authorities for the treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The production of guidance on the treatment of what is increasingly being referred to as chronic-fatigue syndrome is a matter for the health care professions and not for the Department. The Department may however commend to purchasers guidelines which have been accepted by all the professional bodies.

The national task force on CFS/PVFS—post-viral fatigue syndrome—ME which is autonomous of the Department of Health, has produced a report. With a view to securing progress and promoting the development of a professional consensus, the chief medical officer has invited the conference of colleges to consider the report. A response from the conference is not expected until spring.

Maternity Wards

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many maternity wards have been provided in hospitals in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Information about the number of maternity wards is not available centrally. However, data on the number of available beds in maternity units are contained in the publication "Bed Availability for England—Financial Year 1993–94", copies of which are available in the Library.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner fundholders have overrun their budgets; and by what level.

Mr. Malone: In 1992–93, the latest year for which audited information is available, 147 general practitioner fundholders overspent their budgets. The overspend was £9.8 million or 1.2 per cent. of total fundholder budgets.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of general practitioner fundholding practices and the total number of general practitioners who are fundholders.

Mr. Malone: There are currently 2,040 general practitioner fundholding practices and 8,760 general practitioner fundholders in England.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average budget for fundholders in 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94 and the comparable budget held by district health authorities for non-fundholders in those years.

Mr. Malone: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply the then Minister for Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 20 June 1994, columns 26–27.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the average waiting times for fundholders and non-fundholding general practitioners' patients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: It is not possible to calculate separate average waiting times for patients from general practitioners fundholders and non-fundholding GPs from centrally held data.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time taken for the London ambulance service to arrive at the scene following an emergency 999 call.

Mr. Sackville: London ambulance service figures show that following an emergency call the average time taken for an ambulance to arrive at the scene is 14.5 minutes.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the rules and regulations in her Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which her Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on her Department's manpower.

Mr. Sackville: We withdrew three sets of regulations in 1994 relating to medicines control. A good deal of deregulatory activity consists of amending or replacement regulation, or new and better guidance, rather than withdrawal. For example, we have amended regulations to allow more medicines to be sold over the counter without the need for a prescription; issued new guidance on welfare inspections of independent boarding schools and on regulation of day care for young children, reduced the number of boarding schools required to register as children's homes; and widened choice of venue for people getting married. The Department is continuing to consider rules and regulations for possible withdrawal or simplification. Details will be announced as and when consultations are completed.

There are no manpower effects for the Department, but we are committed to reducing staffing in the central Department by 21 per cent. by April 1997.

NHS Trusts (Borrowing)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those trusts that have received either (a) a loan from her Department or (b) an overdraft guarantee in each year since their inception, indicating (i) the amount concerned and (ii) the reason for its allocation.

Mr. Sackville: Information on loans and guarantees will be placed in the Library. No information is available on the reasons why loans are drawn. Trusts borrow principally to support their capital investment activities, but may also borrow to cover working capital requirements. All the borrowing detailed was within agreed limits. Trusts use overdrafts to cover very short-term working capital requirements. The purpose of overdraft guarantees is to reduce the cost of this borrowing from the trusts' bankers.

Health Care, East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what savings she expects to result from the abolition of the Anglia and Oxford regional health authority; and how many of those savings will be put into health care in East Anglia.

Mr. Malone: By 1997–98, total annual savings from the abolition of regional health authorities are expected to be around £100 million. These substantial savings will be retained by the national health service and thus will be available to be reinvested in patient care.

Dental Services

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the regulations concerning the provision by the NHS of out-of-hours dental cover for (a) patients registered with an NHS dentist and (b) patients not registered with an NHS dentist; and if she will make a statement on the content of those regulations.

Mr. Malone: The regulations concerning the provision of out-of-hours emergency dental cover, for both registered and unregistered patients, are contained in the National Health Service (General Dental Services) Regulations 1992.

The terms of service for general dental practitioners contained in these regulations require dentists to make reasonable arrangements to ensure that patients registered with them for capitation or continuing care can get treatment in an emergency.

Regulation 14 of these regulations enables family health services authorities to make arrangements for treatment in urgent cases of patients who have difficulty obtaining treatment. FHSAs organise emergency sessions at health centres at weekends and bank holidays, mainly for unregistered patients.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by family health services authority the arrangements which exist for emergency dental cover out of hours; and what procedures are in place to monitor the extent and quality of these arrangements.

Mr. Malone: Emergency dental services for registered patients are the responsibility of their dentists. For non-registered patients, information about emergency dental services is obtained in an annual survey of family health services authorities in England and Wales. The results for 1993–94 are available in the Library. It is for each FHSA to manage the general dental service locally, and this will include monitoring the extent and quality of such emergency arrangements.

Cervical Smears

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the percentage of United Kingdom women being offered cervical smears three-yearly or less.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally for England. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued to hospitals in respect of charging for cervical smears if done more frequently than every five years; and what is the recommended charge.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is for individual health authorities to negotiate contracts with hospitals to provide a cervical screening service for their resident population, in accordance with national guidelines.

Computerisation

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure on computerisation in primary care in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Reimbursement of the costs for computerisation in general practice are shown in the table. The amount reimbursed in 1990–91, when the scheme was introduced, includes claims for the years 1989–90 and 1990–91.

Year	£ million
1990–91	17.5
1991–92	34.0
1992–93	40.2

Drug Dispensing (Qualifications)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what qualifications are required for staff dispensing drugs in a general practitioner's dispensing practice.

Mr. Malone: The responsibility for ensuring the competence of staff dispensing drugs in general practitioners' practices lies with the doctor who is subject to the enforcement provisions of the Medicines Act 1968.

General Practitioners (Administrative Costs)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the administrative costs of all general practice per general practitioner.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Waiting Times

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has on the maximum waiting time for repair of an aortic aneurysm.

Mr. Malone: It is not appropriate to have a maximum waiting time for repair of an aortic aneurism. Each case is different and it must be for the clinician to decide whether surgical treatment is appropriate and when surgery should be performed. Patients are placed on a waiting list only if, in the opinion of a clinician at the time of assessment, their condition is judged to be stable.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total of days patients have waited in each of the last five years for treatment in NHS hospitals.

Mr. Malone: The information requested cannot be derived from waiting time data available centrally.

Resuscitation Facilities

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the availability of resuscitation facilities at (a) King's College hospital and (b) other hospitals while invasive cardiac investigations and treatments are being undertaken.

Mr. Sackville: Full resuscitation facilities are available at King's College hospital, Denmark Hill, in all areas where invasive cardiac investigations are undertaken. Full resuscitation facilities are also available on the King's College hospital, Dulwich, site although no invasive cardiac procedures are carried out there. Resuscitation facilities are generally available in other specialist hospital departments where risk of cardiac arrest is high.

Infectious Material (Postal Services)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence she has that human tissue and infectious material sent through the post has posed a health hazard; how many cases arose in the last year; and what the hazardous material was;

(2) what guidance she has on the packaging of human tissue samples and infectious material when sent through the post; and what status this guidance has.

Mr. Sackville: No such cases were reported last year. There is a range of measures to safeguard against infection as a result of the postal transport of pathology specimens. There is no evidence that these measures are inadequate. The Post Office guide sets out the requirements under the Post Office Telecommunications Act, 1969—revised 1981—for sending specimens through the post, and carriage by rail or road is covered by new Health and Safety Executive regulations on the classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous goods for carriage by road and rail, 1994. The transportation of certain pathogens listed in the Health and Safety (Dangerous Pathogens) Regulations 1981, all the provisions of which have been subsumed into the new Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994, requires prior notification to the Health and Safety Executive which will notify the appropriate Health Minister. The Health and Safety Commission's health service advisory committee guidance on safe working and the prevention of infection in clinical laboratories 1991 refers to the procedures which laboratories should observe in dispatching material. In all work situations, the potential for exposure to infection from material either in transit or under examination has to be assessed under COSHH and the appropriate safe working procedures adopted.

Prescribing Costs

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the prescribing costs of (a) a dispensing general practitioner and (b) non-dispensing general practitioner.

Mr. Malone: Information is contained in the annual report of the Prescription Pricing Authority for the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994, copies of which are available in the Library.

Accumulated Assets

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of accumulated assets of trust hospitals and directly managed units in each year since 1989.

Mr. Sackville: District health authorities did not account for fixed assets, and there were no trusts, prior to 1991–92. Information for 1991–92 to 1993–94 is shown in the table.

Accumulated assets

	DMUs[1] £	NHS trusts £
1991–92	15,028,465,000	2,651,111,000
1992–93	12,268,968,000	6,465,354,000
1993–94	Note 1 refers	12,464,800,000

Notes:

1. In 1993–94 district health authorities were not required to provide a separate figure for DMUs.
2. The 1993–94 figures are provisional.
3. The figures represent the total assets employed by DMUs and NHS trusts—fixed assets plus net current assets.

Care in the Community

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what distinction she makes between (a) community care and (b) care in the community; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Community care, as used in the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, refers to the provision of services and support which people who are affected by problems of aging, illness or disability need to be able to live as independently as possible in their own homes, or in residential care. Care in the community is a term used specifically to refer to policies for mentally ill people and people with learning disabilities which enable them to live as full, independent and normal lives in or as near to the community as possible.

Bereaved Relatives

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is available for the treatment of relatives of patients who die within (a) King's College hospital and (b) other hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance, which applies to all hospitals, is contained in HSG(92)8, copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff her Department employs on a regional basis in each standard English region; what is the cost of running these regional operations; what was the total budget for each region in the latest available year; and what are the main purposes for which the budget is used.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested on staff employed in each of the standard English regions is shown in the table. Information about departmental running costs by region is not available. Details of the Departments' gross running costs are provided in the Department's annual report for 1994–95, Cm 2512.

Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the hospitals or trusts in respect of which she has been formally consulted about partial or complete closure in the last three years;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 19 December, Official Report, column 983, what information is held regarding the number of accident and emergency departments currently threatened with closure or that have closed since April 1991;

(3) what information is provided to her Department by district health authorities, trusts, regional health authorities and NHS Executive on (a) hospital closures, (b) ward closures, (c) accident and emergency department closures, (d) reducing NHS beds and (e) increasing private beds and bed units;

(4) pursuant to her answer of 19 December, Official Report, column 983, how many hospital closures in England since April 1991 are known to her Department following objection to a proposed closure from a community health council;

(5) pursuant to her answer of 19 December, Official Report, column 983, what information her Department does not collected which is collected by the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland offices on the number of hospitals closed since April 1991 or the number of accident and emergency departments currently threatened with closure.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 January 1995]: The Department does not routinely collect information on hospital, ward or accident and emergency department closures. Information is available centrally on proposals to close, or change the use of, health service facilities which are referred to Ministers for decision following objections from a community health council. A list of such proposed closures referred to Ministers in the period 1992–94 is available in the Library.

The Department collects information on the number of national health service beds which is published annually in the booklet "Bed Availability for England", copies of which are available in the Library. Information on private beds in NHS hospitals is not collected centrally. However, information on the number of private non-NHS beds is collected and published annually in "Private Hospitals, Homes and Clinics Registered Under Section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1994", copies of which are also available in the Library.

Information collected by the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland offices on hospital closures and accident and emergency departments threatened with closure is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

DEFENCE

Operation Granby

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what indications there were that (a) chemical and (b) biological weapons were used by the Iraqi forces, or anyone under their command, during Operation Granby.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown, dated 6 February 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what indictions there were that (a) chemical and (b) biological weapons were used by the Iraqi forces, or anyone under their command, during Operation GRANBY has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. There are no indications or evidence to suggest that the Iraqi forces or anyone under their command used chemical or biological weapons against the British Armed Forces during Operation GRANBY.

Correspondence

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to reply to the letter of 7 December 1994, from the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North, concerning the death of Fusilier G. Riley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My noble friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will reply shortly.

Land, Scotland

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many acres of land are currently occupied by (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy in Scotland; what proposals he has to acquire more land, in Scotland; for any of the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: At 31 March 1994, the latest date for which records are available, the land occupied by the Armed Forces in Scotland was (a) the Army—20,883 acres (b) the Royal Air Forces—9,482 acres and (c) the Royal Navy—16,116 acres. There are no proposals to acquire more land in Scotland at this time.

HMS Andromeda

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for HMS Andromeda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is planned to sell HMS Andromeda and initial negotiations, by the Disposal Sales Agency with a friendly overseas navy, are in train. It is not our practice to discuss details of such negotiations in the interests of customer confidentiality.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the last refit of HMS Andromeda took place; and what was its cots.

Mr. Freeman: The last refit of HMS Andromeda was undertaken between August 1990 and December 1991 at a total cost of some £27 million.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent valuations have been placed on HMS Andromeda.

Mr. Freeman: Valuations of HMS Andromeda form part of the negotiations being considered on her sale. It is not our practice to discuss details of such negotiations in the interests of customer confidentiality.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is playing a full part in the deregulation initiative. As a non-regulatory Department, the Ministry of Defence has focused its efforts on relieving unnecessary administrative burdens on its suppliers; streamlining contracts procedures; and improving communications with industry.

Whitehall Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total annual expenditure on Whitehall organisations included in the Defence budget, for each year since 1979, expressed in 1994 prices and broken down by organisation.

Mr. Soames: The information is not available in the form requested and could not be compiled without disproportionate cost.

Trident

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the potential savings which would be made by reducing the number of warheads developed, purchased and maintained for the Trident nuclear weapons programme, to the average of the number of Polaris-based nuclear warheads deployed between 1984 and 1990.

Mr. Freeman: None. Our plans are based on sustaining through the life of Trident, the minimum deterrent capability required for the security of the United kingdom.

Army Reserve

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the (a) total manpower and (b) the cost of supporting the United Kingdom Army Reserve for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Mr. Soames: The total manpower of the United Kingdom Army Reserve for each year since 1979 is as follows.

The costs of supporting the United Kingdom Army Reserve are spread out among a wide variety of budgets and cannot therefore be identified in the form requested.

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	Thousands 1986

Falkland Islands

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the annual level of defence expenditure relating to the protection of the Falkland islands for each year since 1983; and what is his estimate of the current annual level of defence expenditure per household for (a) the Falkland islands and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: The annual cost of defence expenditure relating to the protection of the Falkland islands is as follows:

1983–84	637
1984–85	644
1985–86	572
1986–87	402
1987–88	229
1988–89	102
1989–90	68
1990–91	66
1991–92	72
1992–93	58
1993–94	67

The cost to each United Kingdom household of defence expenditure in the Falkland islands was approximately £2.90 in 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available.

The total defence cash limit for the United Kingdom in 1994–95, is £22,735,585,000 representing a cost to each United Kingdom household of approximately £981 this financial year.

No statistics are held by the Ministry of Defence that would enable the calculation of Defence Expenditure per household in the Falkland islands.

Telephone Line Rentals

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money was paid in advance to BT for telephone line rentals in each of the last five years; if his Department included in its calculations the interest lost in this process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: As reported in paragraph 63 of the report, entitled "Ministry of Defence: Management of Telephones" (HC 637), some £30,000,000 a year was paid in advance to BT for telephone line rentals in the period prior to financial year 1993–94. This practice of paying yearly in advance was discontinued in 1993–94, and such bills are now paid quarterly in advance, representing a substantial saving to the Exchequer in additional cost of borrowing that would otherwise have been required.

Inhumane Weapons Convention

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 842, what proposals for additions to the inhumane weapons convention have been made; by which other countries; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of each of these proposals.

Mr. Soames: Sweden and the International Committee of the Red Cross have proposed that the revised UN weaponry convention include a new protocol on blinding weapons. Sweden has also proposed a new protocol on naval mines; and Switzerland has proposed a new protocol on small calibre munitions. Our main aim remains the strengthening of the restrictions on the use of anti-personnel landmines, and we would not wish to see discussion of proposed new protocols detract from that objective. However, the United Kingdom is studying each of these proposals closely, and will make a final decision on them in good time for the review conference later this year.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 548, if he will give details of the experiments carried out under (a) mild, (b) moderate, (c) substantial and (d) unclassified project licences currently in effect at his Department's establishments; if he will identify the animals involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The types of studies carried out under the project licences currently in effect at the Department's establishments by categories are as follows:

(a) mild: These include studies of the influence of stress on the toxicity of potential CW agents, the effectiveness of skin protectants and decontaminants, the use of transdermal techniques to administer medical countermeasures and the acceleration of healing in chemical warfare agent induced injury.

(b) moderate: These include studies of the mechanism of action, pharmacology and treatment of chemical and biological warfare agent poisoning and infection, detection and identification of biological agents, the control of infection in wounds, improved techniques for military surgery and trauma studies and exposure to different pressures of air or oxygen for varying durations.

(c) substantial: These include studies of the mechanism of action and treatment of chemical and biological warfare agents.

(d) unclassified: These include studies of the attenuation of impact loads.

It would involve a disproportionate amount of effort to identify the animals involved.

Otterburn Training Area

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which civil servants or military personnel have met representatives from the campaign against the national park regarding the Otterburn training area in the Northumberland national park.

Mr. Soames: Although civil servants and military personnel from my Department come into contact with members of the campaign against the national park, no official meetings have been held with the organisation.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial or other support has been given by his Department or the Army to the campaign against the national park regarding the Otterburn training area in the Northumberland national park.

Mr. Soames: None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken or will take to ensure that all interested local authorities as well as individuals and groups fully understand the proposed developments regarding possible new military training at the Otterburn training area in the Northumberland national park.

Mr. Soames: While formal consultation about the proposals which are eventually to be submitted by my Department will be a matter for the local planning authority, our environmental consultants have already sought the views of statutory bodies as well as a large number of voluntary sector groups and local people. In addition, my officials have provided general briefings to all local parish councils as well as Tynedale and Alnwick district councils.

Conducted tours of the ranges have also been provided to, amongst others, the Council for National Parks, the Campaign for the Protection of Rural England, the Northumberland and Newcastle Society, the Northumberland Wildlife Trust, Friends of the Northumberland National Park and the Northumberland National Park Committee. The national park officer has also been briefed on my Department's AS90 and multi-launch rocket system proposals for Otterburn training area.

Finally, arrangements are in hand to provide a static exhibition which explains fully our proposals. The exhibition, which we expect to be available in the spring, will be placed in a number of key locations in the local area.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by how many the number of civilian posts at the Otterburn training area is expected to rise or fall (a) if the proposed development regarding the AS90 and multi-launch rocket system proceeds and (b) if the proposed development does not take place.

Mr. Soames: We do not expect there to be any change in the number of staff employed at Otterburn training area if my Department's current proposals regarding the AS90 and multi-launch rocket system do not proceed. Up to 15 additional staff may be required, however, if the training area is developed as proposed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are involving the cessation of military training at the Otterburn training area.

Mr. Soames: Otterburn training area provides essential training facilities which could not be dispensed with or easily replicated elsewhere. Consequently, we have no plans to reduce or phase out military training at the Otterburn training area.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions he has met representatives of the campaign against the national park regarding the Otterburn training area in Northumberland national park; whether he has been invited to any meeting on the issue; and when representations regarding this organisation and its aims were made to him and by whom.

Mr. Soames: No official meetings have taken place with members or representatives of the campaign against the national park and no invitations have been received from the organisation. My officials received a request from the CANP last year for a briefing on AS90 and the multi-launch rocket system, in relation to the proposed developments at Otterburn.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department or the Army have been consulted by the campaign against the national park regarding the Otterburn training area in the Northumberland national park.

Mr. Soames: The campaign against the national park is one of a number of organisations which have made representations to my Department expressing their views about our proposals for the Otterburn training area.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what benefits have been offered by his Department or the Army to their tenant farmers at the Otterburn training area on the basis of the proposed developments involving the AS90 and multi-launch rocket system proceeding.

Mr. Soames: None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many full-time and part-time civilian posts exist at the Otterburn training area in Northumberland.

Mr. Soames: One hundred and ten full-time and 10 part-time civilian personnel are employed by my Department at Otterburn training area, together with 14 contractor's full-time personnel.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to reduce or phase out military training at the Otterburn training area should the proposed development concerning the AS90 and multi-launch rocket system not take place.

Mr. Soames: Otterburn training area provides essential training facilities which could not be dispensed with or easily replicated elsewhere. Consequently, we have no plans to reduce or phase out military training at the Otterburn training area if the proposed development does not take place.

Service Doctors

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of doctors serving in the armed forces in the rank of wing commander or equivalent and in each of the ranks higher than wing commander or equivalent.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is provided in the following table:

Doctors in the Armed Forces medical services

	Royal Navy	Army	RAF
Surgical Commander/ Lt. Colonel/Wing Commander	80	118	99
Surgical Captain/Colonel/ Group Captain	23[1]	35	21

2. Figures include all doctors i.e., in clinical appointments (primary and secondary care), specialist staff, training and administrative/ HQ functions.

Medical Consultants

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected number of medical consultants in surgery and anaesthesia to be employed by his Department in (a) two years' time, (b) five years' time and (c) 10 years' time.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 30 January 1995]: The reorganisation of Defence secondary care recommended by "Front Line First" is due to be completed by April 1996. From that time, there will be a total of 74 posts for consultant surgeons, that is, burns and plastic surgery, ENT/ORL surgery, ophthalmology, oral surgery, general surgery, orthopaedic surgery and urology, and 36 for consultant anaesthetists. No further changes to the number of consultant posts are planned.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many medical consultants in surgery and anaesthesia have been newly appointed to the services in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 30 January 1995]: The information requested is provided in the table.

1. Surgery includes the following specialisations: burns and plastic surgery, ENT/ORL surgery, ophthalmology, oral surgery, general surgery, orthopaedic surgery and urology.

2. Information relating to numbers of consultant surgeons and anaesthetists is not held centrally but has been extracted manually from single Service sources. Figures relating to earlier years may not be precise.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many medical consultants in surgery and anaesthesia have left the services in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 30 January 1995]: The information requested is provided in the table:

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many medical consultants in surgery and anaesthesia have applied for employment to his Department in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 30 January 1995]: One only, an anaesthetist who applied to the RAF in both 1992 and 1993—he was selected but did not take up his commission.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many medical consultants in surgery and anaesthesia have been employed by his Department in each of the last 10 years.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Bodies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people sit on non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland;

(2) what is the current number of non-departmental public bodies operating in Northern Ireland; and what is their combined annual budget;

(3) how many people sit on two or more non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: There are currently 2,329 people sitting on 104 non-departmental public bodies operating in Northern Ireland.

The total gross expenditure of non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland for 1993–94 was £2,300.4 million while the total budget funded by Government for 1993–94 was £1,856.2 million.

Some 180 people sit on two or more non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland.

Agricultural Census

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the rate of response in each of the past five years to the June agricultural census in Northern Ireland; and when was the last prosecution for failure to return the June census forms.

Mr. Ancram: The rate of response in each of the past five years to the June agricultural census was:

Year	Response rate (Per cent.)
1990	78
1991	78
1992	79

No prosecutions for failure to return the June census form have been brought during the past 25 years. Nor am I aware of any prosecutions before this but to check the relevant records would entail disproportionate cost.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs have been provided in the district councils areas of (a) Down and (b) Newry and Mourne in each of the past five years as a result of assistance from the Industrial Development Board; and when the Industrial Development Board last arranged a visit to each of these council areas by a potential inward investor.

Mr. Ancram: Information on jobs promoted with assistance from the Industrial Development Board in the Down district council and the Newry and Mourne district council areas is set out in the table. The last visit by potential inward investors, arranged by the IDB, was on 8 December 1994 in the case of Down district council and on 18 November 1994 to Newry and Mourne district council area.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Ancram: A list of the statutory rules and regulations revoked in the 12-month period ending December 1994 has been placed in the Library.

Work is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed.

The manpower implications are taken into account in the central manpower plans which will be published in the Northern Ireland expenditure plans and priorities in March.

Irish Language Schools

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what plans he has to establish schools that will teach through the medium of the Irish language or to support such schools set up by other bodies;

(2) what plans he has to set up bilingual schools in English and Irish in Northern Ireland or to support similar institutions set up by other bodies.

Mr. Ancram: The Government have no power to establish directly any type of school. However, they are prepared to consider soundly based proposals from other bodies for either Irish language or bilingual schools. As is the case with any new school, that consideration will, however, have to be in the context of ensuring effective and efficient use of resources.

Three Irish-medium primary schools are presently in receipt of 100 per cent. recurrent and capital grants.

Private Clegg

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration was given to charging Private Clegg with manslaughter; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

Careful consideration was given by the prosecuting authority to the appropriate charges in this case. It was concluded that in relation to the death of Karen Reilly the proper charge on the available evidence was murder.

EDUCATION

Education Assets Board

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the decisions taken by his Department following recommendations from the Education Assets Board relating to the educational establishments listed in his answer of 18 January, Official Report, columns 513–14; and when those decisions were made.

Mr. Robin Squire: Since 18 January 1994, my right hon. Friend has issued final directions in respect of the following cases that were referred by the Education Assets Board:

Grant-Maintained Schools

Wymondham College, Norfolk

Direction: that a debit balance in the authority's books of account did not transfer to the governing body of the school.

Date: 22 February 1994

Epsom and Ewell High School, Surrey

Direction: that the liability for a leasing agreement did not transfer to the governing body of the school.

Date: 20 December 1994

Higher Education Institutions

University of West of England/Bath College of HE

Direction: no provision in the loan agreement to be concluded between the Avon Authority and the EAB in respect of the institutions concerned for the loans to be secured. No amendment relating to the repayment period and the terms on which the loans are repaid.

Date: 25 February 1994

In addition, my right hon. Friend has issued "minded to" directions in respect of the following cases:

Grant-Maintained Schools

Great Barr School, Birmingham—26 September 1994

Dartford Grammar School for Girls, Kent—11 November 1994

Abbotswood School, Hampshire—25 November 1994

Pate's Grammar School, Gloucestershire—23 January 1995

Further Education Institutions

Lincolnshire College of Agriculture and Horticulture—September 1994

A further referral from the Education Assets Board involving a dispute between Thamesview school and Kent county council was withdrawn as a result of the parties involved reaching agreement.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the membership of the Education Assets Board and indicate whether its deliberations and reports are made public.

Mr. Robin Squire: The membership of the Education Assets Board is as follows:

Mr. R. Suddards CBE, DL (Chairman)
Mr. B. Arthur CBE
Mr. K. Bridge
Ms K. Buckley
Mr. H. Couch
Mr. M. Edwards CBE, QC
Miss A. Lees
Mr. P. Lewis
Mrs. M. Ryding
Mr. A. Soames
Mr. A Salomons
Mr. S. Hoare (Chief Executive and ex-officio member)

The board's deliberations are not made public. Its decisions are reported to the parties directly concerned. There is nothing to prevent them from making the board's decisions public.

Bath University

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what representations she has received about her Department's decision to withdraw funding from the postgraduate translation and interpretation course at Bath University; and how many of these included offers of funding from commerce and industry;

(2) what considerations underlay the withdrawal of funds from the postgraduate translation and interpretation clause at Bath university; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received three letters about the withdrawal of bursary support for students undertaking the postgraduate diploma in language studies—interpreting and translating—course at Bath university. No offers of funding from commerce or industry have been received.

The decision to withdraw funding was taken as part of the review of public expenditure for 1995–96 in which my right hon. Friend takes account of demands and priorities for spending.

Staffordshire Local Education Authority

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the annual increase in central Government payments to Staffordshire local education authority in each of the past 10 years; what would have been the increase required to remove the effect of inflation; and what approximate savings he expects to have arrived as a result of the transfer of schools to local management.

Mr. Robin Squire: The system of local government finance before 1990–91 was different in structure and coverage to the present system of standard spending assessments on which central Government payments to Staffordshire county council are mainly based. The table sets out the annual underlying change in each of the years since 1990–91 in Staffordshire's education standard spending assessment, after allowing for local authority changes of function and inflation. Savings which schools and local education authorities may have made specifically as a result of the introduction of local management of schools are not readily quantifiable by the Department.

Year
1990–91 to 1991–92	increase of 9.3 per cent.
1991–92 to 1992–93	increase of 2.6 per cent.
1992–93 to 1993–94	decrease of 0.5 per cent.
1993–94 to 1994–95	increase of 0.6 per cent.
1994–95 to 1995–96	decrease of 2.0 per cent.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the rules and regulations in her Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which her Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on her Department's manpower.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has not withdrawn any rules and regulations in the last 12 months, other than through the legal process of revocation and replacement. We have, however, reduced the amount of detailed prescription in the revised national curriculum to be introduced from August 1995 and have amended the assessment arrangements to reduce the amount of time required of teachers for this purpose.

The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed.

The manpower implications are taken into account in the Department's manpower plans which will be published in the Department's annual report in March.

Nursery Education

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her estimate of the annual cost of extending nursery provision to all three and four-year-old children in the United Kingdom based on the current average cost of such provision; and what provision there is within her Department's budget for such an extension of nursery education for each of the years (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99.

Mr. Forth: Costs would depend on the type of provision and the balance between full-time and part-time provision. Funding will be determined as part of the development of detailed proposals on how to achieve the target for expansion of pre-school provision set by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

The Department's expenditure plans for 1995–96 do not include provision for the extension of nursery education. Provision for future years will be considered during the 1995 public expenditure survey.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans the Student Loans Company has to purchase a new computer facility; what companies have been invited to tender; what advantages the new system will have over the existing system; what is the estimated cost of the new system; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the acting chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Regional Operations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff her Department employs on a regional basis in each standard English region; what is the cost of running these regional operations; what was the total budget for each region in the latest available year; and what are the main purposes for which the budget is used.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department as currently constituted does not operate on a regional basis; its headquarters functions are carried out in offices in London and Darlington. The Department's only executive agency, the Teachers Pensions Agency, which is responsible for administration of the teachers' superannuation scheme, also operates from the Darlington site.

In 1993–94, the latest year for which firm figures are available, the Department's overall staff number—including the TPA—was 2,101 of which 1,214 were based in London and 887 in Darlington.

In 1993–94, the total net provision for running costs was £94.3 million, with final outturn of £88.4 million. Of this expenditure, approximately £59 million was attributed to London and £29.4 million to Darlington.

Ofsted

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what costs have been incurred in furniture and fittings at Ofsted's new offices in London; and what were the removal costs from its old offices.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

TRANSPORT

European Union

13. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will next meet his counterparts in the European Union; and what is on the agenda for the meeting.

Dr. Mawhinney: I expect to meet my European colleagues at the Transport Council in Brussels on 13 and 14 March. The Council will cover a range of transport issues, primarily in the rail, road and maritime sectors.

Buses

14. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding standardisation of buses within the European Union and the implications for passengers.

Dr. Mawhinney: My Department has received a number of representations, mainly from manufacturers and operators, about the implications for the United Kingdom bus industry and its customers of an EC proposal for a draft directive on bus construction.

Red Routes

15. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made with red routes in London.

Mr. Norris: The red route pilot scheme in north and east London has been running since 1991. The traffic director is progressively implementing the rest of the 315-mile red route network with the objective of having it operational by the year 2000.

29. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the cost of red routes.

Mr. Norris: The total cost of design, development and implementation of red route measures is estimated to be around £130 million at 1995–96 prices. This is in addition to the expenditure of some £5 million at outturn prices on the pilot red route.

A34

17. Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his plans for the provision of a bypass for Newbury on the A34.

Dr. Mawhinney: The scheme for an A34 bypass of Newbury remains in the road programme. However, against the background of continuing public concern I wish to be quite sure that the present proposal is the right one. I have therefore put the scheme on hold and asked the Highways Agency to look again at the plans for relieving congestion at Newbury and to report back as soon as possible.

Relief Road, Birmingham

18. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the implications of the standing advisory committee on trunk road assessments report on the Birmingham northern relief road project.

Mr. Watts: After considering the Government's response to the SACTRA report on generated traffic and the Department's formal guidance, the BNRR public inquiry has been provided with a statement identifying how the Department views the impacts of SACTRA's findings. It is now for the inspector to consider that statement and the results of the on-going work which it identifies.

I am satisfied that the inquiry is the proper forum to consider any implications.

Rail Privatisation

19. Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the impact rail privatisation will have on the Network SouthEast, south central division.

Mr. Watts: Privatisation is designed to halt and reverse the decline in railway use. For the first time there will be a contractual commitment to specified levels of service. Details of passenger service requirements for Network SouthCentral will be released later this year.

20. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that bids by private sector organisations to operate train services are considered with efficiency and speed by his Department, the Rail Regulator and the Franchising Director.

Mr. Watts: The consideration of proposals from private sector organisations to operate train services is primarily the responsibility of the Rail Regulator and, for franchised services, of the Franchising Director. Both are aware of the need to deal efficiently and quickly with proposals, subject to taking the steps necessary to fulfil their statutory functions and duties.

27. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the directors of Scotrail to discuss the proposed privatisation plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend met directors of British Rail's 25 train operating units, including Scotrail, on 27 January. He has no immediate plans for further meetings with Scotrail.

Cross-border Rail Services

21. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with British Rail regarding cross-border services between Scotland and England.

Mr. Watts: Anglo-Scottish rail services is one of a number of subjects which have been discussed at regular meetings with British Rail.

A41

22. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the A41 Aston Clinton bypass.

Mr. Watts: Recently we have received the inspector's report following a small public inquiry at the end of November 1994. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment are considering the inspector's recommendations and will announce their joint decision in due course.

Northern Line

23. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Northern line will be provided with renewed signalling and electrical apparatus.

Mr. Norris: The timing of individual schemes within their overall investment programme is a matter for London Underground. I understand that both these items are in the future programme, and that detailed design work for a new signalling system is under way.

Railway Development, Stratford

24. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited Stratford in east London to discuss railway developments.

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the Stratford promoter group on 2 February. It is my intention to visit Stratford in response to the hon. Member's invitation.

Road Safety

25. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what review he has undertaken of the relative contributions to road safety from (a) wire-rope and (b) solid motorway central barriers.

Mr. Norris: The wire rope safety fence and the solid motorway central barrier—that is, the vertical concrete safety barrier—have performed satisfactorily, both in trial testing and in-service, contributing to the overall safety of road users.

No specific comparative review of the two systems has been carried out as the two designs are not equivalent alternatives in total performance terms. The deployment of any type of vehicle restraint system is dependent on the requirements and constraints of the particular site, and this may also include consideration of prevailing weather and environmental conditions. The Highways Agency, however, has a continuing commitment to keep their performance under review.

London Underground

26. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the final route for the new Chelsea to Hackney underground line.

Mr. Norris: I understand that London Underground Limited plans to consult on alternative options for the line. Following consultations, it may then apply to the Secretary of State to amend the route as currently safeguarded.

Heathrow

28. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had on the implications of a proposed terminal 5 at Heathrow airport for the inhabitants of south west London.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Highways Agency has consulted local authorities, residents and other interested organisations on trunk road improvements which it considers necessary if the proposed Heathrow terminal 5 goes ahead. I have had no other consultations on implications of the proposed terminal.

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what responsibilities he has in relation to the Forth rail bridge.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack assumed responsibility for the Forth rail bridge when it was established as a Government-owned company.

Nuclear Waste Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make an assessment of the relevance for the future shipment of vitrified high level radioactive waste to Japan of the report, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Norris: The report is being considered.

Interlogic Control Engineering

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates there have been meetings, correspondence or telephone conversations between British Rail officials and civil servants in his Department about (a) the privatisation of Interlogic Control Engineering and (b) the closure of Interlogic's York office.

Mr. Watts: Department of Transport officials are in touch with counterparts at the British Railways Board from time to time to discuss a range of issues, including businesses such as Interlogic Control Engineering.

British Rail Redundancies

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) compulsory and (b) voluntary redundancies have been made by BR in each of the last five years; and how many it expects to make in 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Watts: The number of redundancies made in each of the last five years was as follows:

Year	Number
1989–90	1,505
1990–91	792
1991–92	670
1993–94	7,273

All the redundancies were voluntary. Around a further 5,000 voluntary redundancies are expected by the end of 1994–95. There are no figures available for 1995–96.

Agricultural Vehicles

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the regulations currently in force to prevent of agricultural vehicles from leaving large amounts of mud on public roads.

Mr. Norris: Sections 148 and 161(1), of the Highways Act 1980 make it an offence to deposit any thing, including mud and manure, on roads. Section 149 of the Highways Act 1980 enables highway authorities to take action against anyone who deposits anything on the highway that constitutes a nuisance or danger. Section 6 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 makes it an offence to cause anything to be left on the road if it would be obvious to a reasonable person that to do so would be dangerous.

Coaches

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 588, what will be the baseline for the comparative casualty data.

Mr. Steven Norris: Detailed data relating to accidents on motorways for at least the last 10 years are kept in the national accident database. The precise baseline is likely to include the years 1994 and 1995 but a longer time series is available, if needed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 588, if he will estimate the fatal and serious injuries relating to the risks of lane changes, and of the incidence of harsh braking for crashes in the outside lane of two lane, three lane and four lane carriageways.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost. A detailed examination will be made in due course as part of the assessment of the outside lane ban.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, column No. 588, if the Wootton Jeffrey report has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Norris: Yes.

Airports

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to ease pressure on Heathrow and Gatwick by (a) extending existing airports or developing new ones in the south-east and (b) transferring traffic to existing regional airports.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 2 February at column 861-62.

Vehicle Excise Prosecutions

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the changes to the procedures for VED prosecutions over the last six months; and if he will list the vehicle registration office areas to which these changes apply.

Mr. Norris: There have been no changes to procedures for VED prosecutions over the last six months.

Health and Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 881, how many employees of his Department (a) have applied for facility time to attend health and safety courses, and (b) have applied for facility time to act as health and safety representatives in the financial years (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94 and (iii) 1994–95 to date.

Mr. Norris: The Department does not keep a central record of health and safety representatives and those who have attended training courses. Duly appointed safety representatives are permitted time off with pay to attend basic training facilities approved by the TUC or further training similarly approved where such training is necessary to meet changes in relevant legislation.

The Department also permits duly appointed safety representatives to take such time off with pay during working hours as is necessary for performing their functions under section 2(4) of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Safety Representation and Safety Committee Regulations 1977, as amended.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 881, if he will (a) list and (b) place in the Library all documents which refer to the reduction of stress levels and sick absences amongst his staff.

Mr. Norris: The complete information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I will, however arrange for the following departmental documents to be placed in the Library:

— "What everyone should know about stress"

— "Coping with stress—a guide for line managers"

— "Coping with change"

— "Coping with a major personal crisis"

— "Stress: recognising and coping with stress"

— Departmental Notices 19/92 and 19/94—Managing Sickness Absence

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 881, if he will list the programmes listed under DVLA which apply to the vehicle registration offices.

Mr. Norris: The following health initiatives are available to staff working in the agency's vehicle registration offices:

health screening

interest free loans for the purchase of bicycles for home to office travel.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 881, if he will list for the financial years (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94 the funds his Department spent on the "Look After Your Heart" programme; and if he will list the amounts he has allocated for this programme in (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96 and (iii) 1996–97.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport's spending on the "Look After Your Heart" programme was £6,645 in 1992–93 and £2,317 in 1993–94.

A total of £6,500 was allocated in 1994–95 and £5,500 provisionally allocated in each of 1995–96 and 1996–97.

In addition, between 1992 and 1995 the Department spent £80,527 on health screen programmes.

Train Stations

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when the results of the risk assessment study conducted by Her Majesty's railway inspectorate relating to the large stepping distances between the platform and train at certain stations with some vehicles will be published.

Mr. Watts: This work is expected to be completed by mid-1995. The results of the research will then be assessed to indicate what further action should be taken.

Vehicle Registration Office

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the process by which casual staff are recruited in the vehicle registration office network.

Mr. Norris: Once a need has been identified, casual staff are recruited through the local job centre which supplies suitable candidates for interview by vehicle registration office managerial staff.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by vehicle registration office, the number of VED offences submitted for prosecution for each week from 1 October 1994 to 31 December 1994, and for the corresponding period in 1993.

Mr. Norris: Records are kept only on a monthly basis. The following tables show the figures for the last quarter of 1993 and 1994. They include a number of cases returned unheard by the courts and unsuccessful prosecutions which together represent less than 7 per cent. of the overall total.

Disabled Staff

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the initiatives his Department is to undertake for disabled staff.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport has a programme of initiatives for staff with disabilities. For 1995 the programme will include:

—the continued provision of a budget for the purchasing of aids and equipment for staff;

—publicity to ensure that all staff are aware of their responsibilities under the OPSS "Programme for Action to Achieve Equality of Opportunity in the Civil Service for Disabled People";

—the maintenance of a register detailing the access arrangements and facilities available for staff in buildings used by the department;

—the use of the Department's Disability Information Package in 1995 training events; —the facility to offer written information in braille or on audio cassette.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to move or to alter the library of the Transport Research Laboratory.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend will be considering the future of the library at the Transport Research Laboratory with his financial and other advisers in preparing the transfer of the laboratory to the private sector.

Railway Stations (Disabled Access)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many railway stations in the United Kingdom are inaccessible to wheelchair users.

Mr. Watts: The facilities available for disabled passengers vary from place to place. The leaflet "British Rail and Disabled Travellers" is designed to help disabled passengers plan their rail journeys and gives contact details for British Rail managers who will provide passengers with information about their nearest suitably designed and equipped station. A copy of this leaflet is available in the House Library.

"London Direct"

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many copies of "London Direct" published by London Transport with the Evening Standard of 23 January, have been purchased by his Department.

Mr. Norris: None, apart from those included with copies of the Evening Standard purchased by the Department's library and press office.

Coventry Airport

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 98, what considerations underlie the decision to allow the resumption of flights containing calves from Coventry airport before the completion of the inquiry into breaches of the Air Navigation Order of flights containing calves from that airport in November and December 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: In view of concern about the safety of flights carrying calves from Coventry airport as a result of the Air Algerie crash on 21 December 1994, the Department has taken additional steps to monitor the safety of any aircraft wishing to perform similar flights. Before considering any application, the Department has requested the Civil Aviation Authority to carry out an inspection of the aircraft in order that a check can be made to ensure that the aircraft can operate safely into Coventry airport and that the aircraft will be operated in accordance with international safety standards.

Two applications for the carriage of calves have been received since the crash of the Air Algerie aircraft. Neither of these applications involved airlines which are the subject of the current inquiry being conducted by the Department into possible breaches in November and December of article 88 of the Air Navigation Order 1989. Before the Department considered these applications, the CAA was asked to inspect the aircraft to be used for the flights. In the first case, involving a Nigerian Boeing 707 aircraft owned by ADC Airlines, my Department decided not to grant any further applications by ADC Airlines until it had discussed the CAA's findings with the Nigerian authorities. In the second case, involving AN26 aircraft operated by a Russian airline Atlant Soyuz, a permit was granted only after some modifications had been made to the aircraft and the Department had been satisfied that the airline had met all the Department's normal requirements for cargo charter flights.

Regional Operations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff his Department employs on a regional basis in each standard English region; what is the cost of running these regional operations; what was the total budget for each region in the latest available year; and what are the main purposes for which the budget is used.

Mr. Norris: The numerical and financial information requested is contained in the following table.

The regional programme budget is used for statutory advertising associated with orders under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 (£430k); provision of venues for public inquiries into orders under TCPA 1990 (£20k); and consultancies and studies (£1,300k).

Travel Pass

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects an agreement to be reached between the London boroughs on details for a new travel pass for London's pensioners and disabled people; what details of it he can disclose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 416.

Dartford M25 Crossing

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when and by what means his Department ascertained the expected additional traffic movements of cars and lorries using the Dartford M25 crossing following the opening of the international station planned for Ebbsfleet in Kent.

(2) what is the estimated number of additional car and lorry movements which are expected to use the Dartford M25 crossing in each of the first five years following the opening of the international station planned for Ebbsfleet, Kent.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 2 February 1995]: Expected additional traffic flows on the Dartford-Thurrock river crossing on the M25 resulting from the opening of an intermediate station at Ebbsfleet were set out on Ove Arup and Partners' final report on Ebbsfleet traffic impacts, which was published in January 1994 at the same time as Union Railways' report to the Government on the channel tunnel rail link. I regret that the report does not provide the information in the form requested but the following figures show the number of traffic movements, additional to expected levels of traffic, generated by a station at Ebbsfleet:

	AM peak	PM peak
2001:
To Crossing	77 (+1.4 per cent.)	154 (+3.3 per cent.)
From Crossing	135 (+3.7 per cent.)	173 (+3.8 per cent.)
2011:
To Crossing	103 (+1.6 per cent.)	205 (+3.8 per cent.)
From Crossing	180 (+4.1 per cent.)	231 (+4.3 per cent.)

The expectation is that these movements will be almost entirely from non-lorry traffic.

Channel Tunnel Security

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who are the inspectors in his Department whom he referred to in his oral statement of 30 January on channel tunnel security, Official Report, columns 685–90; what are their terms or reference; under what powers they are appointed; and what are their statutory powers and responsibilities.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 3 February 1995]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has, under the terms of the Channel Tunnel (Security) Order 1994, authorised officials from the transport security division of this Department to inspect the security arrangements in place to ensure that the required standards are, and continue to be, met. The responsibilities and powers of the inspectors are set out in article 28 of the order.

InterCity

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many InterCity trains currently run daily each way Monday to Friday between (a) Paddington and Cardiff and (b) Paddington and Swansea; and how many will be guaranteed under the passenger service requirement for Great Western.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The frequencies are set out in the table:

	Current timetable	Draft PSR
Paddington-Cardiff weekday services
Westbound	20	at least 17
Eastbound	20	at least 17
Paddington-Swansea weekday services
Westbound	17	at least 14
Eastbound	18	at least 14

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many InterCity trains will run (a) to Carmarthen and (b) to Fishguard daily under the passenger service requirements for Great Western; and how many currently run to those stations.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The future level of InterCity services to Carmarthen and Fishguard will be determined by the Great Western franchisee.

The current number of InterCity trains to Carmarthen and Fishguard daily are set out in the tables:

Current timetable	Number
Paddington-Carmarthen
Weekdays:
Westbound	1
Eastbound	1
Saturdays:
Westbound	1
Eastbound	1
Sundays:
Eastbound	1

In addition on summer Saturdays Carmarthen will be served by westbound and eastbound trains to Pembroke Dock.

The Franchising Director will include regular services between Swansea and Carmarthen in the PSR for Regional Railways South Wales and West. These trains will provide good connections at Swansea with InterCity services to London.

Current timetable	Number
Paddington-Fishguard:
Winter Sunday-Monday (October to late May):
Westbound	Note 1
Eastbound	1
Summer weekdays:
Westbound	1[1]
Eastbound	1[2]
Summer Sundays:
Westbound	1
Eastbound	2

Note 1: Through service operated on 12 days in the Christmas/New Year period.

Accompanied Baggage

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what accompanied baggage restrictions will be placed on passengers travelling from Paddington to Fishguard following privatisation.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 3 February 1995]: Regulations relating to the carriage of passengers' baggage on trains are set out in the conditions of carriage. These conditions are currently being revised to maintain and improve passengers' rights on rail services provided by private sector operators.

Trans-European Network

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Fishguard to Paddington railway line forms part of the Trans-European route network.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 3 February 1995]: Yes.

Bicycles

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bicycles may be carried on behalf of passengers on trains running between Paddington and Fishguard.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 3 February 1995]: British Rail currently allows the carriage of three bicycles per Great Western high speed trains serving Fishguard and one bicycle per train on other trains serving Fishguard.

BR Networker

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the principal subcontractors adversely affected by the cancellation of British Rail Networker order for 1995.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 3 February 1995]: There has been no cancellation.

Inland Waterways

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what tonnage of freight was carried on the inland waterways of the United Kingdom (a) in 1984 and (b) in 1994.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 3 February 1995]: Non-seagoing freight carried on inland waterways in the United Kingdom was 7 million tonnes in 1984 and 6.4 million tonnes in 1993, the latest year for which figures are available.

A40(M)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what noise abatement measures have been taken to protect the residents of Ickenham from noise pollution at the point where the A40 (M) Western avenue passes between the junction of Long lane, Hillingdon, and Uxbridge circus; and what further measures are planned.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency and I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Michael Shersby, dated 6 February 1995:

The Minister for Transport in London, Steven Norris, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport what noise abatement measures have been taken to protect the residents of Ickenham from noise pollution at the point where the A40(M) Western Avenue passes between the junction of Long Lane, Hillingdon, and Uxbridge Circus; and what further measures are planned.

There were a number of measures taken to reduce the level of traffic noise from the improved A40 trunk road near Hillingdon Circus. These were included in the design and were:-

i) putting the new trunk road in deep cutting;

ii) erecting a noise barrier between residential properties and the trunk road carriageway north of the new road;

iii) providing noise insulation where properties qualify under the Noise Insulation Regulations; and

iv) surfacing the new road in tarmac rather than concrete.

Planting to soften the environmental effect of the new trunk road on its surroundings will be carried out this spring.

Residents who consider that their property has depreciated in value as a result of increased traffic noise from the use of the new road, may be able to claim compensation under Part 1 of the Land Compensation Act 1973. The claim period starts in May this year when notices will appear in the local press.

TREASURY

European Monetary Institute

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total capital and revenue cost of establishing and running the European Monetary Institute at the latest date for which figures are available; and how much of that cost has been incurred by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Nelson: Article 16 of the protocol on the statute of the European Monetary Institute—EMI—annexed to the Maastricht treaty, provides for member states' central banks to make contributions towards the capital resources of the EMI. The resources will be used to generate an income necessary to cover the expenditure of the EMI. The share of the EMI's resources paid by each central bank is calculated according to each member state's population and GDP.—as set out in article 29 of the protocol on the statute of the European system of central banks.

In accordance with article 16 of the EMI protocol, the Council of the EMI has determined that the total capital requirement needed to generate income sufficient to cover the EMI's budgeted expenditure is 615.6 million ecu. The Bank of England's share is 15.35 per cent. The Bank has accordingly contributed 94.5 million ecu—£72.7 million at the end-December 1994 exchange rate. Prior to the capital requirement being established by the council of the EMI the Bank contributed 3.0 million ecu—£2.4 million at the end-December exchange rate—towards the EMI's set-up and running costs during 1994.

The Bank of England made its contribution to the EMI out of its own resources. The central banks of Germany, France and Italy have made larger contributions than the Bank of England.

The budget for the EMI will be published in its annual report in April 1995.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consultations the Government have undertaken with the European Monetary Institute as provided for in article 109f(6) of the treaty on European Union.

Mr. Nelson: In accordance with article 109f(6) of the EC treaty the Government have notified the European Monetary Institute of a number of amendments to the Building Societies Act 1986, which are to be made by an order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the European Commission and the European Monetary Institute to report to the European Council as required by article 109j(1) of the treaty on European Union; and what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the Commission and the EMI on the preparation of the report in respect of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: No date has been set for the reports from the Commission and EMI required by article 109j(1) of the treaty. But for the Council to make the decisions set out in article 109j(3) by 31 December 1996, reports will need to be prepared earlier that year. Her Majesty's Government have had no discussions with the Commission or the EMI about the reports they will prepare.

Own Resources

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and which EEC members have ratified the own resources decision according to their respective constitutional timetables; and what information he has about the likely ratification dates of the remainder.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the replies which I gave to the hon. Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) on Thursday 19 January, Official Report, column 606. Since then, I understand that Greece adopted the own resources decision on 29 December 1994 and the Republic of Ireland on 20 January 1995, in accordance with their constitutional requirements.

Monetary Union

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number and grade of staff in his Department who are currently working on single currency issues.

Mr. Nelson: The number of officials involved in European monetary issues varies from day to day. No officials work exclusively on these issues.

Private Finance Panel

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the members and main interests of the private finance panel; what expenses or other remuneration are offered to its members; and what is the frequency of meetings.

Sir George Young: The members and main interests of the private finance panel are:

Mr. Malcolm R. Bates
Deputy Managing Director, GEC; Non-executive Director, Enterprise Oil.

Sir Christopher Bland
Chairman, NFC plc, Life Sciences International plc and Hammersmith Hospitals trust

Mr. Howard J. Davies
Director General, CBI; Director, GKN plc; Member, NatWest International Advisory Board; Director, BOTB and Business In The Community.

Mr. Allan Gormly CBE
Chairman, Royal Insurance Holdings plc; Joint Deputy Chairman, Trafalgar House plc; Director, National Grid Co. plc, BPB Industries plc, Brixton Estate plc, Eurorail Ltd.

Mr. Hugh R. Jenkins
Chief Executive, Prudential Portfolio Managers; Director, Prudential Corporation; Member, DoE Property Advisory Group.

Mr. Pen Kent
Executive Director, Bank of England.

Ms Sheila V. Masters
Partner, KPMG Peat Marwick; Non-executive Director, Bank of England; Non-executive Member, Inland Revenue Management Board and NHS Policy Board.

Sir Alastair Morton
Co-chairman, Eurotunnel; Chairman, Kent TEC, National Youth Orchestra, and East Kent Initiative; Non-executive Director, National Power and Lucas Industries.

Sir Brian Pearse
Chairman, The Housing Corporation, Lucas Industries, British Invisibles and Young Enterprise; Director, Smith and Nephew plc, Financial Reporting Council, BOTB, London First Centre.

Mr. Neville Simms
Group Chief Executive, Tarmac plc; Non-executive Director, Courtaulds plc.

Mr. Bob Dobbie
Head of Industrial Competitiveness Division, Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Colin Reeves
Director of Finance, NHS Executive.

Mr. Peter Mackay
Secretary, Scottish Office Industry Department.

Mr. Steve Robson
Director (Finance, Regulations and Industry), HM Treasury.

Mr. David Rowlands
Principal Finance Officer, Department of Transport.

Mr. Philip Fletcher
Deputy Secretary (Housing and Urban), Department of the Environment.

No expenses or other remuneration have been offered to panel members for their duties in connection with the panel.

There is no set frequency for meetings of the panel, but there have been three meetings in the last six months.

Revenue Adjudicator

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases have been referred to the revenue adjudicator as complaints arising out of the taxpayers charter; in how many cases the revenue adjudicator has upheld the complaint; what has been the total compensation awarded by the revenue adjudicator following complaints; and what actions have been taken by the adjudicator to monitor and improve the performance of the office in which complaints have been upheld.

Sir George Young: The adjudicator has received 3,794 complaints since her office opened on 1 May 1993. She has taken up 717 of these for full investigation. Of the 359 cases she has settled, she has found wholly or partly in favour of the complainant in 195 cases. She has recommended that the Inland Revenue pay compensation in 90 of these. The total compensation recommended was £37,181. The Inland Revenue has accepted all these recommendations. The adjudicator meets senior Inland Revenue managers on a regular basis to discuss her recommendations and views.

It is for Inland Revenue managers to decide what actions need to be taken to improve performance in any particular area in the light of adjudicator's recommendations and views. The Revenue has assured me that it does attach great importance to improving performance where they have been at fault.

The 3,077 cases which the adjudicator did not take up for full investigation were mainly ones where the complainant had not first tried to sort out the complaint through the Inland Revenue's own complaints system. In these cases, the adjudicator put the complainant in touch with the right person in the Inland Revenue, and where necessary helped the complainant clarify the terms of the complaint.

Scotch Whisky

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total receipts which have accrued to the Exchequer in each of the last five years from sales of Scotch whisky (a) abroad and (b) in the domestic market.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Firm data on duty receipts are available only for total spirits. Estimates can be made for all home-produced whisky and these are as follows:

Estimated duty and consequential VAT on whisky/whiskey

	£ million
1989–90	748
1990–91	835
1991–92	856
1992–93	814

Duty and VAT are not charged on sales of Scotch whisky abroad.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of expected receipts to the Exchequer from sales of Scotch whisky (a) abroad and (b) in the domestic market for the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Firm data on duty receipts are available only for total spirits. The current spirits forecast for the financial year 1994–95 is £1.7 billion, this cannot be broken down to Scotch whisky.

The Exchequer receives no income from sales of Scotch whisky abroad.

Credit Unions

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to modify the legislation and regulations governing (a) the management of credit unions, (b) their accountability to members and (c) the amounts of money loaned to members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Government announced two proposals on credit unions in January 1994. One extends categories of membership; the other increases the limit on the size of individual shareholdings and loans. A consultation document will be issued on these and other related measures. Subject to the response, the intention is to implement them through an order under section 1 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994.

Power Generators (Share Sales)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the costs incurred so far on the proposed sale of Her Majesty's Government shares in National Power and PowerGen; and if he will estimate future costs associated with this sale.

Sir George Young: The costs of the National Power and PowerGen share offer will be reported to Parliament after the sale has been completed. Sales proceeds will be appropriated-in-aid of the expenses of the sale. Because a large proportion of the costs are dependent upon the strike prices obtained for the shares in the international offers, it would be potentially misleading to the House for me to estimate the total costs for this sale at this point.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the solicitors, banks, brokers, advertising agencies and public relations companies appointed to advise on the sale of Her Majesty's Government shares in National Power and PowerGen, with a statement of fees incurred so far in each case.

Sir George Young: The table shows, in the order of their appointment, the appointments of solicitors, banks, brokers, advertising agencies and PR companies made by HM Government for the National Power and PowerGen share offer. Fees paid to firms as part of the privatisation programme are treated as commercially confidential. The National Audit Office expects to examine the sale in due course. If it does so and a report is published by the Comptroller and Auditor General, the total fees paid to advisers will be quantified.

International Terminal, Ebbsfleet

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he, other Ministers or former Ministers or officials in his Department discussed matters relating to the international terminal at Ebbsfleet with representatives of Decision Makers at any function at No. 11 Downing street in June or July 1993.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 23 January 1995]: There is no record of any function at No 11 Downing street in June or July 1993 at which representatives of Decision Makers were present.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Ministers in his Department formally or informally met Mr. Mark Pennington and discussed Ebbsfleet.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 23 January 1995]: According to Treasury records, no Treasury Ministers have met Mr. Mark Pennington and discussed Ebbsfleet.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 1 February 1995]: The severance payments for which special advisers are eligible are related to their salaries. The salaries of advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings and are confidential. The total severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years year are summarised in the table.

Year	£
1990	105,771
1991	28,078
1992	188,803
1993	34,446
1994	56,131

Tax Loopholes

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the loss of revenue to the Exchequer resulting from exploitation of the capital gains tax loophole identified in clause 43 of the Finance Bill 1995; and; how much revenue annually he estimates would accrue following its closure.

Sir George Young [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The known level of avoidance up to the closure of the loophole identified in clause 43 of the Finance Bill 1995 was low and the revenue loss is estimated to be negligible. However if not closed, this loophole would result in the loss of a significant amount of tax as the level of avoidance is expected to escalate once the loophole becomes well known. This loss could amount to many tens of millions of pounds.

SCOTLAND

Council Housing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are on waiting lists for council houses in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and what steps he is taking to provide public housing for such persons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Reliable information on waiting list applicants is not held centrally. Substantial resources have been made available to local authorities to enable them to meet housing needs in their areas. In addition, Scottish Homes, through its development programme, supports the provision of new and improved houses by housing associations, housing co-operatives and private sector developers across Scotland.

Psychiatric Beds

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many acute psychiatric beds are needed in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole to achieve an average bed occupancy of 85 per cent.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for health boards to determine levels of bed provision for their population based on consideration of local assessments of need.

NHSiS—Psychiatric beds[1]; by area; year ending 30 September 1994

	Actual		Estimated
	Average available staffed beds	Percentage occupancy	Average available staffed beds required for 85 per cent. occupancy[4]
Scotland	14,399	88.8	15,043
Strathclyde[2]	6,228	90.3	6,613
Inverclyde[3]	268	87.9	277

It should be noted that some of these figures are subject to final agreement of opening balances with health boards.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will state, in respect of the appointments of NHS trusts in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole the salaries awarded, the terms of office and the number of hours such appointees are expected to work each working week;

(2) what time commitment is expected of (a) NHS trust chairman and (b) NHS trust non-executive directors.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Non-executives of NHS trust boards throughout Scotland are appointed for terms of up to four years. Chairmen are remunerated at one of three different rates—£15,125, £17,145 and £19,285 per annum—according to the size of the trust's budget. Non-executive directors other than chairmen receive £5,000 per annum. Trust chairmen are expected to commit two to three days per week to trust work and non-executive directors about three days per month, but many exceed those levels.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what hospital and related trusts have negotiated their own terms and conditions of employment, including pay, in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No hospital or trust in Scotland has yet introduced its own pay and terms and conditions of service for all its staff.

Almost half of the 39 trusts in Scotland have departed to varying extents from the centrally negotiated terms and conditions of service for some groups of their staff.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to require NHS trusts (a) to hold meetings in public and (b) to publish minutes of all such meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: NHS trusts are already required to hold one public meeting each year at which their audited accounts and annual report are presented. It is a matter for trust boards to decide whether to hold more meetings in public.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the level of co-operation among hospital and related trusts in the provision of services in (a) Strathclyde and (b) the rest of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. The provision of services is a matter between the health boards and the NHS trusts. Providers will contract with the health board to deliver the best quality of care for the patients in the most effective, efficient and economical arrangement appropriate.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS trusts have confidentiality clauses in their contracts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of a contract of employment are matters for the employer and the member of staff concerned.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the NHS trusts in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole which have entered into formal agreements with Norwich Union Healthcare; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None of the NHS trusts in Scotland have entered into formal agreements with Norwich Union Healthcare.

Any advertising material which claims such agreements is inaccurate.

Long-stay Mental Hospitals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many long-stay mental hospitals have been granted trust in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: With the exception of the State hospital, all long-stay mental hospitals in mainland Scotland enjoy the benefits of NHS trust status.

Private Medical Insurance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of people with (a) private dental insurance and (b) private medical insurance in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No information is available on private health insurance.

Life Sentences

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) men and (b) women currently serving a life prison sentence have been informed they will never be released from prison; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not informed any life prisoner that he or she will never be released from prison. A mandatory life prisoner may be released only on the recommendation of the Parole Board and after consultation with the judiciary. My right hon. Friend takes into account both risk to the public and criminal justice factors in deciding whether and when to refer any case to the Parole Board for its recommendation. Any recommendation made by the sentencing judge in open court as to the minimum period the prisoner should serve, including a natural life recommendation, would be a significant but not binding factor.

Violent Assaults

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many violent assaults were inflicted upon (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) other members of hospital and medical centre staff in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Private Nursing Homes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) private nursing homes for the elderly and (b) residential homes for the elderly have been closed down and for what reasons in (i) Strathcylde and (ii) Scotland as a whole in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: With regard to nursing homes, this information is not held centrally. This is a matter for individual health boards as registering authorities, which have the power under section 2 of the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938, as amended, to cancel registration at any time if they consider that standards are not being maintained.

The information on the number of residential care homes is as follows:

	Local Authority	Registered Private and Voluntary	Total
1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992
Strathclyde	0	4	4
Scotland	4	18	22
1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993
Strathclyde	2	3	5
Scotland	4	6	10
1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994
Strathclyde	9	2	11
Scotland	17	7	24

Information on the reasons for these closures is not held centrally. The data are not necessarily indicative of the quality of care provided. Most residential homes in Scotland maintain high standards of service provision.

Credit Unions

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many credit unions are located in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole; and what is (i) the average membership and (ii) the total membership.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: While the Scottish Office provides financial support through the urban programme for some of the credit unions operating in Scotland, the Secretary of State has no overall responsibility for credit unions. I understand however, from the Association of British Credit Unions Ltd., that in June 1994 there were 79 credit unions in Scotland, of which 65 were in Strathclyde. There was a total estimated Scottish membership of some 51,000 at that date. No separate figure for Strathclyde is available.

School Meals

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils aged (a) under seven years of age (b) between seven and 11 years of age and (c) over 11 years of age, in each local authority area in Scotland, receive school meals; and what is the total number who receive free school meals.

Mr. Lang: Information on the number of pupils receiving school meals is not available for the age breakdown requested, but in respect of each school sector. Information, in respect of school meals census day in January 1994, is detailed in the following table:

	Number of pupils receiving school meals				Number of pupils receiving free school meals

[2] Includes 7 special departments where data has been included in secondary school figures.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Lang: Between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994, the Scottish Office has repealed the following regulations:

The Rabies Virus Order 1979 (No. 135).

The Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal)(Scotland) Regulations 1977 and the Control of Pollution (Licensing of Waste Disposal) (Scotland)(Amendment) Regulations both superseded on 1 May 1994 by the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994.

The Milk Marketing Schemes (Certification of Revocation)(Scotland) Order 1994.

The Agricultural Marketing Act 1958 Part 1 (Certification of Cessation of Effect in Relation to Milk) Order 1994.

The Poultry Meat (Hygiene)(Scotland) Regulations 1976, as amended.

The Welfare and Livestock (Intensive Units) Regulations 1978.

The Welfare of Battery Hens Regulations 1987.

The Welfare of Calves Regulations 1987.

The Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1990.

The Welfare of Pigs Regulations 1991.

The Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1992.

As part of the deregulation initiative, the Scottish Office operates a continuing programme of review of the regulations, forms and rules for which it has responsibility, with a view to identifying areas where there is scope for repeal or simplification. Any proposals which arise from this process over the next 12 months will be announced as appropriate when relevant consultations are completed.

Manpower implications for the Scottish Office are taken into account in the Department's central manpower plans which are published in the annual departmental report.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each independent school in Scotland covered by the assisted places scheme in descending order the amounts which each school received for the financial year 1994–95, the number of pupils on the school's roll, the number of pupils covered by the assisted places scheme, the proportion of the school roll covered by the assisted places scheme and the fees charged by each of the schools for assisted places pupils.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1995, column 351-52]: The information requested is detailed in the following table. The assisted places scheme is administered and statistical information collected in respect of each school session and not by reference to financial years. The information provided relates to fee remission grant allocations for the 1994–95 school session and to pupil numbers in the schools in the autumn term of that school session:

Enterprise Networks

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what annual budgets of each of the local enterprise companies were within the Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Island Enterprise networks in each of the years since these bodies were established.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 February 1995]: The allocation of annual budgets to local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for their respective networks. I have asked the chairmen of these bodies to write to the hon. Member.

PRIME MINISTER

Honours

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister how many persons were recommended for consideration for an MBE, OBE or CBE in 1994; how many were proposed by members of the public via the new procedure; and how many awards in each category were made in 1994.

The Prime Minister: Some 3,000 recommendations were considered for the new year and birthday honours lists 1994, of which around 500 were supported by members of the public. It is not possible to break down the recommendations into categories, but the number of awards made were: CBE 201 awards; OBE 493; and MBE 1,202.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers and former Ministers have given evidence to the Scott inquiry.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to the reply, 24 January, column 188]: I have been asked to reply.

I wish to add the names of the following as Ministers who have given written evidence only to Sir Richard Scott's inquiry:

The Baroness Denton of Wakefield CBE
The right hon. Richard Needham

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 26 January to the hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw), Official Report, column 300, what were the total costs of operating the Government Departments and next steps agencies in the economic planning regions; what is the total budget at their disposal; and to which regions they are attached.

The Prime Minister: The running costs of civil departments in the United Kingdom totalled £14.6 billion in 1993–94.

Information is not held by economic planning region and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

British Association of Sheep Exporters

Mr. Morley: To ask the Prime Minister when (a) he last met and (b) he was last contacted by the chairman of the British Association of Sheep Exporters.

The Prime Minister: I have not met representatives of the British Association of Sheep Exporters and as far as I am aware they have not asked to meet me.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Ex-carers

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Government's measures to help the long-term unemployed back into work apply to ex-carers who have been claiming invalid care allowance and who may have been out of the job market for longer than two years.

Mr. Hague: An ex-carer returning to work could be eligible for:

Family Credit with the extra £10 premium if returning to work of 30 hours or more a week;

the Back to Work Bonus if they had part-time earnings while on Income Support; the new benefit for couples and single people without children if they were within the pilot areas.

The four-week extension of housing benefit, and the one-year national insurance holiday for employers, are aimed at people who have been continuously unemployed, or a lone parent, for the appropriate qualifying periods—six months for the housing benefit extension and two years for the national insurance holiday. Present plans are that periods in which income support was received while an ex-carer was exempt from the requirement to be available for work would not count towards those qualifying periods. I am considering this particular issue and will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Child Support Agency computer system was, or is planned to be upgraded, as mentioned in his answer of 21 July 1994, Official Report, column 617; what is the total number of client accounts; how many of these client accounts are in arrears; and how many arrears agreements are in force.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 6 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of client accounts and arrears of child maintenance.

The Child Support Computer System is being continually enhanced to reflect policy and operational changes and additional management requirements. Some of the information that you require is now available.

As at the end of November the Agency was dealing with a total of 165,000 accounts that had been set up following the completion of a maintenance assessment for the collection of maintenance through the Agency collection service.

In 26,000 cases the absent parent (AP) was up to date with their payments. In 58,300 they had not met their liability in full and in 70,700 no payments had been made.

There are a further 134,000 cases where an assessment has been completed and the AP agreed to pay maintenance direct to the parent with care.

In some cases, where maintenance has not been paid in full, an agreement with the AP has been reached that arrears of maintenance be rescheduled for payment at a future date. Information on the number of accounts in which there has been an agreement to re-schedule arrears is not currently available. Enhancements to the agency's information systems should provide for this information to be available by the end of the financial year.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to tackle the problems that the Child Support Agency is having in assessing and enforcing child support maintenance from absent parents who are self-employed.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 6 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about measures taken by the Child Support Agency to improve the assessment and enforcement of child maintenance from absent parents who are self-employed.

The White Paper published by the Government on 23 January ("Improving Child Support"—cm 2745) includes proposals to create a new interim assessment for the self employed, together with other measures to address problems that have arisen when dealing with these cases.

The Agency is also considering separately other options available to improve enforcement of maintenance assessments made against self employed absent parents.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care have currently been waiting (a) one month, (b) two months, (c) three months, (d) six months and (e) one year to receive their first maintenance payment through the Child Support Agency from the date of first application; and what percentage of applications each group represents;

(2) how many parents with care have waited (a) one month, (b) two months, (c) three months, (d) six months and (e) one year from the date of first application since the Child Support Act 1991 came into force to receive their first maintenance payment through the Child Support Agency; and what percentage of applications each group represents.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Clive Betts, dated 3 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the time taken for parents with care to receive their first maintenance payment through the Child Support Agency.

The precise information that you require does not need to be collected in the form that you mention, however, information that you may find helpful will soon be collected; I will write to you again once it is available.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the extra workload created by his recent proposals for changes to the operation of the Child Support Act 1991; what effect it will have on work backlog within the agency; and if he has any plans to recruit extra staff as a result.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Clive Betts, dated 2 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the impact of the recently announced legislative and operational changes to child support on the Child Support Agency.

We do not expect any effect on staffing or an increase in the overall workload or backlog of maintenance assessments following the operational improvements due for implementation in April 1995, over the year as a whole. The benefits arising from these changes are expected to balance out the extra work needed to implement them during this period. In the longer term they will have a beneficial effect on our operations.

Details of the costs arising from the proposed primary legislation will be supplied in the financial memorandum to the Bill.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of deduction from earnings orders that have been issued for each six-month period since the setting up of the Child Support Agency; what consultations he has had with business organisations concerning the extra work involved for employers; and what are his proposals to compensate businesses, with particular reference to particularly small businesses, for the additional burden involved in compulsory employer processings of deduction from earnings orders.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency issued 2,600 deduction from earnings orders in 1993–94. This figure cannot be broken down into six-month periods. Between 1 April and 30 September 1994 11,463 DEOs were issued.

Discussions about DEOs were held with employers through the DSS employers' panel. The legislation relating to the operation of DEOs includes a provision for an employer to deduct up to £1 in respect of his administrative costs from the person's earnings each time a deduction in accordance with the DEO is made.

Maxwell Pensioners

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what contingency plans he has to assist Maxwell pensioners who have deferred pensions when the Cuckney fund runs out in 1996; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have taken a number of exceptional steps to help the Maxwell pensioners, including the setting up of the Maxwell pensioners trust, now chaired by Mrs. Jane Newell. The trust is supporting pension payments while asset recovery work continues. We hope that parties to pensions disputes will now settle them quickly, which would extend the life of the trust and safeguard the position of many deferred pensioners. However, the Government cannot assume responsibilities which properly belong to others.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Two items of legislation for which this Department is responsible and which place an obligation on business or the general public have been withdrawn—as opposed to amended or replaced—during the past 12 months:

From 10 October 1994, regulations 37, 38, 41 and 42 of the Industrial Injuries (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations 1985 were repealed. These required periodic medical examinations of people engaged in certain occupations involving a risk of pneumoconiosis. The savings to the Department was approximately £100,000 per annum in medical and X-ray costs.

The Occupational Pension Schemes (Friendly Societies) Regulations 1976 (SI 1976 No 598) have been revoked with effect from 7 February 1995. These were redundant following introduction of the Friendly Societies Act 1992 which allowed incorporated and registered friendly societies to carry out group insurance without approval.

Neither had an impact on this Department's manpower.

The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed.

Departmental Administration Costs

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the total departmental administration costs for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table:

Expenditure since 1979–80 uplifted by current GDP deflators to 1994–95 prices

Year	£ million
1979–80	2,096
1980–81	2,271
1981–82	2,457
1982–83	2,488
1983–84	2,665
1984–85	2,751
1985–86	2,695
1986–87	2,835
1987–88	3,398
1988–89	3,380
1989–90	3,471
1990–91	3,562
1991–92	3,793
1992–93	4,084
1993–94[2]	4,350
1994–95[2]	4,177

Notes:

[1] Expenditure on total Departmental administration costs is included in table 1 of the Social Security Departmental Report.

[2] These figures will shortly be updated on publication of the Departmental Report in March.

[3] The figures quoted in the table include the grants to Local Authorities for Housing Benefit and Community Charge administration and payment to Department for Employment for the administration of the Unemployment Benefit Office network. These payments were £629 million in 1986–87 and are anticipated to be in the region of £944 million in 1994–95.

Benefits

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department spent or expects to spend in Scotland on (a) income support for mortgage interest and (b) housing benefit in each year between 1991–92 and 1995–96.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table. Information on expected expenditure for income support mortgage interest in 1995–96 will not be available until after the consultation exercise on the proposals announced in the Budget.

Estimated expenditure on income support mortgage interest and housing benefit in Scotland

Year	Estimated expenditure on income support mortgage interest £ million	Estimated expenditure on housing benefit £ million
1991–92	33.1	590
1992–93	32.4	650
1993–94	32.6	730
1994–95	32.6	820
1995–96	n/a	930

Income Support Mortgage Interest figures:

1. Source: Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiries, May 1991–1993 and Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry, February 1994.

2. rounded to nearest hundred thousand.

3. based on estimates on weekly amounts and number of recipients at time of survey.

Housing Benefit figures:

4. the figures underlie those that appear in the 1994 Social Security Departmental Report.

5. figures are rounded to the nearest £10 million.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing (Aid)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 452, on aid to the fishing industry in other EEC countries, if he will obtain from the commission and publish the full list of aid it has approved, along with a list of unauthorised payments it has checked or objected to.

Mr. Jack: A full list of aids to the fishing industry is compiled annually by the Commission, but not published because it contains information supplied by member states on a confidential basis. The UK has pressed for this restriction to be lifted. Some summary information is available in the Commission's periodic surveys of state aids in the European Community. The latest of these covers 1986 to 1990 and is available in the Library of the House.

The Commission does publish details of aids in the Official Journal of the European Communities following their approval. This also contains details of unauthorised aids which the Commission is examining under the procedure set out in article 93(2) of the treaty of Rome, and the subsequent conclusions of such examinations.

Fishing (Conservation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 452, on the application of conservation measures, if he will now request the Commission to progress new technical conservation measures to ban industrial fishing in British waters round the south-west and on the Dogger bank.

Mr. Jack: At the December 1994 Fisheries Council, the Commission agreed to bring forward by 30 June 1995 proposals to improve the technical conservation rules for western waters. The Commission has also been asked by the Council to review the technical conservation measures applying in the North sea. At my instigation, Community scientists are currently examining the effects of fishing and particularly industrial fishing, on the marine ecosystem.

EU Fisheries Ministers will consider the outcome of this work, and appropriate action, at future meetings. I shall consider the UK position in relation to these matters in liaison with the industry.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what funds are available through his Department in the current financial year for coastal protection and repair.

Mr. Jack: This Department offers grant aid to coast protection authorities for new or improved defences designed to protect land from erosion or encroachment by the sea. The supply provision in 1994–95 currently stands at £26 million.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the value of food and drink stocks held by the Government and by European Community bodies as a consequence of agriculture price intervention; and what are the annual costs involved in holding such stocks, including the costs of depreciation.

Mr. Jack: Details for the Community as a whole are contained in annexes 9 and 10 of the annual financial reports of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guarantee section. Details of intervention stocks within the United Kingdom are contained in table 13 of the 1994 Department report by the Ministery of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board, Cm 2053. These publications have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total actual annual expenditure for his Department in each year since 1979 in 1994 prices; and if he will provide a breakdown of each figure to show expenditures on (a) price support measures and (b) set-aside schemes.

Mr. Jack: Information on this subject is contained in the annual appropriation accounts for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Intervention Board executive agency. Information is also available in, "Agriculture in the United Kingdom", which has been produced since 1988 and, prior to then, in the annual review of agriculture White Papers. The data can be expressed in 1994 prices using the published retail prices index information. Copies of the above publications are available in the Library of the House.

Veal Rearing Systems

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the representatives and the countries they represented that were present at the recent Agriculture Ministers meeting which agreed to bring forward the review of veal rearing systems from 1997.

Mr. Jack: The meeting in question was the January Agriculture Council and all EC member states were, as is usual, represented by their Agriculture Ministers, with the exception of Finland, which was represented by the Secretary General of its Agriculture Ministry. The European Commission was represented by Mr. Franz Fischler.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available in full the legal advice he has received as regards the use of article 36 of the treaty of Rome, to stop the export of calves to be reared in the crate system.

Mrs. Browning: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food set out the conclusion which emerges from the legal advice, and the reasons for it, in his letter of 1 February to all right hon. and hon. Members.

Regional Operations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff his Department employs on a regional basis in each standard English region; what is the cost of running these regional operations; what was the total budget for each region in the latest available year; and what are the main purposes for which the budget is used.

Mr. Jack: The Department's regional administrative organisation, consisting of nine regional service centres, employed a total of 1,610 staff as at 1 January 1995 with a budget provision for 1994–95 of £35.4 million, as published in the Supply estimates.

The regional service centres handle the administration of grant and subsidy schemes, licensing and various other services provided mainly to farmers and growers. The present organisation into nine regions was adopted in 1992 and was designed to match the distribution of the farming industry rather than the standard regions used by other Departments.

Apart from the primary regional organisation, there are separate regional structures within the Department for the state veterinary service and various inspectorates, for which information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The executive agency, ADAS, also has its own regional structure.

WALES

Dental Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken by his Department to improve the situation relating to provision of dental services in Gwynedd and in particular Meirionnydd Nant Conwy and the constituency of Caernarfon.

Mr. Richards: Following the Secretary of State's announcement of an extra £2.5 million for dental services in Wales, Gwynedd health authority, along with all other Welsh health authorities, has been invited to bring forward proposals to improve the quality and availability of dental services in its area. Already in this financial year, the Welsh Office has provided an additional £50,000 for the authority to purchase extra treatment sessions from the community dental service.

Gwynedd family health services authority has permission to employ salaried dentists. The Welsh Office is funding all the costs associated with this salaried dental service including the recruitment campaign; the salaries of all staff employed; all other practice expenses; and the costs of converting and equipping dental suites at Caernarfon, Pwllheli and Llanfairfechan.

Location incentive grants are also available from the Welsh Office to attract new general dental practitioners into Gwynedd.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when was his Department's last review of the provision of community dentistry in Wales; what were its fundings; how matters have proceeded since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The subject of community dentistry may be discussed with each of the district health authorities as part of the normal annual review process by the Welsh Office, which assesses their performance jointly with family health services authorities. The district health authorities are responsible for commissioning community dental services in light of local needs and locally determined priorities. They are also responsible for monitoring services.

General Practitioner Fundholders

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to ensure that in the periods of the three final months of the financial year, the patients of non-fundholders are not disadvantaged in respect of patients of fundholders in waiting periods for operations.

Mr. Richards: Hospital treatment for patients of non-fundholding GPs is purchased by district health authorities. The additional waiting times initiative funding of £4 million which my right hon. Friend announced last November should ensure that both the district health authorities and GP fundholders in Wales are able to meet the waiting times targets which they identified in their health plans for 1994–95.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many opted-out schools there are in Wales.

Mr. Richards: Sixteen.

Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Visit)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he visited the constituency of Meirionnydd Nant Conwy; what was the duration of the visit; and what was its purpose.

Mr. Redwood: I visited Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 19 September to see the Ffestiniog railway, the A5 through Pont Padog and the set of the "White Knights" film.

Patients Charter

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost to public funds of the production, printing, distribution and advertising of the patients charter when launched (a) in 1991 and (b) in 1994; and how many copies were printed in each case.

Mr. Richards: The budget for the patients charter in 1991 was £250,000 and £45,000 for the 1994 edition. In 1991, 1,250,000 copies were printed, compared with 301,000 in 1994.

Liquidations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many businesses in Wales went into liquidation in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994.

Mr. Richards: Official estimates of liquidations are compiled for Wales and England combined and are not separately available for Wales.

Estimates of total liquidations for England and Wales for 1992–93 and 1993–94 are 27,829 and 22,058 respectively.

New Businesses

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new businesses were set up in 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Richards: Comprehensive information on the number of new business start-ups in Wales is not available. However, partial information is available from VAT data, though this excludes smaller new business start-ups. This shows that during 1993, the latest year for which data is available, there were some 7,200 registrations for VAT in Wales.

Correspondence

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards signing Welsh language letters from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend's policy is not to sign letters in languages he cannot understand. he replies to correspondence written to him in Welsh by sending a Welsh translation of his reply together with the signed English version.

Conversion Grants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the categories of grant available to convert existing shop premises to residential dwellings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: District councils may make available discretionary home renovation grants to convert empty buildings, including shop premises, into dwellings. Since 1991–92 I have made £19 million available which has created an additional 1,200 dwellings. A further £1.5 million is available next year.

Shopkeeper Grants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the categories of grant available to shopkeepers in Wales to improve and modernise their premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Welsh Office funding of local authority regeneration projects and strategies, through the strategic development scheme, includes in some cases support for grant aid towards the renovation of shops and other properties. They are normally in designated commercial improvement or renewal areas. The Welsh Development Agency's town improvement grant may support external improvement of buildings, including shops, in urban areas. The Welsh Office-through Cadw, Welsh Historic Monuments—may also offer grants on the advice of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales towards the costs of repairs in buildings of outstanding historic or architectural interest.

Grant may also be provided towards external repairs which would make a significant contribution to the enhancement of the preservation of the character of buildings within a conservation area, or form part of a designated town scheme, administered by the local planning authority.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hectares of set-aside land there are in each of the Welsh counties.

Mr. Redwood: The following table shows the area of set-aside land by Welsh Counties as recorded in the agricultural census return of June 1994:

	Hectares
Clwyd	610
Dyfed	2,094
Mid Glamorgan	219
South Glamorgan	430
West Glamorgan	238
Gwent	838
Gwynedd	781
Powys	945
Wales	6,155

Opencast Coal

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sites for which opencast coal extraction planning permission has been applied for; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally.

Council Tax Appeals

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales with reference to council tax appeals, if he will state how many appeals under council tax legislation in Ynys Môn (a) have been dealt with and (b) are outstanding; and what are the target dates for completion of those currently outstanding.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As at 31 January 1995 1,214 appeals had been settled and 636 appeals were outstanding. For Wales as a whole 41,630—77.2 per cent.—of initial council tax appeals were settled by 31 December 1994 against a target of 38,000—70 per cent. Around 90 per cent. of initial appeals will be cleared by 31 March 1995. Targets for the clearance of outstanding and subsequent appeals are under consideration.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Redwood: The local Government (Publication of Manpower Information) (Wales) (Revocation) Regulations 1994 was withdrawn. The Department is continuing to review its rules and regulations and any which are to be withdrawn in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are complete. The manpower implications are taken into account in the Department's central manpower plans which will be published in the Welsh Office departmental report in March. Most regulations are England and Wales or United Kingdom wide and do not fall to the Welsh Office to repeal. The Welsh Office has cut the number of forms sent to the health service by a third over the last year.

Civil Service Jobs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the likely effects of the centralisation of civil service jobs in Wales on unemployment statistics.

Mr. Redwood: Changes in civil service job numbers are just one of many factors which influence unemployment statistics.

A449

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Abergavenney turn-off on the northbound section of the A449 between Newport and Raglan will be reopened following reconstruction.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Raglan junction on the A449 trunk road is now open.

Health Service Forms

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 642, how long each of the forms scrapped has been in use; and how many times per annum completion was required by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: The information available is given in the following table. In many cases, when these forms were introduced they superseded existing returns of similar information.

Recycling Collection Points

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many recycling collection points there were in Wales for (i) glass, (ii) save-a-can, (iii) aluminium cans, (iv) newspapers and magazines, (v) plastic bottles, (vi) plastic carrier bags, (vii) textiles and (viii) vending cups in (a) 1990 and (b) 1995.

Mr. Redwood: In 1990, there were 212 glass banks and 19 save-a-can sites. Figures for the other commodities are not available.

District Councils currently provide collection points for the public as follows:

Waste type	Collection points
Glass	449
Cans (all types)	253
Paper and Magazines	318
Textiles	252

Information is not available in respect of plastic bottles, plastic carrier bags or vending cups.

Old Building Waste

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of, and percentage of, old building waste was used as hard core or aggregate in Wales in (a) 1985, (b) 1990 and (c) 1995.

Mr. Redwood: Accurate information is not available.

Broadleaf Trees

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many upland sessile oakwoods have been planted in Wales in each of the last 10 years; and what plans he has to make available funds to encourage further planting of this broadleaf.

Mr. Redwood: The areas of upland sessile oakwoods planted each year are not recorded separately and the information requested is therefore not available. The Government provide grants for the establishment of broadleaved woodlands, including sessile oakwoods, under the woodland grant scheme.

Education Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the education component of standard spending assessments per pupil, net of specific grants, in sub blocks five to 10 and 11 to 15 in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96 (i) in each Welsh local education authority and (ii) on average.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend does not set an education component within Welsh local authorities' standard spending assessments. It is for each authority to determine how much of its total available resources to direct to each of its services, including education, taking account of its statutory responsibilities and its perception of local needs and priorities.

Recycling

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of all household waste is currently being recycled in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Accurate information is not available. The Government's target is to recycle 25 per cent. of the United Kingdom's household waste by the year 2000. Most district councils have now prepared recycling plans and the Welsh Office will be monitoring the progress they make toward achieving the target.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number and monetary value of supplementary credit approvals promised to Welsh local authorities to develop recycling projects since the launch of "This Common Inheritance".

Mr. Redwood: In Wales, resources, which include those for developing recycling projects, are unhypothecated and distributed on a formula basis. This allows individual authorities to determine their own priorities for capital expenditure. This arrangement has the support of the local authority associations. The most recent capital settlement for local authorities for 1995–96 show a good increase in permitted expenditure overall.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of households in each of the Welsh counties are covered by kerbside collection recycling schemes.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not available. However, I know that several district councils have been actively considering such schemes in the context of their recycling plans.

Overgrazing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest in Wales have been damaged by overgrazing in each year since 1985; what was the hectarage of each site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Responsibility for the designation and monitoring of sites of special scientific interest rests with the Countryside Council for Wales. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of his reply to be placed in the Library of the House.

Hedgerows

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many kilometres of hedgerows have been lost in Wales in each year since 1984.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not available in the form requested. However, two sample surveys covering the periods from 1984 to 1990 and from 1990 to 1993 indicated net losses of hedgerows in Wales of 18,000 km and 5,500 km respectively at an average annual net loss of 2,570 km for the first period and 1,830 km for the second period.

Bird Populations

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the population of (a) corn bunting, (b) grey partridge, (c) skylark, (d) curlew, (e) redshank and (f) snipe have been observed in Wales in each year since 1980.

Mr. Redwood: There are no annual data of sufficient quality for Wales.

Data gathered by the British Trust for Ornithology between 1988 and 1991, however, shows the number of 10 km squares in Wales occupied by each species as follows:

Corn Bunting: 5
Grey partridge: 54
Skylark: 203
Curlew: 176
Redshank: 60
Snipe: 105

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each year since 1984 (a) annually and (b) quarterly the number of people in Great Britain surveyed by the labour force survey who, although they are without a job, have looked for a job within the four weeks prior to their labour force survey interview or are waiting to start a job within the two weeks following their labour force survey interview, and the number of people who are neither in employment nor unemployed on the International Labour Organisation measure but who said they would like a job.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information available from the labour force survey is shown in the following table, classified to the categories economically inactive and International Labour Organisation unemployed as defined by the international guidelines set out by the ILO.

Up-to-date figures for the groups tabulated are published quarterly, in greater detail, in both the LFS "Quarterly Bulletin" and in the LFS helpline section of the Employment Gazette; these data show that the majority of people within the economically inactive group who say they want work but are not actively seeking it are students; looking after a family or home; or long-term sick or disabled. Although such detailed information about the economically inactive group was not collected prior to 1984, the available figures for spring 1979 show that 23 per cent. of the population of working age were economically inactive, compared with 21 per cent. in autumn 1994, the latest available figure.

[1] The ILO definition counts as unemployed those people without a paid job who were available to start work within the next two weeks and had either looked for work in the four weeks prior to interview or were waiting to start a job they had already obtained.

[2] People who are neither in employment nor ILO unemployed according to the international guidelines of the ILO.

[3] According to responses to the LFS question.

Disabled People

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled persons registered with the Employment Service in the Durham district are actively seeking employment; and how many registered disabled persons in the current financial year, have (i) enrolled at job clubs in the Durham district and (ii) completed a course at a job club in the Durham district.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 6 February 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of disabled persons registered with the Employment Service and actively seeking work and disabled person attendance at Jobclub in the Durham District.

I am unable to tell you how many people with disabilities are registered with the Employment Service in the Durham North District and are actively seeking work because we do not gather this information. However we do record the number of clients with health/disability problems who are placed in jobs by Jobcentres. I am pleased to be able to tell you that within the Durham North Employment Service District (covering the Durham City, Consett Stanley, Chester-le-Street and Spennymoor areas), 302 clients with health/disability problems have been placed into jobs during the period April-December 1994. This represents 4% of the total job placings for the ES Durham North District.

Placing unemployed people with disabilities is a key activity of the Employment Service and is not the sole responsibility of our specialist staff such as Disability Employment Advisors (DEAs) or our Placing Assessment and Counselling Teams (PACTs). Not all ES clients with health and disability problems actually register as disabled persons under the Disabled Persons and Employment Acts 1944 and 1958.

Some people are reluctant to disclose that they are disabled and many disabilities are not visible. Our services and help are available to any client with long term health or disability problems which affect the kind of work they can do, irrespective of whether they are actually registered as a disabled person. The ES Access to Work (ATW) scheme offers practical help and advice in a flexible way, tailored to suit individual need in individual jobs. ATW is only one of many programmes and special help provision available to clients with health problems.

There are 7 Jobclubs within the ES Durham North District. During the period April-December 1994 there has been a throughput of 1060 clients including 79 people who though not necessarily registered disabled under the Acts, indicated that they have a long term health problem or disability which affects the kind of work they are able to do. Of these 1060 clients, 468 found a job but I am unable to say how many of these clients had previously had a health problem.

I hope this is helpful.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Oppenheim: Since 1 January 1994 the Department has revoked seven sets of workplace health and safety regulations and three sets of employment regulations. These are shown in the following list.

The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced when consultations are completed.

The staffing implications are taken into account in the preparation of the annual departmental report which will be published in March.

The Construction (Notices of Operations and Works) Order 1965 No. 221. (Revoked by SI 994 No. 3140.)

The Chemicals (Hazard Information and Packaging) Regulations 1993 No. 1746. (Revoked by SI 1994 No. 3247.)

The Health and Safety (Dangerous Pathogens) Regulations 1981 No. 1011. (Revoked by SI 1994 No. 3246)

The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 No. 1657. (Revoked by SI No. 3246)

The Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984 No. 824. (Revoked by SI 1994 No. 1886.)

Section 59(1) (b) of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1973

The licensing requirements of the Employment Agencies Act 1973.

The remaining employment provisions of the Shops Act 1950.

Jobseekers

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether jobseekers allowance will be paid to an individual who is taking steps to carry out a reasonable direction for the purposes of seeking entitlement to jobseekers allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: A benefit sanction will be imposed only if it is determined that a jobseeker has refused or failed to carry out a direction without good cause and that the direction was reasonable, having regard to his circumstances.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what rights of appeal jobseekers allowance claimants will have to an adjudicating officer if they feel they are being required to agree to something they consider to be unreasonable.

Miss Widdecombe: All labour market decisions will be made by independent adjudication officers. Clause 7(8) and 7(9) of the Jobseekers Bill provide for jobseekers to be able to refer the terms and conditions by a proposed jobseeker's agreement to an independent adjudication officer if they believe they are unreasonable. They will also have the right for the adjudication officer's determination to be reviewed by a second adjudication officer, and the right of appeal to a social security appeals tribunal.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what safeguards will be taken to ensure that, where directions are applied to a person seeking entitlement to the jobseekers allowance and which require a subjective opinion of a claimant's life style, appearance, or general physical, mental or emotional make up, the opinion held by the Employment Service officer issuing the directions will not in any way discriminate against the claimant concerned;

(2) how the nature of discretion exercised by Employment Service officers will be held to be free from prejudice or ignorance in directing the claimant for purposes of entitlement to the jobseekers allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: A jobseeker's direction must be reasonable having regard to the circumstances of the jobseeker. If the jobseeker refuses or fails to carry out a direction, an independent adjudication officer will determine whether the direction was reasonable and whether the jobseeker had good cause for failing to act.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what special provision will be made available for people who have transferred to jobseekers allowance from incapacity benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: Jobseekers will be able to restrict their availability to the type of hours of work they are prepared to take because of their physical or mental condition.

Significant extra resources will be provided over the next three years to fund additional back-to-work help for those leaving incapacity benefit. The Benefits Agency and the Employment Service are working closely to ensure a smooth transition from incapacity to unemployment benefits for those who will be affected.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) who will be empowered in the Employment Service to judge that a direction issued to a claimant seeking jobseekers allowance is considered to be reasonable; and who is empowered to disqualify a claimant from benefit;

(2) who will be responsible for deciding whether the amount of time provided for claimants to carry out directions issued by Employment Service officers for the purposes of seeking entitlement to jobseekers allowance is fair and reasonable;

(3) who will determine that the advice given by Employment Service staff to direct claimants seeking entitlement for purposes of jobseekers allowance will be in the best interests of the individual and that this advice has been optimally matched to improve the claimant's chances of finding work.

Miss Widdecombe: The Jobseekers Bill provides that a jobseekers's direction must be reasonable in the claimant's circumstances, and given with a view of assisting him to find or retain employment or improving his prospects of being employed. If the jobseeker refuses or fails to carry it out, an independent adjudication officer will take all the facts of the case into account in deciding whether to impose a sanction, including whether the claimant had good cause for his action.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what safeguards will be built into the jobseeker's allowance appeals process to ensure that claimants are not coerced into signing the agreement against their will.

Miss Widdecombe: If a jobseeker does not agree with the terms and conditions of a proposed jobseeker's agreement, he can refer it to an independent adjudication officer for a determination. He will also have the right to have that determination reviewed by a second adjudication officer, and the right of appeal to a social security appeals tribunal.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what instances discretion will be held to apply in directing the claimant for purposes of entitlement to the jobseeker's allowance to take steps as provided in section 6(3) (a) of the Jobseekers Bill.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no provision under this clause to give direction to jobseekers. Jobseekers will be required to demonstrate that they are actively seeking employment. The steps which will constitute meeting this requirement will be set out in regulations.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who will judge if the assessment for the purposes of entering into the jobseeker's agreement is accurate and a genuine reflection of an individual's skills, qualification and experience.

Miss Widdecombe: The employment officer and the jobseeker will seek to draw up a jobseeker's agreement. If they cannot agree on the terms an conditions of the proposed agreement, it will be referred to an independent adjudication officer.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice and guidance will be given to Employment Service staff of the interpretation and execution of directions under section 6(3) (a) of the Jobseekers Bill; and what specific circumstances will be prescribed to fall within the jurisdiction of the definition of directions.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no provision under this clause to give directions to jobseekers. Jobseekers will be required to demonstrate that they are actively seeking employment. The steps which will constitute meeting this requirement will be set out in regulations.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the composition of the jobseekers allowance project team; how often it has met; and to whom it reports.

Miss Widdecombe: The jobseeker's allowance is jointly the responsibility of my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Employment and for Social Security. An official group, chaired by the Employment Department, is accountable to them for implementation of the allowance. A project director is accountable for the implementation project to the implementation group and is assisted in the day-to-day management of the project by a project manager. The latter is assisted by a project management board, comprising himself, key managers within the project, and representatives of the ED, the Department of Social Security and their agencies. The board has met 12 times.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the term "direction" is to be defined in relation to the jobseeker's allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: The Jobseekers Bill defines in clause 15 the term "jobseeker's direction" as "a direction given in writing by an employment officer—with a view to achieving one or more of the following:

(i) assisting the claimant to find employment;

(ii) assisting the claimant to retain employment;

(iii) improving the claimant's prospects of being employed.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether interpreters will be readily available for people seeking entitlement to jobseekers allowance whose first language is not English.

Miss Widdecombe: For those jobseekers whose first language is not English, and who need help with translation, as now, an appointment will be booked with an adviser with the appropriate language skills, where they are available. Alternatively, another member of staff with appropriate language skills will act as a interpreter. If neither of these is possible the jobseeker will be encouraged to bring a friend or relative to the interview to act as an interpreter. Jobcentres are also able to make use of local services offering interpreting facilities where there is a need.

Mr.McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which members of staff in the Employment Service will be empowered to issue directions to claimants seeking entitlement to jobseekers allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: Jobseeker's directions will be given by staff who have appropriate training to do so.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what timescale will apply to claimants seeking entitlement to jobseekers allowance for carrying out directions as issued by Employment Service staff;

(2) how long claimants seeking entitlement to jobseekers allowance will be given, in order that they may take steps to carry out a reasonable direction.

Miss Widdecombe: A jobseeker's direction will specify the action required of the claimant, and the time by which it is to be carried out. The Jobseekers Bill provides that a direction must be reasonable in the claimant's circumstances, and the independent adjudication officer will therefore take the required timescale into account in deciding whether to impose a sanction for the claimant's failure to carry out a direction.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how long in practice the assessment process will take for the purposes of entering into the jobseekers agreement.

Miss Widdecombe: The process of entering into the jobseekers agreement will be handled as part of the new claim interview. Work is currently in progress to assess the impact of all new features of the jobseekers allowance, including the jobseeker's agreement, on the structure and nature of the new claim interview.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment has been made of future premises needs for the Employment Service after the introduction of the jobseekers allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: Work is underway as part of the implementation of jobseeker's allowance to assess the implications of JSA on the network of Employment Service jobcentres. This taking place alongside other development work with which it is linked, including in particular the detailed business processes through which the allowance will be delivered.

"Connect"

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many issues there have been of the newsletter "Connect"; what is the circulation; and what has been the total cost of production.

Miss Widdecombe: At 3 February 1995 there have been three issues of the newsletter "Connect". The current circulation is 61,500 per issue, to staff in the Benefits Agency, the Employment Service, the Department of Social Security and the Employment Department. The total cost of production of the three issues has been £31,324.

Minister's Working Hours

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average number of hours worked in a week by (a) a Secretary of State, (b) a Minister of State and (c) a Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State in his Department.

Mr. Portillo: Ministers in the Employment Department work the hours necessary to complete all the ministerial and departmental tasks for which they are responsible. Ministers do not keep detailed logs of the hours per week which they work.

MSc Courses

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) those MSc courses that are currently funded with money from the European social fund, (b) the criteria for the distribution of ESF money for MSc courses and (c) those MSc courses that have ceased to receive ESF money this academic year; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: MSc courses may receive support from the European social fund towards the costs of training eligible unemployed people. All such courses must lead to a recognised higher or degree level vocational qualifications.

ESF funds are allocated on a calendar year basis, following a competitive selection process. The following list shows the courses which received approval for an element of ESF funding for 1994. Applications for 1995 funds are currently being processed.

Information on courses that have ceased to receive funding during the last year could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the weekly cost of keeping a prison inmate in prison in England and Wales as at 8 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, Dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the weekly cost of keeping an inmate in prison in England and Wales.

The most recent published figures are for the financial year 1993–94 when the average cost per prisoner place per week was £437.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual cost at current prices of keeping a man in a high security prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter for Derek Lewis to Mr. David Nicholson, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the annual cost of keeping a prisoner in a high security prison.

The annual average net operating cost per prisoner place in dispersal prisons in 1993–94 was £26,671.

Temporary Release (Prisoners)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward measures to ensure that prisoners will be considered for temporary release or home leave only if they have been declared as drug free.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Lady Olga Maitland, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about whether measures will be brought forward to ensure that prisoners will be considered for temporary release or home leave only if they have been declared as drug free.

Instructions to Governors on the operation of temporary release and home leave require an in-depth risk assessment to be carried out before a prisoner is granted any form of release on temporary licence. The assessment requires full account to be taken of specific areas of concern such as drug abuse where these would increase the risk of re-offending or danger to the public.

Mandatory drug testing is being introduced as part of the Service's initiative against misuse of drugs in prison. The results of the tests will be used for risk assessment purposes in the grant of temporary release and home leave. No prisoner found to be using drugs, who presents a risk to public safety or who is likely to re-offend, will be released from prison temporarily. Where a prisoner has tested positively and is not considered a risk to public safety, there will equally be a clear presumption to refuse temporary release or home leave, save in exceptional circumstances.

Prisons

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison establishments have achieved 12 hours unlocking; what activities have been provided for the prisoners; and what are the implications for staff and inmate safety.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisons which are unlocking prisoners for more than 12 hours on weekdays, the types of activities provided for inmates and the implications for staff and inmate safety.

On 31 December 1994, 60 prisoners were unlocking prisoners for at least 12 hours on weekdays. In December 1994, prisoners were spending on average 26.5 hours per week engaged in purposeful activities broken down as follows:

Activity	Percentage time spent
Work
domestic	19
workshops	14
kitchens	9
farms and gardens	4
other work	4
Education and Training	20
Other
PE	9
induction	3
chaplaincy	2
other structured activities	16

Prison Governors are required to ensure that prisoners are engaged in active and demanding regimes which are relevant to their needs and to the reasons they are in prison. Such regimes have an important part to play in maintaining a stable prison system.

Prisoners

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were declassified from A to B and B to C during the last 12 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners who have been declassified from A to B and B to C during the last 12 months.

During the period from January to December 1994, 25 prisoners were recategorised from category A to B.

Recategorisations from category B to C are the responsibility of Governors of prisons and no central records are kept. I regret, therefore, that the information requested about this group of prisoners is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Statements

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he took to ensure that his statements to the House on 10 January columns 31–34 and the Home Affairs Select Committee on 25 January met the requirements of paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

Mr. Howard: I am satisfied that my recent statements to the House and to the Home Affairs Select Committee are consistent with "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

Blakenhurst Prison

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest available figure for the number of disturbances at Blakenhurst prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the latest available figures for the number of disturbances at Blakenhurst prison.

There has only been one significant disturbance at Blakenhurst, which took place in February 1994, involving 150 prisoners and resulting in property damage of about £30,000, which was paid for by the contractors. There were no injuries to staff or prisoners and the security of the prison was not threatened.

On 5 September 1994 there was an incident involving a small cell fire, and during which a Prison Custody Officer was assaulted.

There have been nine other incidents of passive or minor concerted indiscipline in the twenty months since the prison opened.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, columns 512–13, how his Department will monitor the new arrangement that a domestic worker must be provided with a separate bedroom.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Inquiries will be made as to the accommodation of domestic workers when they apply for further leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

Visitors

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what basis and under what conditions Dr. Svdja Trifkovic visits or resides in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on what basis and on what dates Jovan Zametica was allowed admission into the United Kingdom during the past eight weeks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: It would be contrary to our normal practice to disclose information to third parties on a person's immigration status.

Prisons (Damage)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cost of refurbishing prisons and relocating prisoners as a result of damage caused by prisoners acting unlawfully in prisons in Greater London in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Services, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question concerning the cost of refurbishing prisons and re-locating prisoners as a result of damage caused by prisoners acting unlawfully in prisons in Greater London in each year since 1979.

Detailed information prior to June 1988 is not available.

Greater London establishments, represented by Belmarsh prison, Wormwood Scrubs prison, Brixton prison, Wandsworth prison, Pentonville prison, Feltham Young Offenders Institution, and Holloway prison, reported 9 incidents between 7 August 1988 and 31 December 1994, in which there was damage to prison property, as follows:

Date	Establishment	Reported Damage
8th April 1990	HMP Brixton	Minor
8th April 1990	HMP Pentonville	Minor
5th November 1991	HMYOI Feltham	Minor
2nd July 1992	HMP Belmarsh	Minor
2nd July 1992	HMP Belmarsh	Minor
29th August 1992	HMP Belmarsh	Minor
27th July 1993	HMP Belmarsh	Minor
2nd October 1994	HMP Belmarsh	Minor
10th December 1994	HMP Belmarsh	Extensive

Where the damage was reported as minor, the costs were met locally within the prison. In most cases, where details are available, the damage was caused to furnishings rather than fabric. In the Belmarsh incident of 10 December 1994, where the damage was reported as extensive the cost of repair was approximately £10,000.

Details of prisoners who were re-located are not recorded centrally, unless re-location occurs in serious situations at the time of the incident. None of the reports on these incidents indicated that any prisoners were re-located to other prisons at the time, though, some may have been at a later date. Some were re-located within the establishment where the incident occurred.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of refurbishing prisons as a result of damage caused by prisoners acting unlawfully in each of the years 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the cost of damage to Prison Service establishments between the years 1979 to 1985.

I am afraid that this information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Prison Riot

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's definition of a prison riot.

Mr. Michael Forstyh: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for a definition of a prison riot.

A riot is defined in section 1 of the Public Order Act 1986, a copy of which will be found in the Library of the House. Riot can take place in a public or private place, including a prison.

There is also an offence of prison mutiny which is defined in section 1(2) of the Prison Security Act 1992, a copy of which can also be found in the Library.

In addition, the Prison Service maintain statistics on the number of acts of concerted indiscipline which take place. Concerted indiscipline takes place when two or more prisoners refuse to conform to the rules and regulations of a prison. Such incidents include both passive disobedience and active indiscipline.

Director General of the Prison Service

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam of 25 January, Official Report, column 230, if he will list candidates assessed as of an acceptable standard for the post of Director General of the Prison Service; and in what order of suitability those candidates were placed.

Mr. Howard: No. Candidates put themselves forward for posts in the civil service on the understanding that their applications are treated in confidence. It is not the practice to make public details of candidates who are not appointed.

Prison Escapes

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 534, which prison the prisoners at large had escaped from; what their offence was; and for how long they have been on the run.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about prisoners unlawfully at large.

The total number of prisoners who have escaped since 20 June 1988 and are still unlawfully at large at 13 January 1995 is 123.

The attached table lists the prison or escorting contractor from whose custody each prisoner escaped, their offence and the length of time unlawfully at large. A copy of this table has been placed in the Library of the House.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits were made by inspectors under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to (a) the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Salisbury, (b) the Defence Research Agency, Alverstoke and (c) The Centre for Human Sciences in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The number of visits made by inspectors was:

(a) Chemical and Biological Defence Establishments

1991: 9
1992: 8
1993: 7
1994: 6

(b) Defence Research Agency, Alverstoke

1990: 4
1991: 4
1992: 2
1993: 3
1994: 2

(c) Centre for Human Sciences (Previously the RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine)

1990: 4
1991: 4
1992: 6

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list and give details of project licences involving animal experiments granted to Ministry of Defence establishments for each of the last two years for which information is available;

(2) how many project and personal licenses issued to Ministry of Defence establishments under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 have been withdrawn; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information held in connection with the issue of licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 will have been given in confidence: the disclosure of such information is prohibited by virtue of section 24 (1) of the Act.

Twelve project licences were granted to Ministry of Defence establishments in 1993, and 20 in 1994. In 1993, 10 project licences expired at the end of the five years permitted by the 1986 Act, and three were surrendered when the relevant project work was completed; in 1994 three expired and seven were surrendered.

In 1993, nine personal licences were revoked on completion of the work on which the licence holders were engaged; in 1994 the figure was 24.

Information on the numbers of project and personal licences issued to particular establishments prior to 1993 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the reception centre for Bosnian refugees at Cheylesmore lodge, North Berwick, and other reception centres; and if he will give an estimate of the numbers of refugees from Bosnia who will come to Britain during the next 12 months.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Due to the declining number of evacuees from the former Yugoslavia in recent months, it has been decided, following discussions between the Home Office, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and the voluntary agencies running the centres, that two of the present nine centres should close at the end of March 1995, and a further five, including Cheylesmore lodge, by the end of April. Of the two remaining centres, one will close at the end of June, and we will review in April the timing of the closure of the last centre against the background of developments in Bosnia.

There are approximately 370 people who have been accepted under the temporary protection programme but who have yet to arrive. The majority are still in Bosnia. UNHCR is reassessing these cases but, because of the uncertain situation within Bosnia, cannot say when, or if, they will be able to travel.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to require victims who have received payment from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority under the tariff scheme to repay sums received if their payment is reassessed following the tariff scheme being withdrawn or altered as a result of court proceedings.

Mr. Maclean: If the tariff scheme had to be withdrawn all payments made under its terms would have to be reassessed. Where the tariff award exceeded the reassessed award the beneficiary would, in principle, be liable to refund the difference. We have decided that it would not be right to seek to recover that difference.

Illegal Immigrant Suspect Index

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Home Office first embarked on the computerisation of the illegal immigrant suspect index; how much has been spent on the project to date; and when he expects the system to be fully operational.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: A project team was resourced in late 1989 to develop the suspect index system, and commenced work in January 1990. Following approval of the business case, and a competitive procurement including technical design studies, a supply contract was let to ICL Ltd in December 1992. Development of the system began in January 1993. Capital costs in the order of £13.7 million will have been spent by the end of phase 1 of the project. The system commenced live running at Stansted airport and the Immigration Service intelligence and investigation unit near Heathrow airport on 23 January 1995. The first phase, which includes major ports of entry and enforcement offices, is planned to be completed in April 1995.

Further phases of the project are proposed to encompass remaining ports of entry, enforcement offices and other IND locations where system access is required by 1998.

False Identities

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to prevent individuals illegally acquiring false identities for passport, DSS and other purposes by using official documentation obtained by posing as a deceased person.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The United Kingdom Passport Agency takes great care to prevent the issue of passports in false identities. The passport issuing system incorporates a variety of safeguards to prevent fraud. Special fraud detection teams in each office liaise closely with the police, immigration service and other agencies such as the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to counter the submission of applications in false identities.

The Department of Social Security's Benefits Agency has developed a security strategy to combat benefit fraud of all kinds. The strategy involves investment in a variety of measures, including improvements to information technology and increased verification of information presented in claims to benefit. It is anticipated that the substantial investment envisaged will achieve a dramatic reduction in benefit fraud, shifting the emphasis away from detection and investigation towards prevention and deterrence.

Charity Commission

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the efficiency of the Charity Commission.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I do not think that a further review is necessary. The efficiency of the Charity Commission is regularly reviewed by Home Office Ministers, notably as part of the public expenditure process. The Charity Commission is making significant improvements in efficiency, particularly through the introduction of new computerised methods of working, and is carrying through a development programme to enable it to carry out its new responsibilities under the Charities Act 1993. An independent review of the Commission's senior structure and staffing has just been completed which will bring further gains. The Commission has also achieved gains through a recent market test of its managerial and paper-keeping services.

Charities

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many registered charities are working in (a) animal welfare, (b) child welfare, (c) youth services, (d) adult health, (e) child health, (f) education, (g) the Church of England and (h) other religions.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The classification on the Charity Commission's present computerised register does not match the categories in my hon. Friend's question precisely. The information available is as follows:

Field	Number of registered charities
(a) animal welfare	886
(b) child welfare and (c) youth services	[1]12,866
(d) adult health and (e) child health	[2]18,834
(f) education	35,347
(g) the Church of England	5,791
(h) other religions	4,514

[1] Note: The Charity Commission's classification system is not as broad as the areas listed in the question. It is difficult to distinguish between child welfare and youth services as many charities operate for the benefit of both children and young people.

[2] Note: The Charity Commission's classification systems does not distinguish between adult and child health: most of the charities in this field make no distinction as to the age of their beneficiaries.

An improved computerised register which will give a more detailed analysis is planned for next year.

Prison Service

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost of public funds of running the Prison Service in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the costs to public funds of running the Prison Service in each year since 1979.

The costs for the Prison Service in England and Wales are set out below. They are expressed in cash terms, but include notional depreciation and superannuation.

1979–80	344,326
1980–81	437,884
1981–82	498,424
1982–83	572,597
1983–84	637,118
1984–85	656,445
1985–86	743,229
1986–87	786,450
1987–88	882,341
1988–89	1,013,898
1989–90	1,205,763
1990–91	1,464,227
1991–92	1,630,956
1992–93	1,660,200
1993–94	1,638,200

Note:

Information on prisons in Scotland is a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Scottish Prison Service.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress the Prison Service has made in devising a key performance indicator on recidivism.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 December 1994]: I have asked the Prison Service to give this matter further consideration, and expect their advice shortly.

Prisons (Running Costs)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to public funds of running each prison in Britain in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the cost to public funds of running each prison in Britain.

The attached table shows the costs expressed in cash terms but including notional depreciation and superannuation of each prison in England and Wales in the last 10 years. The figures for earlier years are published in the relevant annual reports on the work of the Prison Service, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library.

Information on prisons in Scotland is a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Scottish Prison Service.

Prisons (Suicides)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of suicides in prisons in each year since 1979; and if he will give in each case the prison in which the suicide occurred and the age of the prisoner.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 6 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking what has been the number of suicides in prisons in each year since 1979 giving in each case the prison and the age of the prisoner.

Table A gives the number of self-inflicted deaths in prison establishments in England and Wales from 1988 in each case showing the name of the establishment and age of the prisoner. The Coroner's verdict is also shown as not all self-inflicted deaths result in a "suicide" verdict.

Table B gives the number of self-inflicted deaths in prison establishments in England and Wales for 1979 to 1987 and the total number of suicide verdicts.

A copy of these tables have been placed in the Library of the House.

Detailed records were not stored centrally before 1988 and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their client's interests.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 31 January 1995]: None.

Prison Locks

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons have had their locks changed because of key compromises in the last three years; and what was the average cost for each such prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Margaret Hodge, dated 30 January 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisons where locks have been changed because of key compromises in the last three years.

Since January 1992 there have been 28 key compromises resulting in a change of locks. This includes the recent compromise at Parkhurst prison.

The cost of replacing the locks varies according to the size of the prison and the class of locks. Typical costs are in the range of between £40,000 and £64,000.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 7 February 1995

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many new justices of the peace were appointed in Wales during 1994; and what is the political affiliation of the new appointees.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor appointed 116 new justices of the peace in Wales during 1994. The political affiliation of these appointees was as follows:

Party	Number
Conservative	24
Labour	50
Liberal Democrat	19
Plaid Cymru	8
Independent/not known	15

DEFENCE

Service Children's Education Authority

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reassessment has been made of the list of admissible schools by the Service Children's Education Authority in the light of (a) the Her Majesty's inspectorate and Office for Standards in Education reports and (b) the league table of examination results.

Mr. Soames: No reassessment of the admissible schools list has been made in the light of the Her Majesty's inspectorate and Office for Standards in Education reports and the league table of examination results. The Service Children's Education Authority makes Ofsted reports available to service parents, and examination league tables are provided on request.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made by the Service Children's Education Authority of the provision for the education and welfare of service children at (a) Rodney school, Nottinghamshire, and (b) Finborough school, Suffolk.

Mr. Soames: The Service Children's Education Authority does not assess the provision of education and welfare at schools. Such assessments are the responsibility of the Department for Education, Her Majesty's inspectorate and the Office for Standards in Education. SCEA offers an advisory service to parents whose children already attend boarding schools and to those who are considering a boarding education for their children.

Aircraft Orders

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many orders have been placed with aircraft companies to replace Royal Air Force Wessex helicopters; when those orders were made; and when the aircraft will be delivered;

(2) how many orders have been placed to replace the Wessex helicopters on the Queen's Flight; when those orders were made; and when they will be delivered;

(3) what plans he has to replace Wessex helicopters in the Queen's Flight;

(4) what plans he has to replace Wessex helicopters in the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Freeman: Current plans assume that all UK-based RAF Wessex helicopters, including those in the Queen's Flight, will be replaced by the turn of the century. The Wessex unit in Cyprus is planned to be replaced early next century. An order was placed in October 1992 for six Sea King helicopters which, with the RAF's existing Sea King fleet, will replace Wessex in the search and rescue role. The Sea Kings are due to be delivered this year. Options for the replacement of Wessex in other roles remain under consideration. No orders have been placed.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account is taken of the policy on corporal punishment in assessing the suitability of schools for children receiving the service schools boarding allowance.

Mr. Soames: Corporal punishment is a matter between individual schools and service parents; it does not affect the eligibility criteria for boarding school allowance. The Service Children's Education Authority is happy to advise service parents on schools' policies relating to corporal punishment.

Joint Services Command

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 291, what appraisal was made by his Department of the merits of local schools and medical services in (a) Camberley, (b) Greenwich and (c) Bracknell.

Mr. Soames: As I explained in my previous answer, the key assessment that we have made in respect of schools and medical services is the extent to which students at the proposed joint services command and staff college, and their families, could benefit from ready access to common facilities.

The married quarters serving Bracknell and Camberley are close to the college, so students' children form a significant proportion of the local school population. As a result, some schools have been able to make special provision to cater for this group, such as adjusting the teaching year to coincide with that of the college's, and providing special language and cultural training for the children of foreign students. In Greenwich, however, the married quarters supporting the college are dispersed and situated outside the borough, so no appraisal of the merits of Greenwich schools was appropriate.

Medical care is available on a simillar basis to officers, and their families, at all three sites, but, again, the relative proximity of the associated married quarters to the colleges at Bracknell and Camberley makes access to common medical services much easier

Secondment

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which individuals have been seconded from the private sector to the Defence Export Services Organisation; and, since January 1992, what were the dates of such secondments and the company or organisation from which each individual was seconded.

Mr. Freeman: Further to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 30 November 1994, Official Report, column 778, both the head of the organisation and the offset adviser have been seconded from British Aerospace since September 1994 and October 1993 respectively. The international financial adviser joined the DESO on a short-term contract in April 1992.

Awards

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is able to give details of the new award to recognise conspicuous gallantry and heroism by members of the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: Her Majesty the Queen has graciously approved the institution of the Conspicuous Gallantry Cross to recognise conspicuous gallantry and great heroism by members of the armed forces. This award will replace the Distinguished Service Order, when awarded to officers for specific acts of gallantry, the Conspicuous Gallantry Medal, the Distinguished Conduct Medal and the Conspicuous Gallantry Medal (Flying). It will apply to all three services, and will be open to service men and women of any rank.

The Distinguished Service Order is to be retained across all three services as an award in recognition of exceptional service in positions of substantial responsibility for command and leadership during active operations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Political Asylum

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in the last six months from the Governments of Saudi Arabia and Bahrain about the United Kingdom's political asylum laws, procedures and decisions on individuals.

Mr. Goodlad: The Saudi and Bahrain Governments have raised with us the presence in the United Kingdom of some of their nationals. We have explained United Kingdom asylum procedures to them. Decisions on individual cases are a matter for the Home Office.

Drugs

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to ensure that United Kingdom security assistance provided for drug control purposes does not contribute to human rights violations in developing countries.

Mr. Baldry: Requests from overseas Governments for United Kingdom drugs-related assistance are carefully considered against a number of criteria. These include the human rights record of the country concerned.

Gibraltar

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount of resources has been denied to the Government of Gibraltar by the loss of the dockyard and other reductions in the forces over the last 10 years.

Mr. Goodlad: It is generally estimated that, at its peak, the Ministry of Defence contribution to the Gibraltar economy was about 50 per cent. It is currently estimated at about 10 per cent. More detailed figures are not available.

Dr. Hulak Gerger

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Turkey about the imprisonment without trial of Dr. Haluk Gerger, General Secretary of the United Nations Association of Turkey; and what response he received from the Turkish Government.

Mr. Goodlad: We have not raised this specific case, but we take every opportunity to make our concerns on human rights known to the Turkish Government. The Foreign Secretary last did so when he met the Turkish Foreign Minister in London on 2 February. We are following closely the Turkish Government's programme of democratisation measures.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the reasons for the current decline in Rockhopper penguin numbers in the Falkland Islands; and which other penguin species are similarly affected.

Mr. Baldry: Assessments carried out on the reasons for the current decline in Rockhopper penguins are inconclusive. Two major reasons for the decline, which is not confined to the Falklands, have been put forward: first, changes in ocean temperatures, possibly related to the El Nino phenomenon; and, secondly, a natural cycle of decline similar to those previously recorded, which have been followed by an upturn.

No major penguin species on the Falkland Islands have suffered significant decline. Detailed surveys of penguin colonies are being conducted by the organisation Falkland Conservation.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are being taken to avoid over fishing in Falkland Islands waters; and which countries are currently licensed to fish in those waters.

Mr. Baldry: Fishing in Falkland Islands waters is closely controlled by the Falkland Islands Government through a strict licensing regime that limits fishing effort to safe levels. Scientific evaluation of the sustainable development of the fishery is carried out, under contract to the Falkland Islands Government, by Imperial College and the British Antarctic Survey. The Falkland Islands Government operate two fishery protection aircraft and, depending on the season, either one or two fishery protection vessels.

Vessels from the following are licensed to fish in Falkland waters during 1995:

Belize
Chile
Falkland Islands
France
Honduras
Italy
Japan
Korea
Panama
Poland
Portugal
Spain
Taiwan

Fur Seals, South Georgia

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration is being given to a cull of fur seals on South Georgia.

Mr. Baldry: There are no plans for a cull. The British Antarctic Survey is studying the population dynamics of fur seals and their impact on terrestrial and marine eco-systems.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries in the ECOWAS monitoring group initiative in Liberia have indicated that they will withdraw their troops unless there is progress in the peace process or financial assistance is given.

Mr. Baldry: Many ECOMOG troop contributing countries have voiced their frustration with the lack of progress in the peace process and have indicated that they are not prepared to enter into an open-ended commitment in Liberia.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further financial contribution is being made by (a) the United Nations or (b) other bodies to alleviate the financial hardships being suffered by those countries contributing forces to the ECOWAS monitoring group initiative in Liberia.

Mr. Baldry: The UN trust fund for Liberia was set up to help offset ECOMOG's costs. So far, only five countries, including the United Kingdom, have contributed. The UN Secretary-General has appealed for further donations. I am not aware of any other bodies outside the Economic Community of West African States that have given financial help for ECOMOG.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Faraday Station

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide additional resources to enable the Faraday station to stockpile sufficient quantities of baked beans to last until the closure of the station.

Mr. David Hunt: The provisioning of the United Kingdom's Antarctic stations is the responsibility of the Natural Environment Research Council and its institute, the British Antarctic Survey.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) when the House was informed of the proposal to transfer Faraday station to the Ukraine;

(2) who took the decision to hand over Faraday station to the Ukraine; when it was taken; and what are the terms of the transfer.

Mr. David Hunt: The House was informed of the decision to close Faraday from March 1996, as a manned station, by the then Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science, on 19 May 1993, Official Report, columns 157-58.

Subsequently, the possibility of transfer of the station as a working unit to another operator was explored by the Foreign Office. Negotiations with the Ukrainians were opened following authorisation by the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, in June 1994. These have yet to be concluded.

The terms of the transfer are still subject to negotiation.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what guarantees he is able to give that the scientific work currently being carried out by the Faraday station will continue after 1995–96;

(2) what scientific work on the ozone layer is carried out by staff at the Faraday station; and who will carry out this work after the station closes.

Mr. David Hunt: If the Faraday station is closed as a manned station, the British Antarctic Survey will complete the development of automated data collection systems, which will enable key long-term meteorological and magnetic observations to be completed at Faraday.

Should negotiations for the transfer of the station to the Ukrainians prove successful, their scientists will, after training, carry out the existing scientific measurements at Faraday and transfer the resulting data to the United Kingdom.

Ozone measurements have been carried out for many years at Faraday. The monitoring programme will either continue in that location or be transferred to Rothera island.

Sick Leave

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each Department and agency the average days of sick leave and the index figure taking the civil service average as 100.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Data on sickness absence is submitted to the civil service Occupational Health and Safety Agency by Departments and agencies on a voluntary basis. The tables show, for 1993, the average days of sick leave and the index figure taking the civil service average as 100 for participating Departments and agencies.

Government Contracts

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the bodies with contractor or agency roles for Government that (a) can be put into receivership or (b) can fail to pay sums due under contract for services meeting Government commitments.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Large numbers of private companies and other independent organisations provide goods or services for the Government. Listing them would involve disproportionate cost.

Abandoned Bases (Antarctica)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how much has been allocated in the last two years to clean up abandoned former British bases in Antarctica;

(2) if he will list all British Antarctic stations now abandoned; and if all the necessary clean up work has been completed.

Mr. David Hunt: No specific funds have been earmarked for this purpose from within annual recurrent expenditure. The list of British abandoned bases is provided in the table. Some clean-up work has been undertaken, although not a full programme.

British Antarctic Survey

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what grant was made to the British Antarctic Survey in 1994–95; and what is the proposed grant for 1995–96.

Mr. David Hunt: The science budget allocation for the British Antarctic Survey in 1994–95 was £24.379 million. The planning figure for the science budget allocation for 1995–96 is £25.87 million.

Duchy of Lancaster "Forward Look"

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the next "Forward Look" will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has recently written to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Science and Technology to confirm that the next "Forward Look" of Government-funded science, engineering and technology, will be published in May 1995.

This is to be a permanent change from the arrangements proposed in the White Paper "Realising our Potential" which envisaged a publication date in April each year. This slight adjustment in timing will enable the "Forward Look" to link more effectively with annual public expenditure surveys.

National Science Week

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 4, what proportion of the £195,000 allocated in support of the national week of science, engineering and technology was given in grants; what number of applications were unsuccessful; and what would their total costs have amounted to.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Of the £195,000 the Office of Science and Technology has allocated in support of the 1995 national week of science, engineering and technology—SET 95—£50,000 was made available to the Committee on the Public Understanding of Science as additional funding for grants in direct support of SET 95. Some 102 applications were unsuccessful, whose total costs would have amounted to nearly £167,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Nitrates

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the justification for the setting of limits to nitrate levels in vegetables.

Mrs. Browning: I see no justification for setting limits while the EC scientific committee for food is still considering the issue. We have made it very clear to the Commission that we oppose the proposal both because no scientific case has been established for it and because of the serious effects that it would cause to our glasshouse lettuce industry. The Commission is accordingly reconsidering the matter.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement about the objective of the trials currently taking place on bovine somatotropin in the United Kingdom; how my trials are taking place; in which counties they are taking place; what companies are sponsoring the trials; and what measures he is taking to ensure that milk from cows being treated with BST in the trials is not entering the food chain;

(2) whether the trials for bovine somatotropin in the United Kingdom will continue following the EU Agriculture Council's decision to continue the moratorium until 1999; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: No trials are currently being undertaken on bovine somatotropin in cows in the UK. The decision of the Council of Agriculture Ministers to extend the moratorium on BST until 31 December 1999 also allowed limited practical tests to be carried out under certain conditions. Details of any such tests and how they might be conducted have yet to be worked out.

Coventry Airport

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many flights had taken place from Coventry airport carrying live animals to Europe in the year to 21 December 1994.

Mrs. Browning: The information requested is not available. It could be provided only by the air operators concerned.

Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Booth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent information about research into transmissible spongiform encephalopathies he has received from the spongiform encephalopathy advisory committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: As part of its continuing work to maintain an overview of research into transmissible spongiform encephalopathies, the independent spongiform encephalopathy advisory committee has produced a report which summarises what is now known about TSEs. The report provides an insight into research both completed and under way.

I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House. The report has been published by HMSO.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing, West Midlands

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated number of dwellings for rent in the public sector and scheduled to be built in the next year in each of the West Midlands district council areas; and what are the current housing waiting lists for each of those councils.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest available figures for local authority and other public sector housing stock and on the numbers waiting for housing in districts in the west midlands relate to 1 April 1994 and can be found in the "1994 HIP1 All Items Prints", a copy of which is in the Library. Estimates of local authority and other public sector bodies' proposals to build new dwellings are not held centrally.

In addition, there were a total of 71,000 housing association dwellings in the west midlands region—46,000 in the west midlands county—at 31 March 1994. The forecast for housing association new build starts in the west midlands in 1995–96 is 1,800, and 1,100 in the west midlands county.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current numbers on local authority housing waiting lists, broken down by local authority, as registered on the 1994 housing investment programme returns from local authorities.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested on the numbers of households on local authority housing waiting lists at 1 April 1994 can be found in section B of the "1994 HIP1 All Items Prints", a copy of which is in the Library.

Oxygenated Petrol

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has carried out into oxygenated petrol; what plans for research into the environmental suitability of oxygenated petrol he has; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The environmental case for oxygenated fuel is not yet clear. The Government will keep it under review. We are participating fully in the setting of standards for fuel formulation at a European level, in particular in the light of the forthcoming report from the European tripartite initiative on future engine and fuel technologies.

Redundancy Compensation

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the reasons for the differences between the proposed compensation package offered for staff made redundant in the current local government reorganisation and that offered in the 1986 package, with special reference to (a) maximum payments and (b) discretionary payments for those over 50 years.

Mr. Curry: Any compensation scheme must be tailored to the specific circumstances to which it applies, and should be viewed as a whole. We have provided a compensation package for the current reorganisation which in all the circumstances is fair to employees and affordable for the local authorities and taxpayers.

Construction Contracting

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Heating and Ventilating Contractors Association about the need for legislation on construction contracting in the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is not available in the form requested. However, more than 60 letters have been received since September 1994 on this subject from members of the constructors liaison group of which the HVCA is a component part. Later today my right hon. Friend is meeting representatives of all sectors of the construction industry to discuss this and other issues arising from the Latham report.

Disabled People

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he has had with the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People regarding the effect of payments by councils in lieu of community care on local authorities' budgets;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People regarding increases in standard spending assessments to offset the costs on local authorities for disabled people not in care.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced in November her intention to allow local authorities to make direct payments to disabled people in lieu of services. My Department has discussed with the Department of Health the effects of this proposal on local authorities' budgets. As any powers to make direct payments will be permissive and will involve the same assessment procedures as now, I am satisfied that there will be no additional need for resources.

Test Valley

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his inspector will report on the Test valley local plan.

Sir Paul Beresford: The provision of information on inspectors reports on objections to development plans is the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. I have asked the inspectorate's chief executive, Mr. Christopher Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Michael Colvin, dated 3 February 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION NO. 1036: 2 FEBRUARY 1995

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the Test Valley Borough Local Plan.

The long inquiry into objections to the Test Valley Borough Local Plan opened on 11 May 1993, and closed on 22 December 1993 after 100 inquiry sitting days and site visit days. Some 1,600 written objections were lodged in addition to those heard at the inquiry, which have to be examined by Inspectors and reported on with recommendations to the Council.

The report is expected to be issued to the Council in mid-February 1995. By using a second Inspector, this is several months in advance of the date by which the report would normally be expected given the scale of the inquiry and the large number of written objections to be considered.

In view of your interest I will arrange for you to be advised of the date of despatch of the report to the Council.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the saving to public funds if the Ordnance Survey were privatised.

Mr. Atkins: The first review of Ordnance Survey's performance as an executive agency was carried out in 1994. It concluded that agency status had been a spur to significant improvements in performance. Consultants employed to look at options for the future status of Ordnance Survey assessed that it would continue to progress well with its current status and recommended that it should remain an executive agency for the time being. The consultants believed that privatisation offered potential benefits as well as disadvantages but found that various obstacles precluded any change of status in the immediate future. They were unable, at that time, to quantify the full costs of privatisation or subsequent savings to public funds. Government accepted these recommendations and OS will remain an agency for the next four years at least. In the meantime, I have tasked the chief executive of Ordnance Survey with investigating the obstacles to privatisation so that these costs and benefits can be established.

Housing Stock Transfers

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 210, if he will list the local authorities which have conducted a ballot on proposed large-scale voluntary transfer of their housing stock and, in each case, the number of tenants eligible to vote, the number of those participating and the number of those voting for and against the proposed transfer.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Since 1988, 64 local authorities have conducted tenant ballots on proposed large-scale voluntary transfers. These authorities are listed, with details of the number of properties involved, the rate of tenant participation in the ballot and the proportion of tenants voting for and against the proposal.

The Department does not keep a central record of the number of tenants eligible to vote in each transfer, the actual number of votes cast or the actual numbers of tenants voting for and against each proposal.

River Quality

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to maintain recent improvements in river quality in England and Wales.

Mr. Gummer: We have in hand a major programme for water quality improvement. Between 1989 and 2005 the water companies are spending an average of some £3 billion a year, much of it of benefit to water quality. The National Rivers Authority has since 1989 been able to bring a co-ordinated approach to discharge consenting and the other means it has of bringing about improvement. Other dischargers and farmers are taking steps that benefit water quality, much of it voluntary in response to codes of practice rather than regulation. The results are shown in the more than 15 per cent. net improvement in river quality that the NRA estimates took place between 1990 and 1993. These efforts will be continuing and we are going further than required by legislation, as is shown by the more than £500 million that water companies will be spending up to 2000 to bring about additional river quality improvement.

At the time of privatisation of the water industry in 1989, we provided a further mechanism for co-ordinating and prioritising improvement, in the form of statutory water quality objectives—SWQOs. Last May, the Government put in place the new classification system inter alia as the framework for SWQOs. We now intend to consult formally on proposals for a small set of SWQOs which will allow us to test the operation of the system on a pilot basis. The final details are being agreed with the NRA.

The proposals will specify the improvements to be achieved in each case and the timetable for achieving them. With the help of the NRA, I shall also identify the specific actions that will be needed, with a preliminary assessment of the likely costs and benefits. There will then be a three-month period within which any interested person or body may comment, including by offering further information on costs and benefits. I shall than decide whether and in what form to make the SWQO. In controversial cases, I may arrange for a local inquiry before reaching my decision.

The implementation procedures, and practical operation of the statutory objectives in the initial limited pilot group of catchments will be assessed before any decision is made on whether SWQOs should be introduced on a wider basis. The Government are also considering the development of proposals for economic instruments for water pollution and abstraction. Our intention on both national water regulation, including SWQOs, and economic instruments will need to take into account the way in which water legislation is developing in the European Community.

Construction Industry

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish another state of the construction industry report.

Mr. Gummer: The latest state of the construction industry report, produced jointly by my Department and representatives of the construction industry, has just been completed. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Crown Estate Meeting

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 174, what was the purpose of the meeting held on 26 May 1994 at the Crown Estate between English Nature, the British Association for Shooting and Conservation and the Crown Estate; and what conservation groups were invited to this meeting.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1995]: The informal discussions were to identify the key issues regarding the current process for leasing the foreshore for wildfowling. Conservation groups were subsequently consulted.

Tidal Land (Conservation)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conservation groups have been invited to participate in the Crown Estate's joint group on wildfowling and conservation on tidal land lease application procedures.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1995]: English Nature is a member of the joint group. Voluntary bodies are being consulted on the new draft procedures, which it is hoped will be extended to all foreshore leases granted by the Crown Estate.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Treasury on Monday 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 69.

Environmental Claims

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environmental when he initiated a report by the National Consumer Council on the issue of environmental claims and related issues; when the findings will be made public; and what actions the Government will take to address the report findings.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 February 1995]: My Department and the Department of Trade and Industry are discussing with the National Consumer Council the detailed specification for a study into the effectiveness of controls over the making of environmental claims. The study should be concluded in the summer. We will decide nearer the time how best to make the findings known and what action might be needed to follow them up.

Planning Funds

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 763, what plans he has to restrict the use to which local authorities may put planning gain money to the geographical area of the consent in question; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: We have no plans to introduce such restrictions.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Constitutional Change

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what constitutional change he proposes should take place in the United Kingdom before the end of the century.

The Prime Minister: Any proposals for constitutional change will be put before Parliament when it is appropriate to do so.

Staff Inquiry

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister between what dates Ms Baxendale served on the Scott inquiry team; and if he will list the members and grades and originating departments of the current team.

The Prime Minister: Miss Presiley Baxendale QC has worked on Sir Richard Scott's inquiry from 18 January 1993 to 31 March 1994 inclusive, and from 2 May 1994 to 13 May 1994 inclusive and thereafter from time to time as the need arises.

The current members of the inquiry team are:

	Department
Christopher Muttukumaru (Grade 5)	Treasury Solicitor's Department
David Price (Grade 5)	Department of Trade and Industry
Peter Edwards (Legal Officer)	Inland Revenue Solicitor's Office
Karen Wiseman (Grade 7 (Legal))	Crown Prosecution Service
Catherine Southern (Grade 7 (Legal))	Crown Prosecution Service
Christopher Stone (HEO)	Department of Trade and Industry
Mufassir Mohammed (EO)	Department of the Environment
Sonia Octave (AO)	Home Office
Joanne Bishop (AA)	Home Office
Velma Bernard (Personal Secretary)	Department of Trade and Industry
Wendy Moore (Personal Secretary)	Department of Trade and Industry

Downing Street Policy Unit

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Prime Minister from what sources the head of the Downing street policy unit is paid; and if he will make a statement on the division of his role in relation to official and party matters.

The Prime Minister: The head of the Downing street policy unit is paid from the Cabinet Office other services vote as a special adviser. Like other special advisers, and like his predecessors under this and previous Administrations, he assists me with work which is partly governmental and partly political.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Prime Minister what funds are available other than funds available through the Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in the current financial year for coastal protection and repair.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given yesterday by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Official Report, column 85, and my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of the Environment, Official Report, column 12.

Deception Island

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what plans exist to clean up the site of the former British whaling station on Deception island.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been asked to reply.

Further work on the clean up of the former British station on Deception island is planned for 1996–97, subject to the allocation of funds and the co-operation of the other Antarctic treaty partners involved.

Pay Rises (Utilities)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to establish a committee to examine utility directors' and chairmen's pay rises, pension contributions and share options.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 February 1995]: No. As I have previously made clear, private sector salaries and other remuneration are a matter for companies and their shareholders to decide, not the Government. We welcome the establishment of Sir Richard Greenbury's group, which will prepare a code of good practice on directors' pay and conditions, and the recent contribution made by the Institute of Directors.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given yesterday by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury, Official Report, column 69.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radioactive Waste Shipments

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent the United Kingdom will be liable in the event of an accident resulting in radioactive contamination from the imminent shipment of vitrified high-level radioactive waste from France to Japan on a BNFL/PNTL ship.

Mr. Charles Wardle: If nuclear injury or damage occurs in the course of carriage of cargoes by PNTL in a country which is not a party to the Paris convention on nuclear liability, there is a possibility of claims against BNFL/PNTL, as the carrier.

Civil Servants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the departments and agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document "Focus on Ability".

Mr. Ian Taylor: The figures for the Department, excluding the following executive agencies—Companies House, the Insolvency Service, the National Engineering Laboratory, the National Physical Laboratory, the National Weights and Measures Laboratory, the Patent Office and the Radiocommunications Agency—but including the Accounts Services Agency and the Laboratory of the Government Chemist are set out in the table. The figures include only those staff who have chosen to declare that they have a disability or long-term health condition.

	Registered disabled staff	Non-registered disabled staff	Total number of disabled staff	Total number of staff
Number	52	146	198	6,449
Per cent. of total staff	0.8	2.3	3.1	—

I have asked the chief executives of Companies House, the Insolvency Service, the National Engineering Laboratory, the National Physical Laboratory, the National Weights and Measures laboratory, the Patent Office and the Radiocommunications Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. John McAllion, dated 7 February 1995:

You recently tabled the following Parliamentary Question:

"To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the departments and agencies for which he has responsibiliy are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document, Focus on Ability."

I am replying as Chief Executive of Companies House Executive Agency.

The figures are set out below, and include only those staff who have chosen to declare that they have a disability or long-term health condition.

	Registered disabled staff	Non-registered disabled staff	Total number of disabled staff	Total number of staff
Number	14	13	27	1,143

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. John McAllion, dated 31 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of proportion of non-industrial civil servants in The Insolvency Service who have a disability.

The figures for the Insolvency Service are as set out below. These only include those staff who have chosen to declare that they have a disability or long term health condition.

	Registered disabled	Non registered disabled	Total number disabled staff	Total number of staff
Number	19	28	47	1,615
Percent of total staff	1.18	1.73	2.91	—

Notes:[1] Figures are provided on a head count basis and exclude casual and industrial staff.

[2] Figures show the position on 25 January 1995.

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTIONS No. 129

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question relating to the proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the departments and agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document, Focus on Ability. The following numbers apply to NEL

Registered disabled—2

Unregistered disabled—1

Total manpower at January 1995—252

Therefore disabled as a proportion—1.2 per cent.

I trust you will find the above information to be satisfactory for your purposes.

Letter from Dr. Peter Clapham to Mr. John McAllion, dated 31 January 1995:

I am writing in response to your question to the President of the Board of Trade regarding the proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the departments and agencies for which he has responsibility who are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document, Focus on Ability.

Details of staff currently employed by the National Physical Laboratory, who have chosen to declare their disability, are as follows:-

	Registered disabled	Non-registered disabled	Total disabled	Total staff
Number	6	26	32	651
Per cent. of total staff	0.9	4.0	4.9	—

The above figures are provided on a head count basis as at 25 January, and exclude industrial and casual staff.

I hope this provides the information you require.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. John McAllion, dated 31 January 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about staff with disabilities.

This Agency has no registered disabled among its 48 staff, although four members of staff (8.3 per cent.) have declared a level of disability.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. John McAllion, dated 7 February 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION 129

The President of the Board has asked me to respond to your Question about non-industrial disabled staff.

The information requested is set out below. The figures include only those staff who have chosen to declare that they have a disability or long-term health condition.

	Registered disabled staff	Non-registered disabled staff	Total number of disabled staff	Total number of staff
Numbers	16	12	28	891
Per cent. of Total Staff	1.8	1.35	3.15	—

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. John McAllion, dated 7 February 1995:

Employment of Disabled People

I am replying on behalf of the Radiocommunications Agency to your written question to the President of the Board of Trade about the employment of disabled people.

To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what proportion and number of non-industrial civil servants in the Departments and Agencies for which he has responsibility are registered disabled and disabled as defined by the Cabinet Office document, Focus on Ability.

Of the 542 staff employed in the Agency on 1 January, there are two registered disabled staff and 14 other staff who have chosen to declare their disability. In total this represents 3 per cent. of Agency staff (0.4 per cent. registered disabled, 2.6 per cent. unregistered disabled staff who have chosen to declare their disability).

Non-commercial Disputes

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new provision he is planning for the handling of non-commercial disputes.

Mr. Heseltine: The provision of the draft Arbitration Bill would, like those of the existing Arbitration Acts 1950 to 1979, apply to commercial and non-commercial arbitrations alike.

Bills (Private Utilities)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will takes steps to ensure that partial payment of bills from private utilities may be made at post offices in cash.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Post Office Counters already has such arrangements on a commercial basis with British Gas, British Telecom and the great majority of regional water and electricity companies.

Uranium Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 26 January to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), Official Report, columns 335–36, if he will give the reasons why the British percentage share of EU exports of low enriched, high enriched and natural uranium is confidential for the years 1988 to 1992 but not confidential for 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on exports of these commodities is available in aggregate only, due to commercial confidentiality. With the introduction of Intrastat from January 1993, separate figures for EU and non-EU exports are the available aggregates.

Konver

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which areas have been selected for assistance under the Konver initiative; what types of projects will be supported; how many jobs are expected to result; what funds are involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A list of priority areas eligible for Konver II will be published by European Commission in the Official Journal shortly. I expect the London borough of Ealing to be included in this list. The Government are currently considering additional areas to be included in the British programme to be sent to the Commission by 1 March. Once the programme has been agreed, probably in the summer, applications for grant can be considered.

Konver targets small and medium enterprises needing advice and support for diversification, such as the promotion of innovation, know-how and technology transfer and feasibility studies. The rehabilitation of military sites and environmental improvement is also covered. There is also a provision for training.

The number of jobs likely to be created through Konver II will not be known until applications are received and considered.

Konver I grants worth £17.9 million were awarded in 1993 to projects across the country. The UK's allocation from Konver II will be £79 million.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements he has made to ensure that agreements existing for the sale and purchase of land by British Coal will be carried out by the appropriate successor privatised companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In general, the acquisition and disposal of land are commercial matters for the mining companies concerned. Where British Coal's interests in land have been transferred to successor companies, any binding agreements relating to the sale and purchase of that land have also been transferred.

Consultants

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department permits consultants to tender for contracts resulting from work they have carried out in (a) drawing up the specification for the tender documents or (b) recommending the contracting out of a Government service.

Mr. Heseltine: (a) No. (b) Consultants are generally excluded from tendering for services where they have been employed to advise on the feasibility of contracting out. Where a general exclusion has not applied, appropriate safeguards have been required to prevent potential conflicts of interest arising between the interests of the project and any other commercial interest the consultant may have.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if Shreeveport Consultants submitted its accounts for 1993–94 to Companies House by the legal deadline.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: As this is an operational matter for Companies House executive agency, I have asked David Durham, the chief executive, to respond directly.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Nigel Griffiths, dated 7 February 1995:

You have recently tabled a Parliamentary Question which asked for details about the filing of the 1993–94 accounts for Shreeveport Consultants. The Minister has informed you that I have been asked to reply as Chief Executive of the Agency as this is an operational matter for Companies House.

There is no company with the name Shreeveport Consultants on the UK Register. There is a company called Shreeveport Ltd, but we have no way of knowing whether this is the company that you are interested in.

Information on document filings by UK companies is a matter of public record, and available to any member of the public either through our search rooms or through our on-line information service Companies House Direct. There is a statutory fee of £1 charged for the screen of information which shows the document filing history of any company. You may find that use of these services provides the quickest and easiest way of checking whether you have correctly identified the company in which you are interested, and of finding out any relevant information on it.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to publish the responses of official receivers to the consultation on the affirmative order to enable the work of the Insolvency Service to be contracted out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I would propose to publish a digest of official receivers' responses to the current consultation by laying copies in the Library of the House before seeking parliamentary approval to any draft enabling order.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the amount spent annually on mechanical processing work in the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In its report, Stoy Hayward estimated that, based on costs and the average staff in post for 1993–94, the contracting-out of administrative work would open up some £24 million of official receivers' work to competition.

This figure will vary with changing case loads and changes in the level of the Insolvency Service's staffing.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to recover the working papers of Stoy Hayward Consultants on the Insolvency Service and to ensure that Stoy Hayward Insolvency Co. has not been passed copies.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No steps have been taken to recover Stoy Hayward's working papers.

All information obtained by Stoy Hayward Consulting as part of its work for the Insolvency Service is subject to its undertaking as to its confidentiality.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what fee is being paid to Shreeveport Consultants for drawing up the specification for contracting out the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The total contract price for drawing up a specification, bid documentation and evaluation criteria was agreed with Shreeveport Ltd. at £126,900, including VAT.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of the grades of the staff identified as surplus to the Insolvency Service by Stoy Hayward as option 1 of its recommendations.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Stoy Hayward identified £24 million of administrative case work which could be exposed to competition if a decision were made to contract out. It did not identify the staff undertaking such work as surplus as it recognised that there would be a need for contract management and supervision and that contracting out would offer the possibility of increased concentration on the official receivers' investigative role.

Regional Operations

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff his Department employs on a regional basis in each standard English region; what is the cost of running these regional operations; what was the total budget for each region in the latest available year; and what are the main purposes for which the budget is used.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Disaggregated information on the basis of standard English regions is not available. However, information on the resources employed by my Department in each of the English regions covered by the Government offices for the regions is set out in the table.

	[1]Staff in post as at 1 January 1995	Running costs for 1993–94	Running cost budget for 1994–95
North East	112.0	3,618,000	3,566,000
North West	123.0	4,720,000	3,739,000
Merseyside	44.5	[2]n/a	1,279,000

South East	72.5	1,693,000	2,769,000
East	55.0	1,799,000	2,209,000
London	60.0	[2]n/a	1,971,000
Total	882.0	24,559,000	28,850,000

Notes:
[1] Staff figures are based on full time equivalents (part-time staff count as 0.5)
[2] The Government Office Merseyside and Government Office London did not exist in 1993–94.

A breakdown of these running costs and budgets as well as details of the activities associated with them were published in MINIS 1994, available in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION

Nursery Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list those organisations which have made written submissions to the official task force consultation on nursery education for all four-year-olds.

Teachers

Mr. Steinbery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many full–time equivalent teachers there were in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows the full–time equivalent number of teachers employed in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sectors, including self–governing—GM—schools, in England as at January of each year.

Note:
[1] As from 1/4/93 sixth form colleges became part of the Further Education sector, and the 1994 figures therefore exclude teachers in these colleges. The second 1993 figure also excludes these teachers to allow comparison with 1994.

Schools (Wheelchairs)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which local education authorities have provided her with information on access to schools for pupils in wheelchairs under the Education (Information as to Provision of Education) Regulations 1994.

Mr. Forth: The regulations require local education authorities to provide information on the accessibility of schools to pupils in wheelchairs to the Secretary of State after 1 May and by 1 June 1995, and every second year thereafter. Information on school's access required under these regulations has, accordingly, not yet been received.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list for each institution of further education funded by the Further Education Funding Council the salary range of the principal in the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not collected centrally. FEFC guidelines on accounting policies recommend that colleges should disclose the emoluments of the principal and other senior postholders in their accounts, which are publicly available.

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she expects to respond to the recommendations of the Further Education Funding Council regarding the governing bodies of (a) Wilmorton college, Derby and (b) St. Phillip's college, Birmingham.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend is aware of the need to bring these matters to an early conclusion. She will announce her decisions shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Cloakroom

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee when he expects the new machines in the Members' Cloakroom to be repaired.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: This is a matter for the Serjeant at Arms.

WALES

Agri-Environmental Regulations

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to meet the EEC agri-environmental regulations; and what funds have been made available for their implementation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the past year, we have launched in Wales two new environmentally sensitive areas, a countryside access scheme, a habitat scheme and an organic aid scheme. We plan to launch new payments to promote public access in ESAs and a moorland scheme shortly. These are additional to the existing five ESAs and Tir Cymen. Expenditure on these schemes is planned to rise to £15,000,000 by 1996–97.

Crickhowell House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department's approval was (a) sought and (b) given for the construction of the Crickhowell house headquarters of the Welsh Common Health Services Authority at Roath basin, Cardiff docks, Cardiff; what independent evaluation of the alternative sites available was made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Crickhowell house was constructed by Grosvenor Waterside, the property arm of Associated British Ports and therefore not subject to approval by the Welsh Office.

In addition to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority's appraisal of alternative sites and options, the authority's occupation of the building was independently assessed by Gooch and Wagstaff, property consultants, which confirmed that it offered the best value for money in terms of the options considered. The National Audit Office also examined the papers.

Cardiff Bay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 538, on what date the agreement by Associated British Ports to make a contribution to Cardiff Bay development corporation infrastructure costs announced on 11 May 1989 lapsed; if the chairman of the corporation sought his Department's consent to the lapsing; and if his Department's consent was sought for the development agreement between the company and the corporation signed in March 1991.

Mr. Redwood: The Department's consent was not required to the development agreement with Associated British Ports. The hon. Gentleman's questions about the development agreement are operational matters for the corporation, and the chief executive will write to the hon. Gentleman in response.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he secured the approval of the Cardiff Bay development corporation for the National Audit Office to have secondary access to its accounts for regularity and propriety purposes; and if he will place a copy of the memorandum of agreement in the Library.

Mr. Redwood: The financial memorandum of Cardiff Bay development corporation was amended on 2 December 1992 to provide the Comptroller and Auditor General access to the records and books of the corporation. A copy of the letter of the same date which made that amendment has been placed in the Library of the House.

Health Authorities

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions the local advisory committees in each health authority area in Wales have made representations to that health authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally, but could be obtained from health authorities.

Medical Committees

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions (a) the Welsh medical committee, (b) the Welsh dental committee, (c) the Welsh nursing committee, (d) the Welsh midwifery committee, (e) the Welsh pharmaceutical committee and (f) the Welsh optical committee, have made representations to him in each of the last three years.

Mr. Redwood: I receive advice from the following five statutory committees.

(a) the Welsh Medical Committee;
(b) the Welsh Dental Committee;
(c) the Welsh Nursing and Midwifery Committee;
(d) the Welsh Pharmaceutical Committee; and
(e) the Welsh Optical Committee;

Representation is made both directly to me and indirectly through my representative who attends the committee.

Of those representations made directly to the Department over the last three years, (a) the Welsh medical committee has presented one report, with a further three currently subject to external consultation; (b) the Welsh dental committee has submitted three reports and offered advice on a further three consultation documents; (c) the Welsh nursing and midwifery committee has submitted five reports and; (d) and one each has been submitted by the Welsh pharmaceutical and Welsh optical committees.

Each statutory committee also produces an annual report.

Waste-to-energy Schemes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what waste-to-energy schemes there are in Wales in accordance with the non-fossil fuel organisation; and what plans there are to establish such schemes in the near future.

Mr. Redwood: No waste-to-energy projects were supported in Wales under the first two orders of the non-fossil fuel obligation. Four projects have been awarded contracts under the recently announced third order.

Recycling

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been paid, and to which organisations, in respect of recycling in Wales, under the (a) recycling credits, (b) environmental technology innovation scheme, (c) the Department of Trade and Industry's environmental management options scheme and (d) Euroenviron.

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows:

(a) Details are not held centrally.
(b), (c) and (d): No payments have been made to organisations based in Wales.

Hazardous Substance Consents

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hazardous substance consents were made by local councils in Wales in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the period between 1 April 1993 and 31 March 1994, 12 hazardous substance consents were issued in Wales. The consents were issued under the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990, which came into force on 1 June 1992. The Act requires that the storage or use of certain substances on particular sites are consented to by the local council. Substances can be used or stored in significant amounts only after the local council has assessed the risk to people in the neighbourhood.

Only five councils received applications, compared to 26 in the previous year. Of the 12 consents issued, 10 were new applications and two were carried forward from the previous year. These were both consents for sites where substances were already being stored or used before the Act came into force.

TREASURY

Standard of Living Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he measures an increase in the standard of living; and how many years it would take to double the standard of living at the rate of increase since (i) 1979 and (ii) October 1989.

Mr. Nelson: The standard of living can be measured in a number of ways. Taking real personal disposable income per head, a per capita growth rate of 2.8 per cent. per annum would be required to achieve a doubling of living standards over the next 25 years. This compares with average annual per capita growth rates of 2.1 per cent. since 1979 and 0.8 per cent. since October 1989. However, as these are both dates from the peak of an economic cycle, such selective periods cannot be reliable indicators of future growth.

Growth Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what annual rate of growth in GDP is implied in his objective of doubling the standard of living in 25 years; how that compares with the increase in the years since the first year of membership of the EEC; and what role interest rates play in achieving that objective.

Mr. Nelson: The standard of living can be measured in many ways. In order that real personal disposal income per head should double in 25 years, each year it would need to grow by 2.8 per cent. The growth rate of real personal disposable income per head between 1973, the year we joined the EEC, and 1994 was around 2 per cent. per annum.

Monetary policy is set to keep underlying inflation within the 1 to 4 per cent. target. A low inflation environment provides the best chance of delivering higher living standards through a period of sustained growth.

Rathlin

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if vehicles on Rathlin maintain exemption from vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am not aware of any vehicle currently registered on Rathlin which will pay more vehicle excise duty, or pay duty for the first time, as a result of the changes in schedule 4 to the Finance Bill.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the proceeds under inheritance tax from estates valued at (a) under £1 million, (b) £1 million to £10 million, (c) £10 million to £50 million and (d) over £50 million in the latest available year.

Sir George Young: Estimated liabilities for inheritance tax for estates passing on death in 1991–92, the latest year available, are given in the table:

Value of net estate, including lifetime transfers within seven years of death	Liability[1] £ million
Under £1 million	790
£1 million to £2 million	150
Over £2 million	140
All estates	1,080

[1] Provisional

A further breakdown of estates over £2 million cannot be reliably estimated and, in any case, the numbers involved may be too small to give adequate protection to the confidentiality of individual estates.

Heavy Fuel Oil Duty

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of revenue raised from heavy fuel oil duty in each of the last three years from (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Great Britain.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The total revenue raised from heavy fuel oil duty in Northern Ireland and Great Britain over the last available three years is as follows:

Year	Northern Ireland £ million	Great Britain £ million
1990–91	71.13	2,740.27
1991–92	86.84	3,070.96
1992–93	95.32	3,296.78

HEALTH

Mental Nurses

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered mental nurses were employed in the Northumberland health authority in each year since 1989; and what was the percentage change in each year.

Mr. Sackville: The information available centrally is shown in the table:

Qualified mental health nursing staff within Northumberland DHA as at 30 September 1989–1993

Year	Wte	Per cent. change
1989	280	1989–90 – 6.2

1992	220	—

NHS Management

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to develop alternative systems of management of the national health service.

Mr. Malone: The system of management that we continue to develop for the national health service, which began with the NHS reforms introduced in 1991, is one of decentralisation of responsibilities to purchasers and providers, while maintaining clear lines of accountability. This improves services to patients and ensures better value for money by devolving decision making about the delivery of services to local level.

Mental Illness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are at present legally detained under Mental Health Act powers.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Private Finance Partnership Initiative

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the projects which at any time have been under consideration as part of the private finance partnership initiative, giving in each case the date of the submission of the project to the Department, and the present status of the application.

Mr. Sackville: Since the launch of the private finance initiative in November 1992, the national health service has been encouraged to exploit the benefits of partnership with the private sector. The NHS Executive issued the capital investment manual under the health service guidelines—HSG(94)31—on 28 June 1994, copies of which are available in the Library, which required consideration of options of partnership with the private sector for all capital projects. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) on 3 November 1994, Official Report, column 1269, for the latest available information on the status of schemes approved. Other information on date of first submission to the NHS Executive and current status is not collected centrally.

Speech Therapists

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to provide bursaries for post-graduates pursuing two-year courses to qualify as speech therapists.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to do so.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has conducted into the length of London ambulance service emergency response times in the one-hour period before shift changes.

Mr. Sackville: This is a management issue being addressed by the London ambulance service.

Social Service Authorities

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the annual payments to each social service authority in lieu of community care.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities were given indicative figures for the 1995–96 special transitional grant in letter LASSL (94) 11, copies of which are available in the Library. Final figures will be issued in due course. It is up to local authorities how much of their general funding they make available for community care services in addition to this.

Malpractice

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors have been disciplined for (a) negligence and (b) incompetence for each year since 1984; and how many were struck off.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Complaints

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been received by each family health services authority categories of complaint and the outcome of the complaints in each category.

Mr. Malone: The available information is published annually in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics" copies of which are available in the Library.

Fluoridated Water Supplies

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase the availability of fluoridated water supplies throughout the country.

Mr. Malone: The Government remain convinced that fluoridation of drinking water is a safe and effective public health measure and will continue to support the introduction of such schemes, particularly where the dental health of the population is known to be poor. In 1994, the Government agreed to help with the capital funding of seven schemes in the north of England which would bring fluoridation to 1.7 million more people.

Decisions about fluoridation should, however, continue to be taken at a local level.

GP Fundholders

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given the health commissions in respect of returning to general practitioner fundholders savings they have made.

Mr. Malone: Paragraph 24 of the National Health Service (Fund-holding Practices) Regulations 1993 sets out how general practitioner fundholders may use audited savings for the benefit of patients.

Dental Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health districts in England have permission to employ salaried dentists; and how many have now (a) recruited and (b) failed to recruit the approved number.

Mr. Malone: The number of salaried dentists employed by English family health services authorities is shown in the table. In addition to those family health services authorities listed, Berkshire, Dorset, Hampshire, Hereford and Worcester, Kingston and Richmond, Northamptonshire and Solihull have been granted permission to employ salaried dentists. Information about vacancies is not available centrally.

Restricted Growth

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she or her Department have had in regard to the incidence of restricted growth; what reply she has sent; what action she is taking; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Mr Paul Zetter, CBE, honorary president of the Restricted Growth Association, has written to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently expressing concern that the association has no communication with the majority of people of restricted growth in this country, and mentioning its wish to create a database of those affected.

I have today written to Mr. Zetter to say that I fully support the excellent work that the association is doing to help people of restricted growth. However, personal health information is subject to the general principle of the law of confidence. As such, health records can be disclosed only within the national health service on a strictly need-to-know basis and, generally speaking, it cannot be disclosed to an outsider or third party without the patient's prior consent. I have invited Mr. Zetter to meet officials of my Department to discuss this issue further.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury gave him on 6 February, Official Report, column 69.

Anabolic Agents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to restrict the promotion and sale of anabolic agents designed to improve sporting prowess.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Anabolic steroids are prescription-only medicines, and their promotion and sale is regulated by the Medicines Act 1968. A failure to comply with the regulations can be a criminal offence. Products which purport to be anabolic steroids but which in fact are not may also be subject to the requirements of the regulations if medicinal claims are made on behalf of such products.

Enforcement of the Medicines Act is the responsibility of the Medicines Control Agency. Enforcement action against persons who illegally manufacture, sell or promote anabolic steroids is a high priority for the agency.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department announced on 2 November that he intended to bring anabolic steroids within the controls of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. The necessary amending regulations will be brought before Parliament in due course.

Child Care

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the total social services budget was spent on child care provision in England in the last five years.

Mr. Bowis [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1994, c. 987–88]: I regret that there were clerical errors in the 1992–93 data given in my previous reply.

A corrected table of figures is as follows.

Gross expenditure on personal social services in England

	Total £ million	Children's services £ million	Children's services per cent.
1988–89	3776.1	1164.3	30.8
1989–90	4204.4	1277.3	30.4
1990–91	4697.7	1449.4	30.9
1991–92	5127.4	1551.4	30.3
1992–93	5469.9	1653.8	30.2

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Pools Companies

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to lift the ban to allow the pools companies to advertise on radio and television; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary announced on 25 January that the Government had decided that it was not necessary in the public interest for the ban on broadcast advertising by the football pools to be maintained. I have invited the Independent Television Commission and the Radio Authority to consider amending their advertising codes accordingly.

Tourism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish the initial findings of the McKinsey Inc. management consultants' report into the future of tourism in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I shall be making a statement about tourism policy in the near future. The final report on the work McKinsey and Co. has done for the Department and the tourist boards will be placed in the House of Commons Library when it is available.

Pornography (Internet)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what powers he and his hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade have to regulate the use of pornography on the Internet.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science to a question by the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 18 January 1995, Official Report, column 488.

Television

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of current Independent Television Commission codes in regulating the licensing of channels, with particular reference to Babylon Blue;

(2) what representations he has received from the Independent Television Commission to strengthen the regulatory powers over adult channels.

Mr. Dorrell: I am aware of public concern about the portrayal of sexual conduct in television programmes and keep this matter under careful review, in consultation with the chairman of the regulatory bodies. Babylon Blue, which has been licensed by the Independent Television Commission, has yet to begin broadcasting. If and when it does, it will be expected fully to comply with ITC's programme code and the conditions of its licence. The ITC has powers to ensure that it does. I have received no request from the ITC for any strengthening of its regulatory powers over adult channels.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the maximum penalties available (a) to the Independent Television Commission and (b) to his Department where (i) satellite and (ii) terrestrial television have broken the terms of their licence or ITC codes.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the terms of the Broadcasting Act 1990, the Independent Television Commission has sole responsibility for regulating the licence conditions of terrestrial and satellite commercial television services, which include a requirement to observe the ITC's codes. The commission has a range of sanctions it can impose for non-compliance with the terms of its licences. The maximum penalty that the ITC can impose on Channels 3 and 5 licensees and on satellite services is revocation of the licence. On Channel 4, the maximum penalty the commission can impose is a fine not exceeding 3 per cent. of the channel's annual qualifying revenue for the first occasion and 5 per cent. thereafter.

Jazz

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps his Department will take to increase funding for jazz.

Mr. Dorrell: Central Government support for the arts is channelled through the arts councils and, in England, the 10 regional arts boards. It is for these bodies to determine the balance of funding as between the various art forms and individual arts organisations. I understand, however, that the Arts Council is close to completing a major review of support for jazz in this country.

National Lottery

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the first grants to the arts will be available from the national lottery funds.

Mr. Dorrell: The arts councils in the United Kingdom are considering applications for lottery funds and the first grants are expected to be announced in spring 1995.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how Her Majesty's Treasury is investing the funds raised for good causes by the national lottery in the period prior to the first allocation of grants by the lottery distribution bodies.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 February 1995]: Under the terms of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 responsibility for investing the proceeds of the national lottery falls to the national debt office, which is a non-ministerial department separate from the Treasury. The investment powers issued by the Treasury allow the national lottery distribution fund to be invested in a range of secure financial instruments described in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 5, 5A, 5B, 9 and 9A of part II of schedule 1 to the Trustee Investments Act 1961.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury on 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 69.

Unusual Industries

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what will be (a) the fee and (b) the expected expenses paid to the firm Unusual Industries in respect of its organisation of events to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end in Europe of the second world war.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 February 1995]: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not our practice to divulge the level of payments made to contractors.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what will be the expected level of costs borne by his Department's administration vote, class XI, vote 7, in respect of officials' support of the firm, Unusual Industries, in its organisation of events to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end in Europe of the second world war.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 February 1995]: No costs will be borne on the Department's administration vote, class XI, vote 7, in respect of officials' support of Messrs. Unusual Industries in the provision of the programme of commemorative events. The costs to vote of officials' engaged on monitoring the performance of the contract and approving payments to Messrs. Unusual Industries is likely to be some £60,000. There are also likely to be additional small costs relating to the work of other personnel involved on an occasional basis.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage by what process the firm Unusual Industries was chosen to organise the programme of events to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end in Europe of the second world war.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 February 1995]: Messrs. Unusual Industries was selected to provide the services in question by a process of competitive tendering.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the annual actual administrative expenditure for his Department for each year of its operation, in 1994 prices; and if he will provide a breakdown for each year to show the annual expenditure on the Royal Commission on historic monuments of England.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The Department of National Heritage was created in April 1992 when certain areas of responsibility from six other Departments were transferred. The central administration costs for each year of its operation are as follows with figures in 1994 prices shown in brackets:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Total DNH administrative expenditure	9,898 (10,404)	22,710 (23,164)	20,161 —

Annual expenditure by the Royal Commission on the historical monuments of England, which is accounted for on a separate vote, is as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
RCHME gross expenditure	12,251 (12,878)	14,967 (15,266)	13,877 —

Notes:
1 Figures for DNH administrative expenditure exclude the Royal Fine Art Commission and the Millennium Commission.

The figures for 1992–93 do not reflect full DNH expenditure cost since some part-year central service costs from former Departments were met by those Departments.

Figures for 1992–93 and 1993–94 include some one-off cost that relate to the setting up of the Department.

Figures for 1994–95 represent the current level of provision before adjustments for the spring supplementary. Figures for actual outturn will not be available until the end of the financial year.

Arts Grants, Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 619, if he will give the level of the grants from the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts in Wales given to each of the organsations listed and the dates on which the applications were (a) made and (b) approved.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The information requested is in the table:

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 6 February 1995]: My Department has not withdrawn any rules and regulations in the last 12 months.

The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed.

The manpower implications are taken into account in the Department's central manpower plans, which will be published in the Department's annual report.

Second World War (Anniversary)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the level of consultancy payments expected to be made to the programme project manager for the organisation of events to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end in Europe of the second world war.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 February 1995]: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not our practice to divulge the level of payments made to consultants.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them publish periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specially designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specially designed and printed corporate stationery.

Sir John Wheeler: The administration of the next steps agencies is a matter for the chief executive of each agency. I have asked the chief executives to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Pat Devlin to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 24 January 1995:

SETTING UP OF NEXT STEPS AGENCIES

I have been asked to reply, in respect of the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency, to your Parliamentary Question.

The Agency has leased its Headquarters building at an annual rent of £196,000.

We do not publish periodical journals and we do not have executive cars or corporate clothing.

The Agency has a specially designed logo which cost £4,750 and specially designed printed stationery which cost £2,280.03.

This is a new Agency and posts did not exist prior to it being set up. At 3 January 1995 there were 1,025 Whole Time Equivalent Staff-in-Post for the entire Northern Ireland Agency, of whom 785 are engaged in delivering child support services to the GB Child Support Agency under a Provision of Service Agreement

Letter from D. A. Stanley to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply, on behalf of the Compensation Agency, to your recent Question about Next Steps agencies.

The Compensation Agency remains in the accommodation occupied by the predecessor division. No additional support staff have been required. The Agency does not publish periodical journals nor does it have any executive cars. Approximately £5,000 was spent on developing a logo and on average an additional £4,000 per year is spent on specially designed corporate stationery. The Agency does not have corporate clothing.

Letter from Brendan Magee to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the costs associated with the setting up of this Agency, Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland.

We have not acquired our own Headquarters building, have not required any additional support staff, have no executive cars and have no corporate clothing.

We publish an Annual Report and a Business/Corporate plan at an annual cost of approximately £2,500. An Agency logo was designed through an in-house competition at a cost of £150 and we use our own headed stationery which costs no more than the Branch stationery which it replaced.

I hope you will find this information helpful.

Letter from L. H. Ferguson to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

In the absence of Mr. Watson, who is on leave, I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the costs associated with the set up of the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency.

The Agency has not acquired its own Headquarters building, has required two additional support staff and has no executive cars.

We publish an Annual Report and Business Plan at a total annual cost of £39,000. We have a specially designed logo at a cost of £1,000 with annual corporate clothing at £1,900 more, and specially designed stationery at £2,000 more, than the pre-Agency costs.

I hope you will find this information helpful

Letter from M. J. D. Brand to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the costs associated with the set up of the Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland as a Next Steps Agency.

Ordnance Survey has not acquired its own Headquarters building, does not have any executive cars and has no corporate clothing for its staff.

Three additional support staff have been required for accounts work since we became an Agency and an Annual Report and Business Plan are published each year at a cost of £7,600.

We continue to use a logo which was introduced long before we became an Agency and which appears on our stationery.

I hope you will find this information helpful.

Letter from D. W. Gallagher to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 6 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the costs associated with the set up of the Rate Collection Agency.

The Rate Collection Agency has not acquired its own Headquarters building, has not required additional support staff and has no executive cars.

An Annual Report and internal magazine are published each year at a cost of £4,700. Corporate clothing (ties and scarves) were ordered for the Agency launch in April 1991 at a cost of £2,705.

Finally an Agency logo was designed through an in-house competition at a cost of £100. However corporate stationery costs remain broadly similar to pre-Agency levels.

I hope you will find this information helpful.

Letter from Alex Wylie to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 23 January 1995:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the costs associated with the set up of the Northern Ireland Social Security Agency.

The Social Security Agency did not acquire a Headquarters building when it was established, but made use of existing accommodation at Castle Buildings, Stormont. We do not publish periodical journals, we do not have any executive cars, nor do Agency staff have corporate clothing.

We do have an Agency logo and were advised by consultants on the design of Agency stationery. I regret that we are unable to give the separate costs of these. However, the total cost of the development of the logo, letterheads for Agency stationery, signage for the Agency's offices and a corporate identity manual cost a total of £13,397.17 including VAT.

Finally, 30 additional staff were needed in the Agency for work arising mainly in the areas of Finance, Planning, Personnel and Parliamentary Business which had been transferred from the Department.

I hope you will find this information helpful.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 25 January 1995:

You have asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland a number of questions about Next Steps Agencies. The Secretary of State has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply on behalf of that Agency.

The Agency has established its headquarters in Clarendon House, Belfast. This building was already a wholly owned part of the Government estate.

The Agency brought together in a single organisation the training and employment functions of the Department of Economic Development and a number of responsibilities previously held by the Northern Ireland Training Authority along with some of those of a number of Industrial Training Boards. Overall staffing in the Agency has reduced from 1,660 at the time of its launch in April 1990 (which was the number of staff fulfilling those functions of the Department for which the Agency was given responsibility) to 1,300 at present.

Two Periodical Journals are published by the Agency at an annual cost of £28,000.

A single executive car was purchased in 1992 at a cost of £13,500. Repairs and running costs, including petrol for the current financial year are around £1,800.

The Agency does not provide corporate clothing for its staff.

When the Agency was established the design of a corporate identity including a logo was commissioned. The overall costs of this work was £11,000. Costs of Corporate Stationery incorporating the Agency's logo are no more than was the cost of producing the Department's stationery which incorporated its own house style. The annual cost of printing stationery is just over £11,000.

I trust that you will find this information helpful.

Letter from D. J. Bell to Mr. Gerald Kaufman, dated 13 January 1995:

VALUATION AND LANDS AGENCY

Sir John Wheeler has asked that I write to you in my capacity as Commissioner and Chief Executive of the Valuation and Lands Agency to give the information requested by you from the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on 19 January 1995.

The period since Agentisation has been a most challenging one as the organisation sought to accommodate the necessary cultural change brought about by Agency status and strove to achieve the demanding targets set for it in a climate of considerable financial constraint across the public sector as a whole.

I am confident that the Agency will continue to demonstrate improved performance flowing from the tighter targeting and resource control put in place under Next Steps.

The following is the specific information which you requested:-

(i) The Agency does not own its headquarters building—this was occupied by the Valuation and Lands Office before its agentisation—but shows an assessed notional annual rental value in its Accounts (£275,000 1993–94);

(ii) no additional support staff have been acquired since agentisation;

(iii) the approximate annual cost of publishing periodic journals is £13,700;

(iv) the Agency does not have any executive cars;

(v) the one-off cost of the Agency logo was £6,243;

(vi) the Agency does not have corporate clothing; and

(vii) the cost of specifically designed and printed corporate stationery since agentisation is £5,870.

I trust this information is sufficient for your purposes, however if I can be of any further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Constituency Boundaries

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the occasions on which Northern Ireland constituency boundaries were discussed (a) in the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference and (b) in the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental secretariat.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The provisional recommendations on electoral boundaries published by the Northern Ireland Parliamentary Boundary Commission in January 1994 were raised by the Irish side at the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference held on 28 January 1994. As the joint communiqué issued after that conference recorded, the British side said that the commission is a body responsible to Parliament, not to Government, and described the statutory procedures for interested parties to make representations with respect to the commission's proposed recommendations.

Northern Ireland Boundary Commission

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the dates on which officials met or telephone members or officials of the Northern Ireland Boundary Commission;

(2) when the officials of the political affairs division first became aware of what became the revised recommendations of the Northern Ireland Boundary Commission.

Mr. Ancram: Having regard to the independence of the Northern Ireland Parliamentary Boundary Commission, contact has been confined to Northern Ireland Office officials with specific responsibility for the commission's financial accountability and resources, and has been minimal.

The deputy chairman of the boundary commission wrote to the Secretary of State on 16 January to advise him of the revised recommendations. That letter was copied to appropriate officials within the Department and included senior members of the political affairs division.

Fair Employment Commission

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the persons and firms engaged as consultants by the Fair Employment Commission.

Mr. Ancram: The firms and persons engaged as consultants by the Fair Employment Commission from 1 January 1990 to date were:

BIS Beecom (now Parity Solutions Ltd.)
F. Cassidy
R. J. Cormac
A. M. Gallagher
Gilpin Black
J. M. D. Kremer
Market Research N I
A. Murphy
Northern Ireland Economic Research Centre
R. D. Osborne
Psychometric Research and Development
Research and Evaluation Services
M. Rubenstein
Septembers McConnell
Ulster Marketing Services

In addition, the commission administered, on behalf of the Department of Economic Development, the small firms fair employment scheme, under which companies obtained free consultancy advice on fair employment procedures. This scheme ceased to operate on 31 March 1993. During the life of the scheme, 58 consultants undertook assignments for small companies.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if it is the practice of the Fair Employment Commission to notify any consultants of forthcoming investigations.

Mr. Ancram: The Fair Employment Commission does not notify consultants of forthcoming investigations.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what means notice is given by the Fair Employment Commission (a) to the firms concerned, (b) to other bodies and (c) to the public of forthcoming investigations.

Mr. Ancram: The conduct of investigations under section 11 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 is governed by paragraph 2 of schedule 9 of the legislation.

Before holding an investigation, the commission serves notice of its intention to hold the investigation and furnishes particulars of the scope and purpose of the investigation in a formal letter to the party concerned.

It is not the policy of the commission to provide notice of forthcoming investigations to any other body.

The public is provided with general information on the commission's investigation activities in its annual report. The names of concerns under investigation are not released until the investigation is complete and the report published.

Abortion

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights on abortion law in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The Government are giving careful consideration to the recommendations on abortion law which have been made by the commission. Decisions on those recommendations have yet to be taken.

Roads Service

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many personnel are retiring or being offered redundancy in the current phase of roads service staff reductions; what are the grades of those leaving the roads service; and how reductions are distributed within each division.

Mr. Moss: In response to the 1994–95 early retirement programmes available to Northern Ireland civil service industrial and non-industrial staff, a total of 133 personnel in the Department of the Environment roads service have applied successfully for voluntary redundancy and will be leaving during the period 1 January to 20 March 1995.

Some of the vacancies created within the administrative and professional and technical grades will not necessarily be carried within the division in which the retiring officer served.

This overall figure is divided among the roads service's divisions as follows:

Division	Non-Industrial Administrative	Non-Industrial Professional and Technical	Industrial	Total
HQ (Belfast)	1	6	3	10
Ballymena	1	3	14	18
Belfast	—	2	11	13
Coleraine	1	3	14	18
Craigavon	1	11	15	27
Downpatrick	2	4	15	21
Omagh	—	8	18	26

All the industrial staff leaving are non-craft road workers, with the grades and distribution of the non-industrial staff concerned being as follows:

	Grades
HQ	1 x Principal, 2 x SPTO, 2 x HPTO, 1 x PTO, 1 x TG I
Ballymena	1 x Staff Officer, 1 x SPTO, 1 x HPTO, 1 x PTO Supervisor
Belfast	1 x HPTO, 1 x TG I
Coleraine	1 x Staff Officer, 1 x SPTO, 1 x HPTO, 1 x PTO Supervisor
Craigavon	1 x EO I, 2 x PPTO, 2 x SPTO, 2 x HPTO, 1 x PTO, 2 x PTO Supervisor, 2 x TG I
Downpatrick	1 x Deputy Principal, 1 x Staff Officer, 1 x SPTO, 1 x PTO, 1 x PTO Supervisor, 1 x TG I
Omagh	5 x SPTO, 1 x PTO Supervisor, 2 x PTO

Notes:
1. PPTO—Principal Professional and Technology Officer.
2. SPTO—Senior Professional and Technology Officer.
3. HPTO—Higher Professional and Technology Officer.
4. PTO—Professional and Technology Officer.
5. TG I—Technical Grade I.
6. EO I—Executive Officer Grade I.

Rates Collection Agency

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultation took place with elected Northern Ireland Members before (a) the setting up of the Rates Collection Agency and (b) the decision to reduce from 13 to five the number of rates collection offices.

Mr. Moss: The decision to establish the Rates Collection Agency as an executive agency of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland with effect from 1 April 1991 was announced in answer to a question from the then Member for North Devon on 27 March 1991, Official Report, columns 426–27. The chief executive's recommendations last year for streamlining the work of the agency became public knowledge before any external consultations could be arranged.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the proposed reduction in the amount of rate support grant payable in each of the 26 local government councils for the year 1995–96 in (a) overall cash terms, (b) p/£ rate and (c) as a percentage of each council's district rate 1994–95.

Mr. Moss: There is no proposed reduction in the amount of general grant payable for the year 1995–96. Overall, there will be a 7.1 per cent. increase as set out below. However, since district councils are still in the process of finalising accounts, it is not possible to provide the information requested at (b) and (c).

District councils	Cash provision 1994–95 £k	Cash provision 1995–96 £k
Antrim	189	394
Ards	1,773	2,007
Armagh	1,966	1,953
Ballymena	643	781

Strabane	1,700	1,741
Totals	39.4 million	42.2 million

Notes:
[1] Staff figures are based on full time equivalents (part-time staff count as 0.5)
[2] The Government office Merseyside and Government office London did not exist in 1993–94.

The figures for 1994–95 cannot be finalised until accounts are certified towards the end of the 1995–96 financial year. The figures for 1995–96 are based on provisional estimates provided by district councils in September 1994.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he intends to reduce the regional rate required by an amount comparable to the increase which will be required in the district rate in order to compensate for the proposed reduction in the 1995–96 rate support grant.

Sir John Wheeler: No decision has yet been taken on the level of the 1995–96 regional rate. An order fixing the regional rate poundage will be laid before the House. However, the legislation governing the striking of the regional rate provides for the amounts to be raised by the district rate to be taken into account before the order is made.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the discretionary power being given to councils in Northern Ireland to increase from 2p to 5p in the pound the amount to be spent on local economic development will be met by extra taxation or by way of transfer of moneys from the Department of Economic Development budget to individual councils.

Mr. Moss: There is a discretionary power. It is a matter for district councils to decide how much they wish to raise within the 5p limit to provide economic development activities within their districts. There is no specific funding from central Government. Any additional expenditure by councils as a result of the increase from 2p to 5p will have to be met from within their overall resources.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposed reductions in the 1995–96 rate support grant on the work of local government councils in fulfilling their obligations to community relations and other cross-community projects; and what areas of councils' responsibilities are likely to be affected.

Mr. Moss: No such assessment has been made because the general grant for 1995–96 has not been reduced. The allocation of £42.2 million represents an increase of £2.8 million—7.1 per cent.—on the 1994–95 provision.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mine Clearance

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what research is being conducted by the British Government into improved methods of humanitarian mine clearance.

Mr. Baldry: We are currently evaluating proposals from the Defence Research Agency, whose technological expertise may be able to improve the means of mine detection. If successful, these proposals could be a major step forward in dealing with the various land mine problems around the world.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) mechanised or (b) other methods of humanitarian mine clearance are available.

Mr. Baldry: There a number of methods of mechanical mine clearance, including flails, ploughs, rollers and hard-wheeled vehicles. Other methods of mine clearance include detection by trained mine clearance teams using hand-held locators, or dog teams.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the condition of the Neretva hydro-electricity generation complex and its associated transmission system in central Bosnia; how many people could be served by this electricity supply; if he will estimates the cost of reinstating the system; and if he is involved in any plans to reinstate it.

Mr. Baldry: Of the Neretva hydro-power stations, only the Rama power station is currently operating, at a much reduced capacity. If the Neretva system were connected to the national grid it would help provide 709 MW of power to the whole of Bosina Herzegovina compared with 1,160 MW for the thermal system. Following an ODA review in January 1994, it was decided to continue to support thermal, rather than hydro, power stations due to the prohibitive cost of the large-scale civil engineering repairs that would be required. For the past one and a half years, the ODA has undertaken a £9.8 million programme to restore basic electricity supplies to central Bosnia by assisting in vital repairs to thermal power stations and transmission lines and helping to maintain coal output.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects funded by his Department during the last three years, and planned for the future, in Bosnia-Herzegovina, giving the cost of each project and the contributions made by other agencies or Governments.

Mr. Baldry: During the three years of the conflict, the ODA has provided over £173.5 million in emergency aid to the former Yugoslavia—£94 million bilaterally and over £79.5 million through the European Union.

Copies of an information sheet which gives financial and factual information, details of contributions to the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, the 1994 summary of overall donor assistance to the former Yugoslavia and a list of all the projects undertaken by the EEU, will be placed in the Library of the House at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the condition of the principal supply routes to and within Bosnia-Herzegovina; and what plans he has to support the repair and maintenance of those routes to facilitate the supply of humanitarian aid.

Mr. Baldry: Although local authorities are still responsible for the original roads, the maintenance and repair of principal supply routes in the former Yugoslavia are dealt with primarily by the engineering units of UNHCR, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, and UNPROFOR, the United Nations protection force. The ODA has seconded two road engineers to the UNHCR for the last two years to assist with the upkeep of the supply routes. All aid routes are accessible, subject to weather conditions.

EU Development and Co-operation Activities

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the new division of responsibility for development and co-operation activities within the European Commission.

Mr. Baldry: Five Commissioners will share responsibility for development and co-operation activities in the new European Commission. Mr. Pinheiro will be responsible for DG VIII—African, Caribbean and Pacific countries; Mr. Marin will be responsible for DG I North/South—the Mediterranean, Asia and Latin America; Mr. van den Broek will be responsible for DG I—the PHARE and TACIS programmes for eastern and central Europe and the former Soviet Union; Ms Bonino will be responsible for emergency aid—the European Community Humanitarian Office; Mme Cresson will be responsible for research and development including that for developing countries—DG XII.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which British aid organisations are currently involved in providing humanitarian assistance in Liberia.

Mr. Baldry: The Save the Children Fund is currently providing health care to displaced persons in Greater Monrovia and Bomi county. We are unaware of any other British aid organisations currently operating in Liberia.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if humanitarian assistance in Liberia outside Monrovia has now been resumed.

Mr. Baldry: There has been some resumption of humanitarian aid outside Monrovia, but this is essentially exploratory and small scale. The British Government have provided over £3 million of emergency aid bilaterally to Liberia since April 1993.

Child Health

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of overseas aid is used for low-cost strategies with particular reference to (a) oral rehydration therapy and (b) immunisation.

Mr. Baldry: Improving child health is an important objective for Britain's health and population aid. The promotion of oral rehydration for diarrhoea and immunisation against preventable infectious diseases are essential, cost-effective interventions in all primary health care programmes which now form the major part of ODA's strategy for reaching this objective. Data are not available for our aid to health classified by the specific nature of the intervention; such data could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of overseas aid is devoted to the health, nutrition, education and well-being of children.

Mr. Baldry: One of the main aims of the aid programme is to enhance access to education, basic health services and improved livelihoods. Where appropriate, projects are funded to address the needs of children, including their health, nutritional and educational requirements. Information about the amounts spent in each area could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list dates on which aid offers in principle were made to the Government of Indonesia in each year since 1980;

(2) if he will list the dates on which aid and trade provision offers in principle were made to the Government of Indonesia in each year since 1980.

Mr. Baldry [holding answers 3 February 1995]: Aid offers in principle are not made in respect of projects financed from the bilateral aid programme.

For projects financed under the aid and trade provision, we have entered into the following framework agreements with the Government of Indonesia since 1980:

Date	Agreement	Amount £ million
16 July 1986	Concessional loan arrangement 1986	140
1 December 1988	Concessional loan arrangement 1988	100
5 April 1993	Concessional loan arrangement 1993	65
7 April 1994	Concessional loan arrangement 1994	80

The amounts indicated relate to support available in principle for projects to be mutually agreed between the United Kingdom and Indonesian Governments. They comprise a mix of grants from the aid and trade provision and export credits through the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates since 1980 bilateral aid to Indonesia, including aid and trade provision support, has been withheld or suspended for good government reasons with particular reference to persistent or severe abuse of human rights.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 February 1995]: None.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, columns 118–20, concerning projects in Indonesia financed from the aid and trade provision, if he will give an assurance that none of the equipment provided is being used by Indonesian military or security personnel; and what is the purpose of the provision of radio communications and shortwave radio transmitters for the Ministry of Forestry.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 February 1995]: None of the equipment provided for the projects referred to in my answer of 6 December 1994, Official Report, columns 118–20, is being used by Indonesian military or security personnel.

The radio communication systems project was for the installation of an integrated radio network at the Ministry of Forestry's headquarters and selected provincial offices to improve the sustainable management and control of the country's forestry resources.

The shortwave radio transmitters project involves the installation of high-frequency transmitters to enable shortwave broadcasting to be heard throughout Indonesia. The principle objective of the project is to give the population access to information, and to educate and unite disparate communities.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Creation

11. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs will be created if the Jobseekers Bill becomes law.

Miss Widdecombe: The national insurance contribution holiday, the back-to-work bonus and other measures in the Jobseekers Bill will assist unemployed people into the jobs which business, not Government, create.

Equal Opportunities Commission

12. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met representatives of the Equal Opportunities Commission to discuss fair employment practices.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the chairwoman and chief executive of the Equal Opportunities Commission on 7 November 1994, when a range of issues was discussed, including fair employment practices.

Training Places

13. Mr. Scott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what calculation he has made of the number of extra training places which will be required as a result of the provisions in the Jobseekers Bill; and what is the total cost of the places to be provided.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government already provide 1.5 million opportunities, including substantial training provision for unemployed people. The jobseeker's allowance will help unemployed people take best advantage of those opportunities.

Disabled People

14. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent discussions he has had with the CBI on the policy of its members employing disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the CBI regularly to discuss issues of mutual interest. The CBI responded to the Government's recent consultation document on discrimination against disabled people.

Industrial Relations

15. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the long-term improvement of industrial relations.

Mr. Portillo: Industrial relations in Britain are so much improved and so good by international comparisons that, like most good news, they are nowadays scarcely discussed.

Employment Service

16. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people the Employment Service has helped into employment in the last year.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1994 the Employment Service placed 1,924,400 people in jobs. This is 16 per cent. more than in 1993.

European Work Directive

17. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on United Kingdom unemployment of the EU's 48-hour working week directive.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government negotiated the working time directive so that people could continue to be free to work more or less than 48 hours a week. It is not possible to make numerical estimates of the effect on unemployment, but any statutory limit on working hours would be damaging to competitiveness, jobs and the economy.

Health and Safety

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussion he has had with his EU counterparts about health and safety measures within Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets his European counterparts on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of issues, including health and safety.

Labour Statistics

19. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what, at the latest date, were the figures for unemployment; and what were the comparable figures in June 1979.

Mr. Paice: There were 2,415,500 claimant unemployed in December 1994 compared with 1,067,400 in June 1979.

26. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to change the method of calculating the numbers of unemployed.

Mr. Oppenheim: There no plans at present to change the method of calculating unemployment figures derived from either the claimant count or the labour force survey. Each method complements the other and each has its own distinct advantages.

Minimum Wage

20. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effects of a minimum wage in the tourism industry.

Mr. Oppenheim: Statutory minimum wages destroy jobs. This is as true of the tourism industry as it is of any other sector of the economy.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library the notes of his meeting in Davos with Mr. Alphandéry with particular reference to the subject of a minimum wage.

Mr. Portillo: I took part in a round-table discussion on unemployment and under-employment at the world economic forum in Davos at which Mr. Alphandéry and others were present. A full note of the meeting has not been produced to the best of my knowledge. A one-page summary of the meeting has been published by the world economic forum and I shall arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

25. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effects of a statutory minimum wage on the employment prospects of unemployed people.

Mr. Oppenheim: A statutory minimum wage would destroy jobs and job prospects. Its effects on the employment prospects of unemployed people would undoubtedly be disastrous.

Inward Investment

21. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of jobs that have arisen from inward investment over the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: According to figures notified to the Invest in Britain Bureau, as a result of inward investment more than 126,000 new jobs were created, and nearly 200,000 more were safeguarded, in the United Kingdom in the five financial years to 1993–94.

Full Employment

22. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy in respect of full employment.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government pursue policies designed to achieve high employment and low inflation.

Youth Unemployment

23. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the rate of youth unemployment in the United Kingdom and in other EU countries.

Mr. Oppenheim: The United Kingdom youth unemployment rate is below the European average and is lower than in every EU country except Denmark, Luxembourg and Portugal. The information is contained in the table.

Seasonally adjusted youth unemployment rates in EU countries

	Latest month
Belguim	19.4 (November)
Denmark	10.0 (October)

Youth Training

24. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate of the number of 16 to 17-year-olds who are not in receipt of a youth training scheme place.

Mr. Paice: On 30 December 1994, in England, 179 young people covered by the youth training guarantee had been waiting for the offer of a YT place for eight weeks or longer.

Skill Shortages

27. Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage change in the number of hard-to-fill vacancies over the last year; and in which sectors these skill shortages are most concentrated.

Mr. Paice: The number of hard-to-fill vacancies reported by medium and large employers increased by 76 per cent. between spring 1993 and spring 1994. These hard-to-fill vacancies are most concentrated in manufacturing, wholesale and retail, hotel and restaurants and the health and social work sectors.

Job Creation (East Sussex)

28. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessments he has made of the prospects for job creation in East Sussex.

Miss Widdecombe: We believe that the Government have created the right framework for employers to create jobs and reduce unemployment in East Sussex, as in the rest of the United Kingdom.

The latest figures show that in the year to December 1994 claimant unemployment in East Sussex fell by 12 per cent., while the labour force survey indicates that in the year to summer 1994 employment in the area increased by 14,000 to 316,000.

Jobcentres

29. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed in jobcentres; what are the main tasks they undertake; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Currently, around 30,000 staff are employed on front-line duties in jobcentres. They provide a range of services designed to help unemployed people back to work, and to pay benefit to those who are entitled to it. The main tasks staff undertake are job-broking—obtaining vacancies from employers and sending jobseekers to them, advising jobseekers on the range of help available and paying unemployment benefit to those entitled to it. Actual duties are interchangeable, as staff are encouraged to be able to perform a variety of work.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances, for what reason and when South Thames TEC ran out of money.

Mr. Paice: The extent of the problems at South Thames training and enterprise council was revealed by a team of accountants led by staff from this Department with the support of the accountancy firm, Grant Thornton. Grant Thornton reported to this Department on 16 December 1994. Its report was conveyed to the TEC on the same day. The report showed that the TEC was trading at a loss and forecasted that this would continue, that its balance at best was negative or would shortly become so, that it faced major cash flow problems and that weaknesses in its management accounting and financial control systems persisted. In the light of the report, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State concluded that it would be unsafe to commit further public money to the TEC. In view of the report and that conclusion the board of South Thames TEC concluded on 21 December 1994 that the company was insolvent and invited my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to appoint a receiver.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will update each quarter a list of training providers to South Thames TEC that became business failures because of money unpaid by South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: To date, I have not been told of any training providers who have failed for this reason.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what purpose South Thames TEC put the money received from central Government for the purpose of paying training providers.

Mr. Paice: The training and enterprise council's financial affairs are currently a matter for the receiver appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. I shall reply to the hon. Member's question when the receiver has done the necessary work in connection with the TEC's affairs.

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that training guarantees for young people and unemployed adults in the area formerly covered by South Thames TEC are fulfilled.

Mr. Paice: The Government guarantee that any young person aged 16 to 17 who is not in employment, training or education and seeks youth training will be offered a suitable opportunity. There is no equivalent guarantee for unemployed adults. The Department's main aim is to ensure the continued provision of training in the South Thames training and enterprise council area. A number of steps have been taken to assure training providers that they will be paid for training undertaken since 7 November 1994. The Department has issued letters of comfort to providers contracted to South Thames TEC for training for work and youth training credits, child care, work-related further education, careers and guidance year 9 and 10 and careers libraries. The Department of the Environment has extended comfort to the business start-up programme. The Government office for London is making payments direct to providers of these programmes under the terms of its contract with South Thames TEC from 7 November 1994 until 1 January 1995. For the period of three months from the appointment of the receiver on 21 December 1994, the Departments will make available to the receiver sufficient funds to ensure providers receive payments for training and outputs delivered by them under the terms of their contract with South Thames TEC for the same programmes.

I made an announcement on 31 January, Official Report, columns 598–600, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley), about the future arrangements for the South Thames TEC area. Two neighbouring TECs, Central London TEC and South London TEC have been invited to submit proposals to me on how they would provide the full range of TEC responsibilities for the area fro the beginning of the new financial year.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names and addresses of training providers who did not have a formal contract with South Thames TEC but who had provided training by agreement with South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: I understand that the South Thames training and enterprise council did not have formal contracts but paid under letters of intent to providers of the following programmes: compacts, teacher placement service, work-related further education and years 9 and 10 careers-guidance. In addition, some providers of traineeships to Routeways—a wholly owned subsidiary of South Thames TEC—were also paid through letters of intent. The providers covered by letters of intent are shown in the following table:

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when South Thames TEC was entered on to the high-risk register.

Mr. Paice: The Department does not maintain formal risk registers. The training and enterprise council's internal financial management is a matter for the TEC board. The high-risk assessment made by the Department related to the effectiveness of financial control systems in the TEC and was made in December 1993.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responsibilities his Department has to those firms which are put into bankruptcy as a result of the financial failure of TECs which renege on their debts.

Mr. Paice: Because training and enterprise councils are private companies, the Department has no legal responsibilities towards firms contracted with them.

Contracts between TECs and other parties are commercial, subject to company law and the law of contract, including that relating to insolvency.

The Department is concerned, where problems arise between TECs and suppliers of services under Government programmes, that steps are taken to minimise disruption to individuals.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what percentage of works on adult rates divided between manual and non-manual, male and female, and full and part-time have earnings less than £2.60, £3, £3.20, £3.40, £3.60, £3.80, £4, £4.40, £4.80, £5.20, £5.60, £6 and £8 per hour, including and excluding overtime, in West Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, North Yorkshire, Humberside, Yorkshire/Humberside and the north region;

(2) what were the average gross weekly earnings, weekly hours and hourly earnings for part-time workers, manual and non-manual, in (a) West Yorkshire, (b) South Yorkshire, (c) North Yorkshire, (d) Humberside, (e) Yorkshire/Humberside and (f) the north region; and what were the lowest and highest decile and median hourly earnings of these workers;

(3) what percentage of full-time workers on adult rates, male/female, manual/non-manual, are earning less than £160, £180, £200, £220, £300 and £340 per week, including and excluding overtime, in West Yorkshire, South Yorkshire, North Yorkshire, Humberside, Yorkshire/Humberside and the north region.

Mr. Oppenheim: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

European Social Conference

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who will represent Britain at the European social conference held in Paris on 30 March.

Miss Widdecombe: A decision on Government representation at this conference will be taken nearer the date.

Women

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Ministers have what responsibility in respect of matters of specific relevance to women; how they are co-ordinated; what have been the results of their work to date; what they are currently working on to improve women's lives; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Every Minister takes account of sex equality issues within his or her area of policy responsibility. The Cabinet Sub-Committee on Women's Issues reviews and develops overall Government policy on issues of special concern to women; the Employment Department has lead responsibility within Whitehall for co-ordinating this policy. The United Kingdom's report for the United Nations fourth world conference on women, produced in October 1994, gives a recent overview of key achievements and priorities for action, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the responsibilities of the Health and Safety Executive in relation to the Forth rail bridge; and what is the conclusion of Mr. John Rimington's inquiry into the Forth rail bridge.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is responsible for the oversight of safety on all parts of the railway, including the safety of workers, the protection of passengers and the integrity of structures such as the Forth rail bridge.

I understand that Mr. Rimington wrote to the hon. Member about this matter on 25 January 1995. There is no present threat to the structural integrity of the bridge.

Structural Funding

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he is in a position to announce that the Auchmountain Glen restoration and training project, Greenock, will receive in 1995 financial support by way of the European Union's objective 3 structural funds; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: No application for European social fund support under objective 3 has yet been approved. All applications are currently being considered by sector managers who represent the main organisations which receive ESF money. In accordance with European Commission requirements, all the selected projects will be presented to regional co-ordinating groups for their approval during March. The Department will then be able to issue formal approval letters to successful projects.

Training Providers

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his written answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 539, if he will list the names and addresses of those training providers who have yet to receive a letter of comfort but whose case is still under investigation by the receiver.

Mr. Paice: I apologise to the hon. Member for the confusion caused by my answer of 30 January. This resulted from an administrative error made by the Department. A list of training providers who have yet to receive a letter of comfort but whose case is still under investigation by the receiver is now shown in the table:

North West Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 716, if he will name the members on the board of the north west training and enterprise council together with the interests they represent.

Mr. Paice: The names of all training and enterprise council board members are available from the Library. TEC board members join and remain on the board of directors as individuals and not as representatives of another company or organisation. There is no such single organisation as the north west TEC.

Redundancies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the firms in the Dundee travel-to-work area which have notified his Department of redundancies involving more than 10 people since 1 August 1993, giving in each case the actual number.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information given to the Department under the statutory redundancy handling provisions is provided in confidence.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury on 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 69.

TRANSPORT

East Coast Main Line

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the effect of the subsidence of old mine workings under the east coast main line between Prestonpans and Wallyford; what assessment he has made of the completeness of the record of such workings under railway lines; and what will be the liability of Railtrack for the consequences and costs of similar incidents following privatisation.

Mr. Watts: A temporary speed restriction was imposed in November 1994 between Prestonpans and Wallyford station following discovery of subsidence of old mine workings during routine maintenance. To prevent further subsidence, Railtrack is injecting concrete slurry into the former mine workings. It is anticipated that the work will be completed in the next few weeks and the line speed will be back to 60 mph by March 1995 and restored to 125 mph later in the year.

Railtrack is carrying out a search of mining records compiled by the British Railways Board, the Coal Authority and other sources for a report identifying the locations of mine shafts, drifts and shallow mine workings in the vicinity of Railtrack property.

Liability for costs and consequences of remedial work to a collapsed mineshaft or shallow mine working will depend on the circumstances of each case. Privatisation will make no difference to Railtrack's liabilities.

Driving Test Centre, Rhyl

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from individuals and organisations with regard to the proposed relocation of the driving test centre at 96 Cefndy road, Rhyl; if he will review the objections for himself; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Driving Standards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from L. M. Manley to Mr. David Hanson, dated 7 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the Rhyl driving test centre. I wrote to you on 20 January about the need to relocate the Rhyl and Llandudno driving test centres and the public consultation exercise we are carrying out.

The public consultation exercise concluded on 30 November 1994. Some 25 individuals and organisations responded, mostly expressing concern at our proposals. In the meantime the Rhuddlan Borough Council and the Vale of Clwyd Traders Council have offered to assist us in finding alternative accommodation in Rhyl. We will delay consideration of the representations made during the public consultation exercise until our discussions with Rhuddlan Borough Council and Vale of Clwyd Traders Council have been completed.

Sickness Absence

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 881, if he will list the areas of work in his Department which have been reorganised following the Vehicle Inspectorate's total quality initiative; and what assessment he has made of the relationship between these reorganisations and the stress level and sick absences among employees of his Department.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 6 February 1995:

TOTAL QUALITY INITIATIVE IN THE VEHICLE INSPECTORATE

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding reorganisation within the Vehicle Inspectorate following its Total Quality Initiative.

To meet its commitments, the Inspectorate has to keep pace with developments and be able to respond to change. We are currently in the second stage of the Total Quality Initiative (TQI) and we expect it to deliver improvements in efficiency, as well as effectiveness and service. During the course of this financial year, Corrective Action Teams and Continuous Improvement Teams have been working across the Inspectorate. We believe that staff participation and understanding can help in minimising the stress of change and their recommendations as part of the "Teams" have contributed to the reorganisations under way in the Inspectorate's 3 divisions.

The Inspectorate surveyed staff attitude at the start of the TQ process in Autumn 1993. We plan to survey staff attitude again during the 1995/96 financial year and continue to look at staff absence rates to provide us with as full a picture as possible.

If you have any further questions about the Inspectorate's initiatives, please contact me at the above address.

Policies and Programmes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether each of the transport policies and programmes of highway authorities for the past two years are in his Department's library; whether the library is open to researchers; where the library is; when it was last moved; and what the cost consequences have been.

Mr. Norris: Current transport policies and programmes are held by local transport policy division. They are available to the DOT library in 2 Marsham street, if required. Old TPPs are stored off site. Researchers may use the library by prior arrangement. The library moved in April 1994, saving £1 million a year.

Publicity

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last three financial years, the amount spent by his Department on publicity for the work of the traffic area offices, excluding that spent on the traffic area network, the traffic commissioners and the licensing authorities' annual reports.

Mr. Norris: Excluding the annual reports, the amount spent directly on publicity for the work of the traffic area offices is as follows:

1993–94: £2,520.28
1994–95: £5,801.00

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 881, if he will (1) list the occasions in 1994 on which risk assessments by the Driving Standards Agency have led to reorganisations in his Department;

(2) list the dates of risk assessments by the Driving Standards Agency in 1994; and if he will make a statement on the nature of these assessments.

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Driving Standards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from L. M. Manley to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 7 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about risk assessments in the Agency which have led to reorganisation.

To date it has not been found necessary to make any reorganisation as a result of risk assessments. Where risks have been identified, they have been controlled or eliminated without the need for reorganisation.

Letter from L. M. Manley to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 7 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about risk assessments in the Driving Standards Agency.

The attached table provides the dates and numbers of risk assessments carried out in 1994. The assessments covered display screen equipment, manual handling procedures and general risks.

Casual Staff

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the status of employees of his Department which make up the panels which recruit casual staff at AA or AO level.

Mr. Norris: Casual staff within the Department of Transport at AA or AO level are recruited by the division where the vacancy arises. Usually two members of staff, at EO level or above, would conduct the recruitment interview.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about his employment of the former head of personnel for the Vehicle Inspectorate to undertake a report on the Register of Shipping and Seamen office in Cardiff; and if he will list (a) the status of this employee, (b) the status of any severance pay granted following redundancy from the Vehicle Inspectorate and (c) the process by which he was chosen to fill this post.

Mr. Norris: The former head of personnel for the Vehicle Inspectorate is employed as a consultant by the Marine Safety Agency and was selected from a shortlist of retired departmental employees with the appropriate skills and experience.

There is no direct employer-employee relationship between MSA and Mr. Walton, and the status of his severance pay is not affected.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made on the improvement of the west coast main line; if it is up to schedule; when the works will commence; what is the total likely cost; and what is the expected completion date.

Mr. Watts: The feasibility study was completed on schedule at the end of December. Railtrack will be publishing a summary of its findings shortly.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions since the channel tunnel rail link has been established, his inspectors have inspected the operation of the security services on the route; and what were their findings.

Mr. Watts: The channel tunnel security inspectors have inspected the security measures in place on a number of occasions. It would not be appropriate on security grounds to detail their findings.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 2 February, Official Report, column 859, about the channel tunnel link route on what date the delegation was led by the hon. Members for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) and for Dartford (Mr. Dunn), at which Miss Maureen Tomison made a presentation to his predecessor on behalf of the Ebbsfleet Promoter Group.

Mr. Watts: The presentation referred to in my reply of 2 February took place on 11 May 1994. Miss Tomison made no presentation at this or any other departmental delegation.

Highland Railways

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the adequacy of safety measures in place at accommodation crossings on rail lines in the highlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: Accommodation level crossings are private crossings, and it is the responsibility of the authorised user to ensure that the railway is clear before attempting to cross. Instructions on the safe use of crossings are displayed at each crossing.

Rail Stations (Wheelchairs)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the railway stations in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland which are inaccessible to wheelchair users; and what proposals he has to make such stations barrier free.

Mr. Watts: The facilities available for disabled passengers vary from place to place. The leaflet "British Rail and Disabled Travellers" is designed to help disabled passengers plan their rail journeys and gives contact details for British Rail managers who will provide passengers with information about their nearest suitably designed and equipped station. A copy of this leaflet is available in the House Library.

Government proposals to improve accessibility at stations for disabled passengers are included in the Disability Discrimination Bill, published last month.

Bull Bars

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 31 January to the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes), Official Report, column 586, what steps he proposes to take to discourage vehicle manufacturers from fitting bull bars.

Mr. Norris: My predecessor wrote to vehicle manufacturers in 1993 expressing concern about the fitting of aggressive bull bars. We have since put in hand the accident analysis referred to in my answer of 31 January. We shall consider whether further steps should be taken to discourage vehicle manufacturers from fitting bull bars, and owners of existing vehicles from using them on the road with bull bars attached, in the light of that analysis.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Most of the rules and regulations which were identified for withdrawal in last year's reviews have yet to be implemented. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when the consultations are completed.

The manpower implications are taken into account in the Department's central manpower plans, which will be published in the Department's annual report in March.

Train Timetables

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains between London and Plymouth in the last 28 days have arrived at the time advertised in the timetable, on weekdays and at the weekend; and if he will make a statement on the level of delays.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Statistics are compiled according to service groups, not individual routes, and on a four-weekly basis. The most recent figures covering the 28 days up to 7 January 1995 show that 88 per cent. of all trains in the Great Western service group arrived within 10 minutes of their advertised time. The figure for the 12 months up to this date is 91.2 per cent.

Channel Tunnel (Safety)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made as to the existing integrity of the safety regime operating in the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 2 February 1995]: Under the terms of the treaty of Canterbury the channel tunnel intergovernmental commission takes decisions in the name of the two Governments for the implementation of the concession.

The channel tunnel safety authority is established under the treaty to advise and assist the commission on all matters concerning safety in the construction and operation of the tunnel. It ensures that safety measures and practices applicable to the tunnel comply with national and international laws.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects that agreement will be reached clarifying the respective responsibilities for the enforcement of channel tunnel safety measures between the French authorities, the channel tunnel safety authority and Britain's Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will place in the Library the proposals of the Health and Safety Executive for the future division of responsibility for safety in the channel tunnel between the French authorities, the channel tunnel safety authority and Britain's Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts [holding answers 2 February 1995]: The channel tunnel safety authority is preparing advice for the intergovernmental commission. Formal agreement between the United Kingdom and French authorities will be reached in due course. The Health and Safety Executive works in close co-operation with the United Kingdom delegation to the safety authority.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what considerations have so far led the channel tunnel safety authority not to exercise its power to make regulations and appoint inspectors; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when inspectors will be appointed by the channel tunnel safety authority.

Mr. Watts [holding answers 2 February and 3 February 1995]: The channel tunnel safety authority does not have power to make regulations. It has powers to authorise experts to observe and inspect Eurotunnel's activities and exercises those powers as it considers appropriate.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken with the French authorities and Eurotunnel to meet the concerns about the responsibility and jurisdiction for safety in the channel tunnel as expressed by the Health and Safety Executive to the Employment Committee in November 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 2 February 1995]: These matters are under continuing discussion within the channel tunnel intergovernmental commission.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners' Incomes

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown on the number of (a) single pensioners, (b) pensioner couples and (c) all pensioners (i) aged under 75 years, (ii) aged 75 years and over and (iii) in total given in the analysis of pensioner incomes by quintile published on 15 April 1994, Official Report, column 304.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The latest information relating to 1992 pensioners' incomes details is in the tables.

Notes:

1. These estimates are taken from the 1992 family expenditure survey and are for private households in the UK.
2. The estimates denoted by an asterisk are based on unreliably small sample sizes and therefore should be treated with caution.
3. The estimates have been rounded to the nearest hundred thousand. Total population figures may therefore be misleading.

* Indicates that sample sizes are too small to provide reliable estimates. Figures are shown only to demonstrate how totals are arrived at.

1. All figures before housing costs (BHC) unless otherwise stated. After housing costs= AHC.
2. All average amounts are means except where otherwise stated.
3. Components may not sum to totals owing to rounding.
4. Pensioner units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.
5. Estimates of percentage growth are based on unrounded income figures and may not therefore be the same as those calculated from the rounded amounts shown in the table.
6. Estimates of growth in total net incomes by quintile are based on medians. Estimates of growth of components of income and total incomes of all pensioners are based on means.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each of the past 30 years (a) the number and percentage of people claiming the state retirement pension, (b) the number and percentage receiving income support, (c) the number of people over retirement age who draw only income support and (d) the number receiving the relevant pension plus housing benefit.

Invalidity Benefit and Sick Pay

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list for each of the last 30 years for which figures are available (a) the number and percentage of claimants drawing invalidity benefit, (b) the number and percentage drawing invalidity benefit and income support, (c) the number and percentage drawing invalidity benefit and housing benefit and (d) the number and percentage of long-term sick drawing income support and or housing benefit;

(2) if he will list for each of the past 30 years (a) the number and percentage of people claiming sick pay or statutory pay only, (b) the number and percentage of this group drawing sick pay and income support, (c) the number and percentage claiming sick pay and housing benefit and (d) the number and percentage without sick pay cover who draw only income support and/or housing benefit.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the tables.

Table 1 Statutory sick pay beneficiaries in Great Britain

Year ended	Number	Percentage of population
1985	4,963,000	14.7
1986	5,059,000	14.9
1987	5,203,000	15.3
1988	5,386,000	15.7

1992	5,283,000	15.3

Notes:

1. Statutory sick pay was introduced on 6 April 1983, and was payable for a maximum of eight weeks in any one tax year. This increased to 28 weeks from 6 April 1986 and the tax year limit removed. Data are not available for the year ending April 1984.

2. An employee may have more than one spell of statutory sick pay in the year.

3. The figures are in respect of the number of employees who received statutory sick pay in the year ended April.

4. Statutory sick pay is not payable to men aged 65 and over. Prior to 6 April 1994 it was not payable to women aged 60 and over.

5. There are a limited number of cases where the region within the United Kingdom is not known, which are not included within the Great Britain figure.

6. Population in Great Britain aged 16 to 59 for a woman, 16 to 64 for a man, each mid-year, supplied by OPCS.

Sources:

1. 1 per cent. sample of employer tax returns in respect of their employees, rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. Estimated mid-year resident population figures supplied by OPCS.

(a) Sick and disabled supplementary benefit claimants only prior to 1988.
(b) All income support claimants from 1989 to 1991
1. Males aged 16 to 69 and females aged 16 to 64. Figures rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Income support and housing benefit figures are for claimants only, ie partners are not counted.
3. Supplementary benefit figures include all claimants (males under 65, females under 60) who are sick and disabled without invalidity benefit, sickness benefit or statutory sick pay. Long-term sick or disabled income support claimants without invalidity benefit, sickness benefit and statutory sick pay are those who qualify for a disability premium or a higher pensioner premium (males aged 60 to 64 only) in their own right, ie not because of their partners' condition, and those in residential care or nursing homes (males aged under 65, females aged under 60). Short-term sick income support claimants without invalidity benefit, sickness benefit or statutory sick pay are those aged under 60 who are incapable of work but who have not yet qualified for a disability premium.
4. Long-term sick or disabled housing benefit claimants without invalidity benefit, sickness benefit or statutory sick pay are those who qualify in their own right for a disability premium, ie not because of their partners' condition.
It is not possible to identify short-term housing benefit claimants without invalidity benefit, sickness benefit or statutory sick pay.
5. Housing benefit data not available prior to 1989.
6. Income support replaced supplementery benefit in 1988.

Family Credit

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families receive family credit; and how many of these also pay income tax and/or national insurance.

Mr. Roger Evans: Some 572,000 families receive family credit, of whom 456,000 pay income tax and/or national insurance.

Source: Five per cent. sample of family credit recipients as at July 1994.

National Disability Council

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had with the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People on the composition of the national disability council.

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend and I were both fully involved in the discussions on the provisions within the Disability Discrimination Bill, including those relating to the composition of the national disability council.

Child Support Agency

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many cases of mothers with care successfully claiming as a good cause not to co-operate with the Child Support Agency's request about an absent father in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole, were based upon (i) emotional distress, (ii) mental illness or (iii) welfare of the child in the period April 1993 to March 1994;

(2) What is his estimate of the number of mothers with care in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole who had their claim of a risk of violence if they revealed the father's name accepted by the Child Support Agency;

(3) how many of the cases in which the Child Support Agency accepted that parent had good cause not to co-operate to the latest available date involved parents with care in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole;

(4) how many of the requirements to co-operate cases between April 1993 and March 1994 involved parents with care in *(a)*Scotland and *(b)*the United Kingdom as a whole;

(5) how many parents with care in *(a)*Scotland and *(b)*the United Kingdom as a whole gave authorisation or information concerning absent parents when issued with a formal requirement to co-operate order between April 1993 and March 1994;

(6) how many reduced benefit directives were referred by the Child Support Agency to the Benefits agency in *(a)*Scotland and *(b)*the United Kingdom as a whole between April 1993 and March 1994.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 6 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of state for Social Security about the requirements to co-operate.

The information is not available in the format requested. Figures are only available for Great Britain as the Agency does not collect separate statistics for Scotland, and has no responsibility for the UK as a whole. Northern Ireland has a separate Child Support Agency, which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Between April 1993 and March 1994, the requirement to co-operate was considered in 64,800 cases. After investigation, good cause not to co-operate was accepted in 31,700 cases. Of these 8,400 were cases where the parent with care was unable to name the parent of the child; 15,800 were cases where there was a risk of violence and 7,500 were cases where other reasons such as emotional distress, emntal illness or concern for the welfare of the child were accepted. After interview, 14,200 parents with care subsequently provided their authorisation or the necessary information. Good cause not to co-operate was not accepted in 18,900 cases.

Six hundred and twenty-seven benefit directions were issued in this period.

Between April 1993 and November 1994, the Agency had investigated 124,300 cases, of which good cause not to co-operate was accepted in 60,000.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in how many cases of absent parents in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole the Benefits Agency made deductions from income support at the behest of the Child Support Agency in the period April 1993 to March 1994;

(2) how many absent parents assessed by the Child Support Agency between April 1993 and March 1994 in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom were in receipt of income support;

(3) how many assessments made by the Child Support Agency in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole in the period April 1993 to March 1994 resulted in the absent parents being assessed as being unable to pay more than the minimum contribution of £2.30.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 7 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of absent parents assessed by the Child Support Agency during 1993/94 who were in receipt of Income Support (IS) and the number of absent parents who were assessed as only being able to pay the minimum contribution of £2.30.

Information is only available for Great Britain as the Agency does not collect separate statistics for Scotland and has no responsibility for the UK as a whole.

From launch to March 1994, a total of 40,450 absent parents (AP) receiving IS were assessed for child maintenance.

Information is not available for the total number of APs who were assessed, during 1993/94, as being unable to pay more than the minimum contribution of £2.30, or on the total number of APs who had deductions made from IS.

I hope that this is of help.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom have relinquished income support and are now dependent on maintenance payments;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of parents with care in (a) Scotland and (b) the rest of the United Kingdom who relinquished income support in the period April 1993 to March 1994 and who are now in receipt of family credit and maintenance.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 7 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of parents with care who no longer qualify for Income Support and now receive Family Credit as a result of receiving maintenance assessed by the Child Support Agency.

Since launch, 12,000 parents with care (PWC) ceased to receive Income Support (IS) because child maintenance payments, assessed by the CSA, led to their income exceeding their entitlement to IS. It should be noted that child maintenance may not have been the only income received by the PWC in these cases. Other income such as part time earnings, Child Benefit and One Parent Benefit, which the PWC would continue to receive in addition to any child maintenance payments, may have contributed to the gross amount of weekly income exceeding entitlement IS.

No information is presently available on how many PWCs are presently receiving Family Credit and child maintenance following an assessment by the Agency.

I hope that this is of help.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases in which the mother with care was unable to name the father involved women living in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 7 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about parents with care who were unable to name the absent parent.

My letter to you in reply to PQ 789 sets out the position for the period April 1993 to March 1994.

Since April 1994, these cases are no longer considered under the requirement to cooperate provisions. This is because it is clear that a parent with care who cannot name the absent parent is not refusing to co-operate, but in fact is unable to co-operate. The information you request is therefore no longer collected.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many maintenance application forms issued in the period April 1993 to March 1994 were sent to parents with care in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole; and of these how many were given to parents with care who (i) were not in receipt of any social security benefits, (ii) parents with care in receipt of family credit, (iii) in receipt of disability working allowance and (iv) in receipt of income support;

(2) how many maintenance application forms issued in the period April 1993 to March 1994 in Scotland were sent to parents with care who were (a) new applicants for income support or (b) repeat applicants for income support.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 7 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of state for Social Security about the number of maintenance application forms issued by the Child Support Agency during 1993/94.

Information is only available for Great Britain as the Agency does not collect separate statistics for Scotland and has no responsibility for the UK as a whole.

The agency issued 858,000 maintenance assessment forms (MAF) between April 1993 and March 1994. 29,650 of the forms issued were sent to parents with care (PWC) who were not receiving benefit; 223,800 MAFS were sent to PWCs receiving Family Credit (FC) and Disability Working Allowance (DWA). It is not possible to separately identify recipients of FC and DWA from within this group.

A further 534,000 MAFs were sent to recipients of Income Support (IS). Information on how many of those forms were sent following new or repeat applications for IS is not available.

I hope that this is of help.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by social security district office (a) the number of people who have been refused benefits for failing the habitual residence test since its introduction and (b) how many have successfully appealed.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 6 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for statistical information in connection with the habitual residence test for each Benefits Agency district office.

Information about the number of people refused Income Support after failing the habitual residence test has been collated for the period 1 August 1994 to 31 December 1994 and is provided at Annex A. The table shows the twenty one Benefits Agency Area Directorates that make up Great Britain and lists the districts that make up each area. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Housing and Council Tax Benefits information is not yet available and is collected by the Department of Social Security from Local Authorities annually.

Data regarding the number of successful appeals, in cases where Income Support has been disallowed as a result of the test's application, is not collected in the format requested; this could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of unemployment benefit claimed in the Merseyside area during the past 12 months.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime (Policy)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications of the British crime survey results for Government policy on crime.

Mr. Maclean: The British crime survey is one measure of the extent of crime, the results of which are disseminated widely throughout the criminal justice system. Its findings have informed thinking about crime prevention in several ways, most broadly in identifying the highest risk areas and groups, and the offences which pose the greatest numerical problem. It also yields information which is helpful in monitoring some of the services of the criminal justice system, including public satisfaction with the police, police complaints procedures and victim support schemes.

The Government's policy on crime remains that no amount of crime is acceptable. The protection of the public, the punishment of offenders, the support of victims and the prevention of crime will remain our priorities.

Miscarriages of Justice

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of alleged miscarriages of justices are currently being dealt with by officials in C3 division; when each case was received by his Department; and what is the number of personnel assigned to this work.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: At the beginning of 1995, 188 representations of wrongful conviction were under consideration in C3 division. Information about the date of receipt of each of these cases is not readily available in this form, but 106 of those cases had been outstanding for more than six months. Nineteen staff are engaged in work relating to allegations of wrongful conviction.

Prison System and Police Forces (Expenditure)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the annual expenditure on (a) the English prison system and (b) the English police forces for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Annual expenditure on the English Prison System since 1979 at 1994 prices

Financial year	Expenditure at 1994 prices £ million
1979–1980	944.3
1980–1981	876.7
1981–1982	867.4
1982–1983	898.1
1983–1984	959.1
1984–1985	985.3
1985–1986	979.1
1986–1987	977.4
1987–1988	1,054.6
1988–1989	1,303.9
1989–1990	1,451.2
1990–1991	1,598.8
1991–1992	1,627.6
1992–1993	1,564.8
1993–1994	1,558.5

Note:

1. The figures are taken from the published appropriation accounts adjusted for the costs of the three prisons in Wales. Historic cash expenditure figures for individual prisons are not easily available and we have used the total costs of the Welsh prisons as shown in the Prison Service's annual report (copies are available in the House of Commons Library). The expenditure on the English prisons may therefore be very slightly understated.

Passports

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many United Kingdom passports have been (a) issued and (b) revoked since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Figures for passport services are kept for financial years April to March. The numbers of each of the years since 1978–79 are:

Year	Numbers
1978–79	1,614,382
1979–80	1,995,401
1980–81	2,168,344
1981–82	1,748,241
1982–83	2,014,687
1983–84	1,966,019
1984–85	1,800,440
1985–86	2,193,489
1986–87	2,588,426
1987–88	2,485,312
1988–89	2,841,888
1989–90	3,194,418
1990–91	3,116,939
1991–92	3,227,522
1992–93	3,368,060
1993–94	3,699,526

Withdrawal of a passport would be considered:

a. if it came to the Passport Agency's attention on replacement that it had been issued incorrectly; and

b. on the same basis as the refusal of an application. That is in the case of:

(i) a minor whose journey was known to be contrary to a court order, to the wishes of a parent or other person or authority to whom a court had awarded custody, care and control or to the provisions of section 25(1) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, as amended by the Children Act, 1989, or section 56 of the Adoption Act 1976;

(ii) a person for whose arrest a warrant had been issued in the United Kingdom or who was wanted by the police on suspicion of a serious crime;

(iii) in very rare cases, a person whose past or proposed activities were so demonstrably undesirable that the grant or continued enjoyment of passport facilities would be contrary to the public interest;

(iv) a person repatriated at public expense until the debt has been repaid.

No records are kept of the numbers, but it is very rare for a passport to be withdrawn.

Pardons

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) absolute and (b) conditional pardons have been granted to persons convicted of criminal offences since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Since 1979, 1,253 free and three conditional pardons have been granted under the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy.

Sponsor Interviews

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will establish a central record of requests made by overseas entry clearance officers and others for sponsors in the United Kingdom to be interviewed by immigration officers; and if he will arrange for all requests for interviews to be acknowledged and sponsors or their representative to be notified and for action to be taken if such interviews are not held within a reasonable period;

(2) what representations he has received about delays in interviewing sponsors in the United Kingdom in relation to entry clearance applications; if he will arrange for a procedure to record and monitor progress in sponsor interviews at all overseas posts on the Indian sub-continent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested on representations about sponsor interviews is not available. Such interviews are received, recorded and despatched by immigration service headquarters. Monitoring the progress and action is a matter for local managers who are aware of the objective to complete them within three months where practicable.

I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs that overseas posts already record and monitor requests for interview and generate reminders as necessary and that applicants are informed at the time of their interview that their application is deferred pending an interview with their sponsor. A further acknowledgement is not necessary.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average delay at (a) Leeds-Bradford airport and (b) other ports once a sponsor has been interviewed in reports being sent to his Department; and what is the average delay between the receipt of such reports and their dispatch to British overseas posts with particular reference to Islamabad.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Reports are normally sent from the interviewing office direct to the overseas post. A record is not kept of the average time taken to prepare and dispatch such reports. Local managers are responsible for ensuring that they are completed and despatched promptly. In the case of Leeds-Bradford airport, a sample study of such cases indicates that it took between four and seven days and that the time taken in cases originating from Islamabad took about four days.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he is having with (a) ministerial colleagues and (b) officials to expedite sponsor interviews and reports of such interviews being received by overseas ports.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I have asked officials to continue with measures which will help to achieve the objective of three months for the completion of such interviews.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 681, who determines if capacity for conducting interviews exists at another port; who informs Leeds-Bradford of such capacity; in the last year, to date, how many sponsors waiting to be interviewed at Leeds-Bradford have been invited for interview at another port; and if he will list the ports where those interviews have been conducted.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The capacity for conducting interviews at any port is identified by local managers in consultation with immigration service headquarters.

Invitations have been sent to 20 sponsors to attend interview at other ports and offices in the north-east. Hull, North Shields, Stockton and south Humberside will be used for this purpose.

Prevention of Terrorism Powers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-United Kingdom nationals in each year to date, have been (a) detained, (b) charged, (c) prosecuted and (d) released without charge under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is not available. The statistics, which are collected centrally, and which are published in statistical bulletins issued by my Department and by the Northern Ireland Office, do not categorise by nationality those detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

Police Vehicle Maintenance

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his plans for introducing competition into the provision of police motor vehicle maintenance and repair and the cleaning of police buildings.

Mr. Howard: The initial proposals for the extension of compulsory competitive tendering to police motor vehicle maintenance and repair, and the cleaning of police buildings, sought to recognise the operational and security requirements of the police service. In the case of the former, the proposed 40 per cent. competition requirement was intended to allow a core of sensitive vehicles to be serviced within secure in-house facilities. The 90 per cent. level initially proposed for cleaning provided an option to retain in-house staff to clean sensitive areas, or remote and small stations for which CCT might not be cost-effective.

Detailed consultation proposals for both services were issued by the Home Office on 11 April 1994. The Government have now considered the responses received from the police service, local authority associations and other interested parties.

For the cleaning of police buildings, the consultation exercise sought specific comment on the need for a competition-free element. Many responded that a larger competition-free element was necessary to safeguard the cleaning of sensitive areas, and small and remote stations. The Government are satisfied that a sound case has been made, and intend, therefore, that the competition level should now be set at 80 per cent. We are confident this will achieve a rigorous competitive regime, bring improvements in service and value for money, while providing the police service with the flexibility it requires.

For police motor vehicle maintenance and repair, the initial proposals were specifically designed to cater for concerns about security and operational effectiveness. The results of the consultation exercise have been looked at against the other initiatives being developed within police fleet management, such as centrally negotiated purchasing arrangements. The Government are now satisfied that the introduction of CCT to police motor vehicle maintenance and repair would not, in this case, add greatly to the gains being made in other areas. We have, therefore, decided that the existing exemption should be retained.

The introduction of CCT to the police service is, of course, more than just achieving better value for money. It is also about providing a strong impetus for organisational change and service review. The Government remain committed to the value of these processes within public services, and hope to announce in the near future our initial plans for introducing CCT to police while collar support services.

Emergency Calls

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to reduce the number of non-urgent and hoax 999 telephone calls.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office sponsors a 999 liaison committee, which brings together the public telephony operators, the emergency services and Oftel and provides a forum in which problems can be addressed. A number of initiatives are being carried out to reduce the incidence of non-urgent and hoax 999 calls; these include sending warning letters to customers and school visits by emergency service personnel. A report will be submitted to the 999 liaison committee in March 1995, documenting progress and making recommendations for the development of a national strategy.

Crime Prevention

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's crime prevention policy.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's crime prevention policy is based on partnership and is being developed on a broad front. The Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 and the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994 respectively strengthen the powers of the courts to deal with offenders and lay the foundations for a new more effective partnership between the Government, the police and the public to fight crime. The recently launched "Partners Against Crime" initiative puts a new emphasis on the individual citizen as a partner with the police, whether as a member of neighbourhood watch or street watch or as a neighbourhood or special constable.

At national level, the ministerial group for crime prevention co-ordinates activity across Government Departments and the National Board for Crime Prevention continues to disseminate best practice. At local level, the Government continue to support crime prevention projects and partnerships through, for example, the expansion of our successful safer cities programme, the single regeneration budget, and the work of Crime Concern, the independent crime prevention organisation.

The Government also attach particular importance to the use of new technology in the fight against crime. We are pushing forward with a number of major new initiatives on crime reduction through technology, including the promotion and funding of closed circuit television in public places, and co-operation with vehicle manufacturers on car security.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civilian staff of the Metropolitan police have been made subject to early retirement against their wishes in the last two years; and what pension entitlement is available in such cases where retirement occurs at age 60 years.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner that the normal contractual age of retirement for Metropolitan police civil staff is 60 years, at which age the pension paid is the full entitlement based on reckonable service and pensionable pay. Those leaving the service under the provisions of early retirement schemes do so by agreement.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the population of the Metropolitan police area, (b) the number of police officers and (c) the number of officers per head of the population in Greater London in (i) 1979, (ii) 1985 and (iii) the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Information on population figures for police areas, the number of police officers per force and the number of police officers per head of population can be found in the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, copies of which are in the Library.

Colombian Nationals

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's estimate of the number of Colombian nationals resident in this country; and how many of those are thought to be here illegally.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The 1991 census of population indicated that there were 5,682 persons resident in Great Britain on census night who were born in Colombia. There is no estimate available of the number of those who are Colombian nationals nor those who might be here illegally.

Wiltshire Police Authority

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much initial financing grant is to be made available to the new Wiltshire police authority to help its parallel running with the existing police authority; and what guidelines are issued by his Department for its use.

Mr. Maclean: New police authorities have each received an initial financing grant of £97,560 under section 32 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994. This grant enables the new authorities to function during 1994–95 in preparing to assume their full statutory function of securing the maintenance of an efficient and effective police force for their areas on 1 April 1995, when the current police authorities will cease to exist. Guidance on the use of this grant was provided in a Home Office letter of 8 July 1994 to chief constables and clerks of police authorities. New police authorities will be expected to submit to the Home Office an account of the expenditure in respect of which initial financing grant was made. District auditors will provide a further check on how the money has been spent.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations underlay his assessment of the needs of the Wiltshire police force in allocating grant to facilitate the change over to the new Wiltshire police authority; and what representations he has received concerning the level of grant.

Mr. Maclean: Under section 32 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994 initial financing grants totalling £17 million are available for police force use in preparing to assume their new role from 1 April 1995 of being answerable to new free-standing police authorities.

Claims from police forces for initial financing grant for police force use were measured against the relative need of each police force as assessed with the assistance of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary.

A provisional claim for initial financing grant for police force use was submitted by the chief constable of Wiltshire in a letter of 26 August 1994. A detailed claim was submitted by the clerk of the Wiltshire police authority in a letter of 15 December 1994.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much initial financing grant is to be made available to the Wiltshire police force to facilitate the change over to the new Wiltshire police authority; and what guidelines are issued by his Department for its use.

Mr. Maclean: Under section 32 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994, an allocation of £400,000 of initial financing grant for use by Wiltshire constabulary has been provisionally approved.

Guidance on the use of this grant was provided in a Home Office letter of 8 July 1994 to chief constables and clerks of police authorities.

Police forces will be required to submit formal claims for their initial financing grants with accompanying evidence of incurred or committed expenditure before the end of the current financial year. Subsequently, district auditors will provide a further check on how the money has been spent.

Appeal Applications

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been made in the last year by the immigration department for leave to appeal against a decision of an immigration adjudicator; in how many cases leave has been given; and in what percentage of cases where leave has been given the subsequent appeal by the Home Office was successful.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: According to the records of the immigration appellate authorities, in 1994 the Home Office made 691 applications for leave to appeal against adjudicators' determinations; leave was granted in 195 cases. It is not possible to give the percentage of cases where the subsequent appeal was successful because the appeal has yet to be heard in some of the cases in which leave was granted in 1994. Of the Home Office appeals which came before the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in 1994, 113 were successful.

Unique Identification Numbers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons he is continuing to require police officers to wear visible unique identification numbers;

(2) what plans he has to discontinue the requirement for police officers to wear unique identification numbers visible on their uniforms.

Mr. Maclean: Issues relating to police uniforms are primarily operational matters which are for decision by chief officers of police, but I continue to agree with the advice given by the then Home Secretary—now Lord Callaghan in Home Office circular 13/1968—that "it is in the interests both of the public, and of the police themselves, that the police should continue to wear numbers on their uniforms".

Junior Doctors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken to process work permits for appointments of junior doctors to health authorities and as a percentage of the overall average for all work permits; how many junior doctor applicants were appointed to jobs in (a) the Yorkshire and Humberside health region and (b) nationally in the last year for which figures are available; how many are currently before his Department; and when the initial application was made for each one.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information relates to post-graduate doctors and dentists undergoing further medical training, for which a work permit is not required, and to qualified doctors and dentists who are in employment, for which a work permit is required. The average time taken in 1994 to grant extensions of leave to remain in these categories and to all trainees or persons in work permit employment is given in the table. The other information requested is not available.

Average time between application and the grant of leave to remain, 1994

Category of leave to remain	[1]Number of days
Post-graduate medical trainees	29
All trainees	33
Doctors and dentists in employment	49
All employment cases	50

[1] Excludes the time which some cases spent, during the first half of 1994, in Lunar house before being passed to the casework section and may thus understate slightly.

Mud Deposits (Roads)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there have been in each of the last three years for the depositing of dangerous amounts of mud on public roads by agricultural vehicles.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not available centrally.

Domestic Violence

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations invited to comment on the draft inter-agency circular on domestic violence; which organisations responded; and what was the length of time allowed for consultation on the draft circular.

Mr. Maclean: Following initial consultations with a number of organisations in June and July 1994, the Home Office wrote to the organisations listed on 15 September to invite comments on the draft circular by 7 October. I understand that, in addition to this, the Department of Health wrote to a number of statutory and voluntary agencies on 21 September and 4 October inviting responses by 7 and 12 October respectively.

(*denotes those organisations from which responses were received).

Mr Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend his review of the charge of murder to include the case of female victims of domestic violence who kill their partners.

Mr. Maclean: No. I have made it clear that the review will look at the law of murder specifically in the light of the concerns expressed by the House of Lords in the case involving Private Clegg. That case related to the use of lethal force in the maintenance of law and order.

Market Testing

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been paid thus far to KPMG management consultants as a result of their work on the market testing of the internal research function of his Department.

Mr. Howard: KPMG Peat Marwick management consultants have been paid for 10 days' work as part of the scoping study for the market test of the internal research function of the Home Office research and planning unit. Information on the costs of individual contracts with consultants is commercial in confidence and it is not the practice to disclose these details.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the scoping study into the proposed market test of internal research function of the research and planning unit.

Mr. Howard: I expect the scoping study report to be completed towards the end of February. It is not the general practice to publish market-testing scoping study reports, which are internal working documents and can contain commercially sensitive information about potential service suppliers.

Drivers (Visual Acuity)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions of drivers failing to satisfy the required standards of visual acuity there have been in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The information requested is not available centrally.

SCOTLAND

Ancillary Workers

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many ancillary workers were directly employed by health boards and NHS trusts in Scotland; and how many were employed by private contractors in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of ancillary staff directly employed by health boards and NHS trusts is shown in the table. Information about ancillary staff employed by private contractors is not collected centrally.

Ancillary staff employed in the NHSIS: at 30 September

Scottish Homes

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what (a) guidance and (b) direction he has issued to Scottish Homes to abandon its role as landlord; and if he will place copies of these documents in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under section 3A of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988, Scottish Homes' power to dispose of its housing stock may be exercised only with the consent of my right hon. Friend. He issued guidance to Scottish Homes in February 1989 and February 1991, following which Scottish Homes published its own procedures for the large-scale voluntary disposal of its stock. Copies of these guidance documents, entitled "Scottish Homes: Arrangements for Evaluating the Suitability of Proposals for Acquisition of Stock by Other Landlords: Note by SDD" and "Guidance on Scottish Homes Stock Disposals: February 1991", are available in the Library. No directions have been issued to Scottish Homes on this matter.

NHS Trust Chief Executives

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the chief executives in each NHS trust in Scotland earned in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what steps he is taking to monitor the level of such earnings.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. NHS trusts are now required to publish in their annual reports information about the remuneration of chief executives.

Housing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many tenant-led housing associations have been successfully established from previous Scottish Homes tenants; and how many tenants and how many non-tenants are on the management committees of each.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many ballots have been held for Scottish Homes tenants under its large-scale stock transfer procedure; who conducted these ballots for Scottish Homes; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the full ballot result in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member and he has agreed to arrange for a copy of his reply to be placed in the Library.

Nursery Education

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many three and four-year-olds were receiving nursery education in (a) Scotland and (b) each local education authority area in Scotland in September 1994.

Mr. Lang: The information requested for September 1994 is not yet available. The latest available information is given in the following table.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much expenditure was incurred by each local education authority in Scotland on the provision of nursery education in (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93 and (c) 1993–94.

Mr. Lang: Net current expenditure by education authorities on nursery education in 1991–92 and 1992–93 is given in the table. These figures exclude the costs of school meals, home-to-school transport and central administration. Comparable figures for expenditure in 1993–94 are not yet available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will express in both cash and constant price terms the amount of capital allocated, in terms of consent to borrow, to local authorities for schools buildings in every year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities in Scotland receive an allocation of consent to incur liability to meet capital expenditure on educational buildings. Within this overall level of consent they are free to determine which educational building projects will proceed. They are also free to transfer consent between certain other capital programmes and to augment their consent levels in other ways, for example by utilising resources raised from the disposal of assets or by funding capital projects from current revenue. Information on the level of the total capital allocations for education, and the assumed schools element included in them, is given in the table.

Students

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage increase or decrease in real terms for spending per capita on students (a) at universities and

(b) in further and adult education from 1982–83 to 1992–93.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 February 1995]: Per capita spending—Universities Grants Committee and Universities Funding Council grants for teaching and research, and from tuition fees—for students on full-time courses who were charged fees at the home rate decreased by 27 per cent. in real terms between 1982–83 and 1992–93 in the then eight universities in Scotland. Over this period, the number of students in these universities increased by 42 per cent. The estimate of spending does not include spending by the research councils, funding provided for maintenance and loans, or fees paid by part-time and overseas students and does not take account of changes in funding arrangements, such as the transfer of research funds within the dual support system from UFC to the research councils.

Similar information on expenditure per student in further and adult education is not available.

Generic Prescribing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the proportion of generic prescribing for each family health services authority, divided by (a) general practitioner fundholders and (b) non-fundholders in each of the last three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 February 1995]: This information is not available in the form requested except at disproportionate cost. The table offers a partial response. It gives an estimate of generic prescribing by general practitioner fundholders and non-fundholders based on a full analysis of one month in each of the years compared with a full analysis for all prescribers for each complete year.

Pre-school Education

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pre-school education places were available in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland at the latest available date; and in each case what percentage these figures represent of the total number of the children in the relevant age group.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The available information given is for children attending education authority nursery schools, nursery departments of primary schools, nursery departments of independent schools and private nursery schools.

	Education authority nursery schools and departments; nursery departments of independent schools[1]		Private nursery schools[2]

Long-stay Mental Hospitals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which long-stay mental hospitals in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole do not yet have an agreed closure plan; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the closure dates of the long-stay mental hospitals in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole;

(3) what plans he has to close remaining long-stay mental hospitals in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The Secretary of State has announced approval to the closure of Gartloch hospital and Woodilee hospital, in 1996; Ravenspark hospital, this year and Gogarburn hospital in 1999. No other long-stay mental hospital in Scotland has an agreed closure plan.

The pace of change in long-stay sector is directed by patient needs. The organisation of long-stay care and care services in the community are determined by continuous joint assessment of local needs involving health boards and local authorities. The aim is to secure the most effective package of services, both in hospital and the community, that meet the specific needs of patients and carers.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many long-stay mental hospitals remain open.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Numbers of mental hospitals currently open which have patients resident for more than one year are shown in the table:

Health Care (Strathclyde)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cost of all health care provided outwith the NHS in each year since 1979 at 1979 constant prices, in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The table has been derived from health board annual accounts and contains costs of health care purchased from the private sector by (a) health boards within the Strathclyde region area and (b) all health boards in Scotland. No figures are held centrally by the national health service for other health care provided by the private sector.

Winter Death Rate

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the excess winter death rate in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: There is no universally accepted definition of excess winter deaths and it would not be possible to calculate a rate for these. The total numbers of deaths by month are given in the table.

Deaths in Scotland and Strathclyde by month, 1984–1993

Hypothermia

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people died of hypothermia other than when engaged in outdoor pursuits in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: It is not possible to identify those hypothermia deaths where the deceased had been engaged in outdoor pursuits.

Numbers are already published regularly—in the Registrar-General's four-weekly "Vital Statistics Return", available in the Library—of total deaths with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate. Figures for Scotland and Strahtclyde are given.

Deaths with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, 1984 to 1993. Strathclyde and Scotland:

Public Bodies

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to how many agencies and non-departmental public bodies his Department makes appointments; how many appointments have been made to these bodies; and what was their total budget in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department to which I make appointments are listed in the Cabinet Office annual publication "Public Bodies 1994" which was published today and copies of which are held in the Library of the House. The information includes the number of appointments I make to each body, the gross expenditure of the body and the amount funded by central Government. Further information on the financial affairs of each executive non-departmental public body may be obtained from the annual report of the body.

I appoint two non-executive directors to the board of the Scottish Prison Service and one non-executive director to the management board of registers of Scotland.

Details of my responsibilities with respect to the appointments of individual chief executives for each of my eight executive agencies can be found in the agency framework documents, copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

Information about the running costs of each of my executive agencies is set out in the table. Agencies came into being on various dates during this period. To give a consistent time series a full five-year run of figures has been prepared irrespective of when the agencies were created. The table shows outturn expenditure since information is not readily available over the full five-year period on a budget basis.

Council Housing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council house tenants have brought their homes under the right-to-buy scheme; and how many subsequently sold their homes in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The most recent information on right-to-buy sales is published in the statistical bulletin HSG/1994/9 a copy of which is available in the Library. Information on the resale of dwellings bought under the right-to-buy scheme is not held centrally.

Special Transitional Grant

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give by regional and island authority the amount of special transitional grant for 1993–94 spent on (a) nursing home placements, (b) residential home placements and (c) non-residential services.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Local authorities in Scotland have received funding of £85.8 million in 1993–94 to support their new community care responsibilities. The comparable figures for 1994–95 and 1995–96 are £176 million and £241 million respectively. These include resources equivalent to the special transitional grant which applies in England only. Outturn expenditure data for 1993–94 are not yet available.

"Progress in Partnership"

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Robertson), Official Report, columns 353–54, if it is his intention to create a priority partnership area in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow or (b) Inverclyde as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: In announcing the outcome of the review of urban regeneration policy in Scotland my right hon. Friend noted that further consultation on the implementation of the new arrangements would be conducted. Once this process is completed, we plan to issue detailed guidance to local authorities and other local partners on the operation of the new arrangements and then enter into discussions with these bodies on a range of matters, including the selection of priority areas. An announcement will then be made, probably later this year, on the designation of the first priority partnership areas. The needs of Greenock, Port Glasgow and Inverclyde as a whole will be considered, alongside those of other areas, during this process.

Population Estimates

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the total number of people in Scotland over the age of 65 years in 2001.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The population of Scotland aged 65 years and over is projected to be 805,000 in 2001.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of operations for breast cancer in 1993–94 were performed in hospitals where (a) more than 100 such operations took place, (b) between 50 and 100 took place and (c) fewer than 50 took place.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The estimated number of discharges from Scottish NHS hospitals in 1993–94 following an operation for breast cancer is given in the following table.

Estimated discharges from Scottish hospitals following an operation for breast cancer for the financial year ending March 1994[1]

	Frequency	Percentage of total cases

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Oxygenated Petrol

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what research his Department has carried out into oxygenated petrol; what plans he has for research into the environmental suitability of oxygenated petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: This is a development issue which is being pursued by the fuel industry, but the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council is considering launching a programme into fundamental combustion research aimed at raising the efficiency and reducing the harmful emissions of the combustive process.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary on 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 69.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I received one item from Ian Greer last week. It was an invitation to a reception which my constituency secretary declined on my behalf.

Child Witnesses

Mrs. Llin Golding: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all fast-tracking initiatives being made to reduce delays faced by child witnesses; and if these initiatives are to be evaluated for broader application.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Fast-tracking schemes are currently in place at the following Crown court centres: Leeds, Lincoln, Newcastle, covering cases from Durham; Peterborough; Plymouth, pilot scheme; Preston and Winchester, pilot scheme. Area criminal justice liaison committees are still considering whether similar schemes can be set up in other Crown court centres. However, a number of informal schemes are also in existence, in response to the duty on the courts to ensure that waiting times in cases involving child witnesses are kept to a minimum.

The Criminal Justice Consultative Council is due to review the introduction of fast tracking schemes in the Crown court at its next meeting in April, when a decision will be taken as to further action.

TREASURY

VAT

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table comparable to table 3 of appendix 7 of HC 289 of Session 1990–91 giving estimates of the increase in VAT payments between 1991–92 and 1995–96 by decile group.

Mr. Nelson: Latest estimates of VAT paid by decile of income are given in the Central Statistical Office article "Effects of taxes and benefits upon household income 1993" on the December 1994 edition of "Economic Trends". VAT payments in 1995–96 will depend on what happens to earnings and prices, and on household composition and spending patterns.

Lending Package (Mexico)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the short-term lending package for Mexico authorised by central banks through the bank of international settlement has been promised by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Nelson: No formal lending proposal has yet been received from the BIS.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the costs of collecting capital gains tax for each of the previous five years.

Sir George Young: The figures for the five tax years to 1993–94—the latest figure available—are:

	£ million
1989–90	34.3
1990–91	39.0
1991–92	43.3
1992–93	38.4
1993–94	41.9

The figures quoted exclude tax on gains made by companies included in corporation tax. Some of the costs associated with companies, however, cannot be separately identified and are therefore included in the costs figures for CGT rather than corporation tax.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the monthly changes in the retail prices index since January 1989, with January 1989 being taken as 100.

Mr. Nelson: Monthly percentage changes in the retail prices index are available from the Central Statistical Office database—series CZEQ—which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Rebasing the index by using January 1989 as 100 rather than the official January 1987 = 100 base has little effect on monthly changes. There are, however, slight differences due to the retail prices index methodology of calculating percentage changes from index numbers rounded to 1 decimal place. The figures requested are listed below.

Monthly percentage changes in the Retail Prices Index (January 1989 = 100)

Beer Excise Duty

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reconsider the Government's position on beer excise duty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government's position with respect to the excise duty on beer and other alcoholic drinks was made clear in my right hon. and learned Friend's Budget statement and in his further statement to the House. The increase in duty which took effect from 1 January 1995 resulted from the decision to leave the rate of VAT on domestic fuel and power at 8 per cent.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from Yorkshire brewers regarding the excise duty on beer.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Representations have been received from the Yorkshire Brewers and Licensed Retailers Association.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research his Department has carried out into the effects of maintaining a higher level of duty on beer in the United Kingdom than in other European Union member states.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: HM Customs and Excise has considered the effects of the differing level of beer duty among EU member states, the impact these have had on UK production and revenue receipts, the findings of consultants engaged by the European Commission and the various representations made by trade and other bodies.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the extent to which the exchange rate would have fallen against the deutschmark and the United States dollar since the end of June 1994 if interest rates had not been raised since then.

Mr. Nelson: Interest rates are set to deliver the Government's inflation objective. Movements in exchange rates depend on many factors beside interest rates, and it is not possible to estimate the effect of any one factor with any degree of confidence.

Customs and Excise Office, Ellesmere Port

Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made on the effectiveness of anti-drug smuggling activities in relation to the proposed closure of Ellesmere Port Customs and Excise office.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The estimation of the effectiveness of anti-smuggling activity in a particular area is a matter for the head of the local Customs and Excise executive unit.

Customs has examined the effect of moving its operational anti-smuggling base from Ellesmere Port to Liverpool and has concluded that there will be no adverse effect on anti-smuggling control.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Newton: None.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Contributory Pension Fund

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects the accounts of the parliamentary contributory pension fund for 1993–94 to be presented to Parliament.

Mr. Newton: The accounts of the parliamentary contributory pension fund for 1993–94 were laid in the House on 11 January 1995—HOC paper 129.

Badge Messengers

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what was the longest period of continuous duty worked by a badge messenger in the weeks commencing (a) 23 January and (b) 30 January and for what hours he or she worked; what was the longest week worked by any badge messenger; what plans the Commission has to review the working hours of badge messengers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: There are no current plans for the Commission to review the working hours of badge messengers, but they will be included in any examination of alteration of patterns of work caused by revised sittings arrangements of the House. I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to write to the right hon. Member with the operational details that he requests.

Official Paid Post Cards

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many official paid post cards to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of a communication have been printed with an air mail marking; what was the cost; for what reasons it was necessary to produce them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael J. Martin [holding answer 7 February 1995]: In 1991, the House of Commons Services Committee gave approval in principle for the free provision of telephone calls and postal services to the main institutions of the European Community and the offices of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of the Western Europe Union. These proposals were approved subsequently by the Commission, and a range of stationery for use by Members in correspondence to approved official destinations in Europe was subsequently made available. I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to write to the hon. Member about the cost of the postcards.

Disabled People Access

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what measures (a) have recently been taken and (b) will be taken to assist people with disabilities to gain better access to the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Ray Powell: The Committee has given detailed and careful consideration to the consultant's report on access by disabled people commissioned by the Parliamentary Works Directorate and submitted to the Committee on 30 June 1993. The report is a very comprehensive study dealing with the Palace and 1, The Abbey garden. The cost of implementing all the recommendations proposed by the consultant was estimated by the Director of Works to be £1,272,700.

In addition to receiving written evidence, the Committee also took oral evidence on four occasions including sessions with the all-party disablement group, English Heritage, the consultant and Officers of the House. Oral and written evidence received by the Committee during the inquiry will be published in due course: the consultants report will be deposited in the Library and in the Record Office, House of Lords. The relevant minutes of proceedings of the Committee are being published today.

Many of the consultant's proposals were considered uncontroversial by the Committee and have already been implemented by the Parliamentary Works Directorate. Other schemes needing greater expenditure have been endorsed and will be included in the programme of works. A full list of the items undertaken or planned has been placed in the Library. The consultant's report also recommended several projects which, in the committee's view, would be highly controversial, if implemented. The committee has therefore considered these proposals in greater detail. As with other recommendations, it has been necessary, in seeking to make possible dignified access to the various parts of the building for people with disabilities, to take into account the need to preserve the historic fabric of the Palace, which is a grade 1 listed building of national and international importance. The committee was concerned that the provision of access to certain areas should not subject disabled people, particularly those in wheelchairs, to increased risk if an emergency evacuation of the premises became necessary, and has asked the Serjeant at Arms and the Director of Parliamentary Works to conduct a further study into this aspect.

One of the areas where access for disabled people is most difficult is the Grand Committee Room and Jubilee Room. The consultant's proposal was for a lift from Westminster Hall to the Grand Committee Room level, involving a cavity being opened up in the 12th century walls of Westminster Hall, at a total cost of £230,000. The Committee was aware, in considering this proposal, that the adjacent Westminster Hall cafeteria is due to be converted to a visitor centre following approval by the House on 12 July 1994 of a report by the Catering Committee on Refreshment Provision for Line of Route visitors, HC, 1993–94, 307. The Committee therefore considered that the design work for the conversion should contain a requirement for the architect to consider how a lift could be incorporated in this area. This would have less impact on Westminster Hall and the Grand Committee Room. As the conversion to a visitor centre cannot take place until a suitable alternative for the present lunchtime users of the cafeteria is provided, the Committee also proposes that a replacement for the current chairlift which would allow disabled people to remain in their wheelchairs should be sought as a matter of urgency. The Committee also agreed to support the provision of a disabled person's toilet outside the Grand Committee Room.

Another area which presents considerable difficulty for anyone using a wheelchair is the Crypt Chapel. Public access is via entrances in Old Palace Yard and Westminster Hall. The Committee has asked the Serjeant at Arms to examine whether alternative access arrangements via the Cloisters are practicable. The Committee does not, however, favour the solution proposed by the consultant, of a chair lift.

Access by disabled people to the Ground, Principal, Committee and Upper Committee floors by disabled people is also vital. The Committee supports the proposal of the Parliamentary Works Directorate to upgrade lift No.15 to ensure that these floors are easily accessible.

The consultant proposed that a central handrail should be provided on the stairs leading to St. Stephens Hall. As there are already handrails at the side of this staircase, the entrance is narrow, and as a separate route is available for people in wheelchairs, the Committee did not support this proposal. Other proposals supported by the Committee included the provision of a tactile model of the building and consideration of a sound guide on the line-of-route to assist visually impaired visitors; and further improvements to the existing induction loop provision to include all Committee Rooms.

As part of the review, and in the light of the anticipated beneficial effects of the provision of the New Parliamentary Building (Phase 2), the design for which includes improved facilities for people with disabilities, the Committee has invited the Serjeant at Arms to give further consideration to what organisational or administrative changes might be made to assist disabled people.

I understand that similar arrangements are being made in another place to implement the consultant's proposals.

The measures and recommendations outlined above are the result of careful and sympathetic consideration by the Accommodation and Works Committee and, when complete, will enable people with disabilities to reach all but the most difficult parts of this historic building in a dignified manner. The Committee will continue to consider the needs of people with disabilities as new works projects are proposed.

WALES

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by the Department or agency.

Mr. Redwood: During 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1994 the Welsh Office purchased five training courses costing more than £5,000 each. Details are as follows:

Course title	Course objective	Organisation	Total cost (exclusive of VAT) £	Responsibility of participants

Note:
1. The courses were evaluated by scrutinising the participants' course reaction questionnaires and tutors' reports.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what initiatives he is taking to obtain more speech therapists in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he will set up a north Wales training scheme for speech therapists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The recruitment and retention of speech therapists is a matter for employers. They will need to liaise with the education sector over the number of students entering the appropriate training.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many speech therapy vacancies have been vacant for six months or more; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally.

Language Units

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will visit language units in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what is his policy concerning language units in maintained schools in Wales;

(3) which language units he has visited in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I has yet paid a specific visit to a language unit but I will bear it in mind for my future programme. It is the responsibility of local education authorities and schools to make appropriate provision for pupils, including those children with special educational needs who may need support from a speech and language unit.

Opencast Coal Sites

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the opencast coal sites in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: There are currently 17 operational licensed opencast sites in Wales. These are as follows:

Site	County
East Pit Extension	Dyfed
Ffos Las	Dyfed
Gilfach Iago	Dyfed
Lane End	Clwyd
Springhill Quarry	Clwyd
The Smelt	Clwyd
Kays and Kears	Gwent
Great White Tip	Mid Glamorgan
Helid Colliery	Mid Glamorgan
Llanilid West Revised	Mid Glamorgan
Henllan Uchaf	Powys
Blaenpergwm South	West Glamorgan
Brawds Level	West Glamorgan
Derlwyn 2	West Glamorgan
Lletty'r Crudd	West Glamorgan
Nant Helen	West Glamorgan
Tyn y Craig	West Glamorgan

School Playing Fields

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on school playing fields.

Mr. Richards: The Government's policy on school playing fields is laid down in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, which set minimum area standards. In addition, policy planning guidance note 17 states that, with the needs of the wider community in mind, playing fields should normally be preserved.

Art Collection

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure that the Welsh Arts Council's art collection will be available for viewing by the general public.

Mr. Richards: The Secretary of State has no powers of direction in this matter; it is an issue for the Arts Council of Wales.

Pre-school Playgroups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pre-school playgroups there are in each of the counties of Wales.

Mr. Richards: The latest available figures provided by Wales PPA are for 1993–94. They are taken from "Statistics from Wales PPA Facts and Figures 1993–94" and are as follows:

	Number
Clwyd	79
Dyfed	45
Mid Glam	80
South Glam	89
West Glam	17
Gwent	68
Gwynedd	32
Powys	34
Wales	444

These do not include combined parent and toddler groups/playgroups.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Redwood: No items have been received from Ian Greer.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 6 February, Official Report, column 69, by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current ratio of staff to prisoners at (a) Doncaster, (b) the Wolds, (c) Lindholme, (d) Wakefield, (e) New Hall and (f) Wakefield prisons; and what was the figure (i) six months and (ii) 12 months ago.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 8 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the ratio of staff to prisoners at Doncaster and Wolds, both of which are local prisons, at Lindholme, a category C prison, New Hall which is a closed women's prison and Wakefield, a dispersal prison.

The number of prisoners per member of staff at each prison is as follows.

Prison	December 1993	June 1994	December 1994
Doncaster	not open	0.49	1.75
Wolds	1.45	1.17	1.47
Lindholme	1.44	1.49	1.45
Wakefield	1.00	1.07	1.10
New Hall	0.85	0.80	0.89

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to alter the arrangements for incentives and privileges for prisoners.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Prison Service is developing a national framework for incentives and earned privileges. The emphasis will be on prisoners earning privileges by good behaviour and participation in work or other constructive activity. I will be making an announcement later.

Poisons

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of (a) category A, (b) category B and (c) category C places available in each of the Prison Service regions; and if he will list the changes that have taken place during the last 12 months between those categories.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 8 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the total number of Category A, B and C places available in each Prison Service region.

Prisons are defined by operational function and an establishment will have, according to its particular function, accommodation designed for holding prisoners up to a particular security category.

Information on the security standard of accommodation available in each of the Prison Service areas at closed training prisons and local prisons is given in the attached tables. Copies of these tables have been placed in the Library of the House.

Table 1: Number of adult male prison places available for prisoners categorised A, B or C at 31 December 1994 (March 1994 figures are shown in brackets)

Area	Category A	Category B	Category C
Central	362 (362)	1,841 (1,695)	1,361 (1,660)
Chilterns	—	932 (890)	776 (776)
East Midlands	—	1,437 (1,433)	1,526 (1,572)
East Anglia	—	992 (1,088)	1,259 (1,259)
Kent	—	1,231 (1,208)	859 (838)
London North	534 (534)	2,141 (2,039)	1,127 (1,277)
London South	301 (334)	2,964 (2,976)	151 (145)
Mercia	—	168 (168)	—
North East	1,014 (1,051)	1,173 (1,140)	1,307 (1,307)
North West	—	854 (894)	1,116 (1,097)
South Coast	—	2,213 (2,047)	721 (768)
Trans Pennine	727 (637)	2,614 (2,077)	794 (751)

Area	Category A	Category B	Category C
Wales and West	—	1,078 (1,130)	270 (256)
Wessex	—	936 (970)	1,192 (1,304)
Yorkshire	—	320 (320)	408 (394)
Total	2,938 (2,918)	20,895 (20,075)	12,867 (13,404)

Notes:

1. Figures for Category A places comprise total number of places available in dispersal prisons which are suitable for Category A and Category B prisoners; and the number of places in the Category A Unit at HMP Belmarsh.

2. Figures for Category B places comprise the total number of places in non-dispersal training prisons and local prisons. Some of the more secure local prisons also hold Category A prisoners as and when necessary. A formal maximum number of places for this purpose is not designated.

3. The Category B figures include 127 (145) places immigration detainees at HMHC Haslar.

Table 2: Number of places available for convicted and sentenced Category A female prisoners

Area	Category A	Category B	Category C
North East	48	—	—

Notes:

1. There is currently only one sentenced Category A female prisoner.

2. With the exception of those categorised A, convicted and sentenced female prisoners are not categorised, but are allocated to open or closed conditions.

Misuse of Drugs

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to introduce legislation to outlaw the illicit supply of anabolic steroids;

(2) if he will publish the minutes of the January meeting of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The technical committee of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs met on 24 January. The meeting considered, in the light of the decision to control anabolic steroids and similar substances under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, precisely which substances should be brought under control. The Committee's conclusions will be considered by the full council at its next meeting on 11 May, a date which I understand it would not now be practicable to bring forward. We intend to bring forward the necessary draft order and regulations as quickly as possible thereafter. It is not the practice to publish the minutes of meetings of the advisory council or its committees.

Police Authorities

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the estimated percentage increase in population for each police authority area since 1979 and (b) the estimated percentage increase in police establishment since 1979.

Mr. Maclean: The information is set out in the table.

Child Witnesses

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the steering group on child evidence will next meet; and what policy decisions arose from the last meeting.

Mr. Maclean: The steering group on child evidence will next meet on 23 March.

At its last meeting, the steering group discussed the causes of delay in bringing child abuse cases to court, and the action being taken by the relevant agencies to reduce delays.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has commissioned in respect of delays faced by child witnesses in cases of alleged abuse; and if he will outline the scope of any such research project.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office and the Department of Health are funding research by Ms Joyce Plotnikoff and Mr. Richard Woolfson into the delays in bringing prosecutions in child abuse cases. The purpose of the research is to evaluate the effectiveness of the Government's policy to give priority to such prosecutions, to identify factors causing delay and to recommend mechanisms for reducing delays.

Reconviction Rates

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current reconviction rates for persons discharged from (a) first custodial sentences, (b) subsequent custodial sentences and (c) custodial sentences generally.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

Percentage of offenders reconvicted[1] within a two-year period following discharge from a custodial sentence in 1990 by whether or not the current sentence was a first custodial sentence.

History of imprisonment	Number discharged	Per cent. reconvicted
First custodial sentence	28,298	52
Subsequent custodial sentence	18,701	53
All discharges[2]	47,473	52

[1] Reconvicted of a serious offence as defined by the standard list in Appendices 4 and 5 of Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1993.
[2] Includes 474 cases where the previous history of imprisonment is not known.

Comparisons between reconviction rates are affected by differences in the age, sex, previous convictions and other characteristics of offenders.

Woodcock Report

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his detailed timetable for the implementation of each of the recommendations of the Woodcock report.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library a timetable for implementation of the 64 recommendations in Sir John Woodcock's report on Whitemoor. The timetable may be subject to amendment in the light of any comments made by Sir John Learmont when he reports on his review of security in the Prison Service. I have asked Sir John Learmont to report to me by the end of the year on how far the recommendations of Sir John Woodcock have been implemented.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extensions of detention under the Prevention of Terrorism Act were made in each month in 1994; and how many of these resulted in a criminal charge.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is shown in the table.

Extensions of detention under the Prevention of Terrorism Act by outcome: United Kingdom in 1994

Month	Number of extensions: Great Britain	Number of extensions: Northern Ireland	Number of extensions: Total	Number of criminal charges: Great Britain	Number of criminal charges: Northern Ireland	Number of criminal charges: Total

Note:
[1] The two persons whose detention was extended in Great Britain in May and June were both subsequently served with exclusion orders.
[2] Provisional figures.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many exclusion orders made under the provision of the Prevention of Terrorism Act were in force in 1994; and how many were reveiwed, replaced, revoked or scrapped.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is shown in the table.

Exclusion orders: United Kingdom 1994

	Orders made by Home Secretary	Orders made by Northern Ireland Secretary
Orders in force on 1 January	71	9
New orders made	4	1
Orders reviewed, of which	28	—
Orders renewed or replaced	14	—
Orders revoked or allowed to lapse	14	—
Deaths	3	—
Orders in force on 31 December	58	10

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the review for 1994 of the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

Mr. Howard: I received Mr. Rowe's report on 3 February and shall arrange for it to be made available in the usual way in good time for the debates on the future of the legislation.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Howard: None.

Asylum

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reviewed the working of the asylum appeals system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library a report by the consultancy firm KPMG Peat Marwick on the operation of the asylum appeals procedures. The study arose from the commitment which was given at the time of the adoption of the Asylum Appeals (Procedure) Rules 1993 to review the new regulations after a year of operation. The consultants analysed over 200 appeal cases and looked at all aspects of the asylum appeal determination system from an operational perspective. They have produced a helpful report, and have made a number of recommendations of a mainly operational and procedural nature, which the Lord Chancellor and I are considering.

Police National Computer

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of Sate for the Home Department if he will make a statement about future arrangements for delivering the police national computer and other police information technology.

Mr. Howard: We are currently discussing with the police service proposals to set up a new body to deliver police IT more effectively and efficiently on a partnership basis between chief constables, police authorities and the Home Office. The discussions are based in part on proposals from the police, and are focusing on the scope for bringing into a single organisation the responsibility for centrally provided IT services, such as the police national computer, and delivery of the police information services/information technology initiative which was launched last November.

Following a detailed study, I have decided that the market test of the Hendon Data Centre should not proceed to competitive tendering at present. The existing police national computer system, which is provided by the centre, has been in service since 1991 and planning for its eventual replacement has already begun. A decision about the future management of the centre and the possibility of contracting-out the service will be taken in about 18 months when the likely nature, size and scope of the new system is clearer. Whatever arrangements are made in future for the provision of the police national computer system, the ownership and use of the criminal records held on it will remain firmly under the control of the police.

Data Protection Directive

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the nature of the data rules applying to banks recently approved by the EC; what will be the cost of the measures; what benefit will stem from the rules; and if Her Majesty's Government voted for the measures.

Mr. Nicholas Baker [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The directive is intended to help the operation of the single market by ensuring common standards of data protection within the European Union. It is likely to require the elaboration of existing United Kingdom data protection rules and will involve their application to manual as well as computerised records. The initial proposals would have imposed substantial additional costs on the banks and other data users; modifications made to the proposals in the course of subsequent negotiations have gone a significant way to reducing those burdens.

Political agreement was reached on the directive in the Foreign Affairs Council on 6 February: the UK said that it would be abstaining when the matter is put to a formal vote, probably later this month. The UK's abstention was conditional upon, among a number of other points, the Council and the Commission expressing their agreement to greater flexibility in applying the directive to existing manual records.

Prison Escapes

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of escapes from prison in each year since 1979 stating (a) which prison the prisoner escaped from, (b) what the offence of the prisoner was and (c) for how long each prisoner was at large.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 8 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for details of the number of escapes from prison in each year since 1979 stating (a) which prison the prisoner escaped from (b) what the offence of the prisoner was and (c) for how long each prisoner was at large.

Before 20 June 1988, records were not kept centrally on escapes. The attached table lists the number of prisoners who have escaped and the prison establishment concerned from that date until 31 December 1994. A copy of this table has been placed in the Library of the House.

The information on the offence of the prisoner involved and the length of time these prisoners were unlawfully at large could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Train Cancellations and Delays

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains arrived more than five minutes late during peak hours; how many of these cancellations were attributable to (a) train breakdowns, (b) signal failures, (c) track/points failures, (d) leaves on the line, (e) staff shortages, (f) adverse weather conditions and (g) other factors; and what percentage of peak hour trains arrived more than five minutes late on each of the Network SouthEast divisions in each four week period during (i) 1992, (ii) 1993 and (ii) 1994.

Mr. Watts: BR publishes details of train service performance against passengers charter targets for punctuality and reliability every four weeks. However, the detailed information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Heathrow Airport (Night Flights)

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many flights land at, and take off from, Heathrow airport on average (a) between 2300 hours and 0600 hours and (b) between 2330 hours and 0630 hours.

Mr. Norris: At Heathrow, the night quota period runs from 2330 to 0600. In the 1994 summer season—27 March 1994 to 23 October 1994—there were 3,204 runway movements in the night quota period, of which 2,905 counted against the movements limit, an average of 15 per night. Data for times outside the night quota period are not readily available on an equivalent basis. Very few movements are scheduled for the period 2300 to 2329, but actual numbers of movements in this period fluctuate considerably per night depending on whether flights have been delayed from earlier in the day. Movements in the period 0601 to 0630 are mostly arrivals. Analysis of data for sample weeks during the summer shows an average of about 16 movements per night during this half hour. There can be considerable variation in the number of movements in the half hours immediately before and after 0600 on a particular night due to the weather.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has had on diversion of traffic from the Severn bridge to rural routes in Gloucestershire.

Mr. Watts: In July last year, a study carried out on behalf of the Highways Agency by Gloucestershire county council showed that while, on average, some 2,700 more vehicles than might be expected—allowing for traffic growth—travelled west through the county each day, only 1,500 of these could be positively identified as avoiding the bridge tolls. The extra traffic was distributed fairly evenly over the M50 and three other diversion routes, the A48 (T), A40(T)/A4136 and B4215.

Roll-on-roll-off Ferries

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the percentage reduction, or other measure of reduction, of vehicle-carrying capacity of roll-on-roll-off ferry vessels that would be occasioned by the installation of removable bulkheads.

Mr. Norris: This is a technical matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robin Bradley to Mr. Nigel Spearing, dated 8 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about loss of vehicle carrying capacity on ro-ro ferries if removable bulkheads are installed.

No general estimate has been made of the reduction in capacity consequent upon installing removable bulkheads on the car deck. The reduction of vehicle capacity will depend upon the size of the ship and the vehicle loading and stowage arrangement. During the second half of 1990 a study was made into modifications that would be needed for existing ferries to meet the requirements known as SOLAS 90. The details are contained in the International Maritime Organization paper SLF 35/inf.7 a copy which is attached, and which you may find of interest.

Railway Signalling

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much will be invested in railway signalling infrastructure in Great Britain in 1994–95; and how much has been invested in each of the previous five years at (a) cash and (b) constant prices.

Mr. Watts: In 1994–95, Railtrack expects to invest about £175 million in railway signalling infrastructure.

Investment in the previous five years in signalling and track projects is as follows. Figures for signalling alone are not available before 1992–93.

	£ million cash
	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94

[1] Major resignalling schemes are often combined with alterations to track layouts eg. to simplify traffic flow at junctions.

RSS Report

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the terms of reference of the report being carried out on the RSS office in Cardiff; and on what date this report is due.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robin Bradley to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 8 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the review being carried out on the RSS Office in Cardiff.

The terms of reference of the review are to:

(a) follow up initial work carried out by the Department's internal auditors and make such further enquiries as are necessary to ensure that the requirements of propriety and effective operation, management and control are being met throughout RSS;

(b) make recommendations on any changes to policy, procedures or practice needed to achieve the above;

(c) make recommendations on any personnel or training issues arising;

(d) consider whether the service level agreement under which RSS operates provides a suitable basis as presently written for the future management of RSS.

The review is a management review being carried out on my behalf and the report is due to be made to me by 31 March 1995.

Cycle Helmets

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current Government policy on cycle helmets; and what plans he has to change it.

Mr. Norris: The Government actively promote the benefits of cycle helmet wearing, but we have no plans to make them compulsory.

Rail Consultants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff are currently employed full-time and part-time on contract and as consultants on property matters for British Railways; and what were the figures for the same time last year.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for British Rail.

Merchant Fleet

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Chamber of Shipping to discuss the future plans for the British merchant fleet.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport meets the president of the Chamber of Shipping from time to time to discuss a range of shipping issues.

Cellos and Double Basses (Rail Transport)

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with (a) the chairman of British Rail, (b) the Musicians Union and (c) representatives of leading British orchestras concerning problems experienced by musicians transporting cellos and double basses by rail.

Mr. Watts: None.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposed to take to ensure that all British Rail staff responsible for the issuing and examination of tickets are aware of the fares policy for the transportation of cellos and double basses by rail.

Mr. Watts: This is a matter for the British Railways Board and its train operating units. However, I understand that ticket retail and examining staff are issued with manuals detailing current fares policy.

Hunting (Damage)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the damage caused by the York and Ainsty North hunt to the York to Harrogate railway in January.

Mr. Watts: I understand that no damage was caused either to Railtrack north-east's infrastructure or to the train operated by Regional Railways north-east.

Red Routes

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest timetable for implementation of his Department's proposals for red routes in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The traffic director for London is currently considering a revised timetable for implementing the red route measures with the objective of having the network operational in 2000.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: The ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Rail Services

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what external financing limits have been set for British Rail and Railtrack for 1995–96; and what estimates he has made for Government grant support to passenger services for 1995–96.

Mr. Watts: The British Rail and Railtrack EFLs have been set respectively at contributions of £817 million and £128 million. These contributions are based on an estimate of grant support, comprising franchising director and metropolitan railway grants, of £1,800 million for 1995–96. This estimate of grant includes metropolitan railway grant paid by the Scottish Office to Strathclyde regional council. These external finance contributions and the estimated level of grant support are consistent with the combined external finance limits for BR/Railtrack and European passenger services/Union Railways announced in the Budget statement last November, after allowing for a transfer of £15 million from EPS to Railtrack for investment to be carried out by Railtrack on behalf of EPS. Any adjustments to these figures will be notified to Parliament.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what external financing limit has been set for the railway industry in 1994–95.

Mr. Watts: The railway industry external finance limit (EFL) for 1994–95 is currently £1,496 million, as previously announced in reply to the hon. Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin) on 29 November 1994, Official Report column 659. However, the Government have agreed to increase the EFL by up to a further £64 million, if required, to meet certain working capital requirements. If the EFL is increased, the external finance contribution of British Rail, which is currently £272 million, will be reduced by a corresponding amount. Parliament will be notified of any adjustments.

ISYS Warning System

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the safety advantages of using the ISYS warning system to avoid collisions.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 31 January 1995]: My Department is not aware of this system.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached arising out of the report by the Marine Accident Board on the findings of the Oceaneering Technologies investigation into the wreck of MV Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 7 February 1995]: My right hon. Friend is still considering the chief inspector of marine accidents' assessment of the material provided by the International Transport Workers Federation, and whether further action needs to be taken.

Electrical Shock Weapons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now institute an inquiry into how British Midland Security allowed ICL Technical Plastics to carry an electro-shock weapon on a British Midland flight from Glasgow on 25 November 1994 arriving in London Heathrow at 10.20 a.m.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 7 February 1995]: My Department has made inquiries of both British Midland and BAA at Glasgow. Neither can trace the incident.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will list the severance payment made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 7 February 1995, column 69.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, columns 574–75, if he will list the contribution each of the 10 authorities receives from homelessness indicators in the SSA formula, in descending order.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Homelessness is one of a large number of general indicators that are included within composite indices in the personal social services and all other services service blocks. It is the overall value of an index which is important in determining an authority's SSA and not the value of an individual indicator within an index. Subject to that qualification, the 10 authorities which have the highest contribution from homelessness indicators, and the amounts, are:

	£ millions
Birmingham City Council	13.323
Manchester City Council	9.807
London Borough of Lambeth	6.356
London Borough of Hackney	5.789
London Borough of Southwark	5.319
London Borough of Islington	4.891
Walsall Metropolitan Borough	4.775
Bradford City Council	4.003
London Borough of Haringey	3.944
Westminster City Council	3.519

Lord Government Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional amount was needed on Nottingham's 1995–96 local government finance settlement in order to keep pace with inflation; and what further amount beyond this was allocated.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Adjusted for changes of function, the increase in total standard spending for England between 1994–95 and 1995–96 is 0.8 per cent. The Treasury forecast for underlying inflation for the same period is 2.5 per cent. The distribution of resources to individual local authorities is dependent on needs assessments, which vary from year to year.

Departmental Staff

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the numbers and grades of staff, broken down by programme where possible, allocated and to be allocated by each department to each Government office for the regions, in each of the financial years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Sir Paul Beresford: The number of staff by grade and Department in each Government office for the regions as at 31 January 1995 is shown in the table below. There are no equivalent figures for 1993–94, since the Government offices came into being only in April 1994. Staffing arrangements in the Offices in 1995–96 have yet to be finalised. Details will be available in the Government office MINIS returns, which will be published in the spring.

Local Government Commission

Sir Patrick Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment when he expects to announce his response to the Local Government Commission's recommendations for Staffordshire.

Mr. Curry: We are still considering the Local Government Commission's recommendations about the future structure of local government in Staffordshire, and will announce a decision as soon as possible.

Water Charges

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from local authorities, voluntary organisations and other consumer groups concerning future options for charging for the provision of water supplies.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has received representations from a number of local authorities and other interested bodies such as the Consumers' Association and Age Concern.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Gummer: None

Water Meters

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of households with water meters which have been installed (a) voluntarily and (b) compulsorily.

Mr. Atkins: The Office of Water Services estimates that 1.1 million households in England and Wales currently have water meters. Information on the proportion of households metered voluntarily and compulsorily is not available.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each programme of expenditure under the single regeneration budget in each London borough or London training and enterprise council area, the commitments predating the single regeneration budget for (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 30 January 1995]: I am placing this information in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

The Attorney-General: None.

Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library the advice given by his Department to the CBI on the application of the TUPE regulations.

The Attorney-General: By convention, the Law Officers do not normally disclose whether advice has been given on a particular issue or the substance of any advice that they may have given.

PRIME MINISTER

European Union

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations have taken place on the European content on the draft framework document on Northern Ireland with (a) heads of Government in the EU other than the Taoiseach, (b) ministerial councils of EU states other than the Irish Republic, (c) the President of the EU and (d) individual commissioners of the EU.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that so long as Northern Ireland remains part of the United Kingdom, Northern Ireland interests will continue to be represented in the European Union's various ministerial Councils exclusively by Ministers answerable to the Parliament at Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Under article 146 of the treaty of Rome, as amended by the treaty on European Union, member states' representatives on the Council must be authorised to commit the Government of that member state. United Kingdom Ministers are answerable to the Parliament of Westminster, and will continue to represent the United Kingdom.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

The Prime Minister: None.

Chequers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of the meeting held at Chequers on 13 January to review British foreign policy; and what are the rules determining which expenditures at Chequers shall be met from public funds.

The Prime Minister [holding answer Tuesday 7 February]: It is not my usual practice to give the costs of individual meetings or receptions.

Expenses incurred by Ministers and officials meeting at Chequers in the course of official duty are met by the Cabinet Office.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Medical Negligence

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a table showing the number of cases of medical negligence settled and the total cost of damages awarded together with legal costs, in each year since 1990–91, by health board area.

Mr. Moss: The number of cases of medical negligence settled since 1990–91 along with total costs of damages and legal costs by health and social services board area is as follows:

	Eastern			Northern
	Cases paid	Settlements £	Legal costs £	Cases paid	Settlements £	Legal costs £
1990–91[1]	22	770,500	76,116	10	132,250	51,109

[1] Information is only available for the last six months of 1990–91.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firms in Northern Ireland have received Government assistance under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in the last five years.

Mr. Ancram: The number of loans guaranteed under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in Northern Ireland over the past five years was 101. Some companies may have received more than one loan.

Funeral Costs

Dr. Hendron: to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the average cost of a funeral in (a) Belfast and (b) Northern Ireland; and what comparisons he has made with funeral charges outside Northern Ireland;

(2) what plans he has to make higher provision for the costs of a funeral in Northern Ireland following the Secretary of state for Social Security's recent decision that social fund payments to cover funeral costs are to be limited to £875.

Mr. Moss: Information on the average cost of funerals in Belfast and Northern Ireland is not available.

Costs of funerals vary considerably within and between local areas and regions of the United Kingdom. The social fund funeral payment scheme cannot be expected to meet the cost of all variations and eventualities.

The Government have referred their proposals to the Social Security Advisory Committee and will consider its report when it has been completed.

Anglo Irish

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration has been given in the Anglo-Irish discussions to the Irish Government's proposal to hold elections in 1995 for senators representative of Irish people living outside the Republic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Sir John Wheeler: None.

Roads Service Budget

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many amendments have been made to date in the Department of the Environment's roads service budget during the year 1994–95; and what has been the effect of each amendment, in financial terms, for each division of the roads service.

Mr. Moss [holding answer 7 February 1995]: Apart from a number of technical adjustments which have no financial effect for any of the six divisions of the Department's roads service, five amendments have been made in the roads service budget during the current financial year resulting in additional funding for those Divisions as follows:

Divisional allocation of additional funds (£000)

Functional heading	Ballymena	Belfast	Coleraine	Craigavon	D'Patrick	Omagh
1. Capital works
(a) Carried over form 1993–94	—	—	—	900	—	—
(b) Development schemes	—	—	715	—	—	—
(c) Bridge strengthening	147	231	95	50	122	150
2. Structural maintenance	358	453	359	450	426	654
3. Plant and building	—	133	127	—	—	—

Some of these changes are subject to Parliament's approval of the Spring supplementary estimates for 1994–95.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 6 February 1995 by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary, Official Report, column 69.

HEALTH

Mental Illness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in London were diagnosed as mentally ill and detained (a) on medical wards, (b) in prison or (c) in police cells in the latest year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients on psychiatric wards are legally detained under the Mental Health Act.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients have been detained in hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983 in each year since 1990;

(2) how many patients are currently detained under the Mental Health Act 1993 in private psychiatric hospitals.

Mr. Bowis: A bulletin and booklet on legal status statistics 1987–88 to 1992–93 containing figures on admissions of patients detained under the 1983 Mental Health Act to national health services facilities, private nursing homes and to the special hospitals are shortly to be published. Copies of both publications will be placed in the Library.

Private Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to (a) monitor and investigate deaths of patients in private psychiatric hospitals and (b) monitor standards of care in private psychiatric hospitals.

Mr. Bowis: All hospitals in all sections, which are caring for patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 should notify the Mental Health Act Commission of the death of any such patient. Health authorities and national health service trusts purchasing services from private psychiatric hospitals should ensure that their contract allows for the procedures outlined in circular HSG(94)27 to be initiated following the death of any NHS—funded patient. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Arrangements for monitoring the standards of care given to NHS patients in private psychiatric hospitals are agreed between health authorities and NHS trusts and the private hospital as part of the contracting process. The Mental Health Act Commission visits detained patients in private psychiatric hospitals regularly.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations are being carried out into the deaths of Oswald Morson, Grant Anstead, Alex Clements and Alan Bannister at the Kneesworth House private psychiatric hospital.

Mr. Bowis: These cases have been investigated by the coroner. An inquest into the death of Alexander Clements was held in Sheffield on 19 December. In the case of Alan Bannister, the coroner has decided that an inquest is not required. An inquest into the death of Oswald Morson will be held on 6 March. An inquest into the death of Grant Anstead has been opened and adjourned to a date yet to be fixed.

In each case, the hospital managers have held an internal inquiry and made a full report on the outcome to the health authority responsible for funding the patient's care.

The Mental Health Act Commission is currently carrying out a review of the circumstances of these patients' deaths, as it does in all such deaths.

Death With Dignity Act

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the recent vote in Oregon on the Death With Dignity Act; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Government's firm view is that the deliberate taking of life should remain illegal. The House of Lords Select Committee on Medical Ethics rejected the case for legalising euthanasia or assisting a person to commit suicide, and the Government wholly share the Committee's view. The vote in Oregon does not change our position on the matter.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the BMA regarding the views of hospital doctors on the possibility of cannabis being made available on prescription.

Mr. Bowis: None, as far as I am aware.

Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding shortfalls in the availability of psychiatric beds.

Mr. Bowis: We have received a number of representations concerning alleged shortfalls in psychiatric beds. The requirement for beds must be judged locally and cannot be viewed in isolation from other provision for mentally ill people.

Pharmacy Licences

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make it her policy that the grant of a licence for the establishment of a pharmacy is conditional upon the establishment of such a pharmacy within a specified time scale;

(2) what plans she has to prevent companies from holding licences for the establishment of pharmacies which they do not intend to use.

Mr. Malone: Under the provisions of the National Health Service (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992, as amended, a pharmacy which is given permission to open must do so within six months of permission being granted. A family health services authority, or on appeal, the family health services appeal unit, may extend this period, up to a maximum of 24 months from the date of the original grant, if it considers there is good cause for so doing.

GP Fundholders

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact on surgical provision in individual hospitals of general practitioner fundholders switching moneys from hospital to hospital.

Mr. Malone: The precise pattern of care to meet patients' needs in a particular locality is agreed in contracts between national health service purchasers—health authorities and fundholding general practitioners—and hospitals. Fundholding general practitioners, like health authorities, are expected to provide six months' notice of their intention to make significant changes to their contracts.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given to ensure that a loss of general practitioner fundholders' money for non-emergency surgery in hospitals does not lead to a reduction of emergency services for the same fundholder.

Mr. Malone: None.

District health authorities are responsible for purchasing emergency services for the patients of both fundholding and non-fundholding general practitioners. It is for purchasers and hospitals to agree contracts which best meet patients' needs.

General Practitioners

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received in the last 12 months from doctors about funding out-of-hours work by general practitioners; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Throughout the period, we have had regular discussions with representatives of the medical profession. These discussions are continuing.

Neuroleptic Drugs

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to instigate research into deaths of psychiatric patients associated with neuroleptic drugs.

Mr. Bowis: We are discussing with the Royal College of Psychiatrists the possibility of extending the remit of the confidential inquiry into homicides and suicides by mentally ill people to cover the deaths of psychiatric patients associated with neuroleptic drugs.

Consultants

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she intends to take to monitor the allocation of time by NHS consultants between their NHS responsibilities and their private practices.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 2 February, Official Report columns 837–38.

Rights of the Child

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she intends to take to take to implement the British Government's obligations under article 44 of the United Nations convention following the committee's report on the rights of the child in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The government fulfilled their obligations under article 44 of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child by publishing the United Kingdom national report in February 1994.

Regional Health Authorities

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department offers to regional health authorities on the premium of intensive care beds on the same site as elective surgical beds.

Mr. Sackville: None

Private Health Insurance

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had private health insurance for each year from 1990.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of people with private health insurance is not collected by the Department.

NHS Beds

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide figures of (a) the number of surgical beds (b) the number of intensive care beds and (c) the number and locations of surgical beds without same site access to an intensive care unit for (i) North Thames regional health authority and (ii) South Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: Information on beds is collected by ward classification and not by clinical speciality. Details of the average daily number of intensive care beds available and the average daily number of general and acute beds available for each national health service trust in the North Thames regional health authority and the South Thames regional health authority is published in "Bed availability for England, Financial year 1993–94", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many intensive therapy unit beds there were in London in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave on 2 February, Official Report column 846.

Children in Care

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children looked after by local authorities were placed in the area of another local authority in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: During the year ending 31 March 1993, it is estimated that 4,200 children looked after by local authorities in England started foster placements in the area of other authorities. At 31 March 1993, the total number currently placed in that way was 5,700. Corresponding figures are not available centrally for other types of placement.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children looked after by local authorities were placed in residential care (a) in privately registered children's homes under section 63 of the Children Act 1989, (b) in residential care homes registered under the Residential Homes Act 1984 and (c) in voluntary children's homes registered under the Children Act 1989 in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: Estimates for the year ending 31 March 1993 are shown in the table:

Children looked after by local authorities and placed in selected types of residential care homes; England estimates for the year ending 31 March 1993.

Type of Home	Number[1] starting a placement during the year	Number[1] at 31 March
a. In privately registered children's homes under section 63 of the Children Act 1989	690	670
b. In residential care homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984	60	60
c. In voluntary children's homes registered under the Children Act 1989	550	620

Notes:

[1] Figures are provisional and are estimated to the nearest 10. They exclude children accommodated in a series of short-term placements under one agreement under Section 20 of the Children Act 1989.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when information on the placement of children looked after by local authorities for the year 1993–94 will be available.

Mr. Bowis: In due course.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children looked after by local authorities were absent for more than one week from agreed placements; and, of those children, in how many absences their whereabouts were unknown in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: Out of some 85,000 children looked after by local authorities during the year ended 31 March 1993, it is estimated that 680 were absent for more than one week from their agreed placements.

The number of absences of these children where the whereabouts was unknown was 520.

Private Children's Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private children's homes were listed in each local authority for each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Hospital Social Workers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what circumstances a hospital social worker would be expected to undertake the role of keyworker for an individual.

Mr. Bowis: It may be agreed, as part of the arrangements for a psychiatric patient's discharge under the care programme approach, for a hospital social worker to be his key worker.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to monitor the level of referrals to hospital social workers.

Mr. Bowis: It depends on the referral of whom or what.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers were based in hospitals in 1993.

Mr. Bowis: The number of social work staff directly employed by local authority social services departments in hospitals and other health related settings in September 1993 is given in "Local Authority Social Services Statistics: Staff of Local Authority Social Services Departments at 30 September 1993; England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times her Department has received requests for secure accommodation for young people in each of the last four years.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the secure facilities currently available for young people provided by (a) local authorities, (b) the voluntary sector and (c) the private sector.

Mr. Bowis: A list of secure units in England providing accommodation for young people is contained in the publication "Children Accommodated in Secure Units During the Year Ending 31 March 1994"—series number A/F 94/21—copies of which are available in the Library.

Social Day Care Places

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social day care places were available for (a) the elderly, (b) those with learning disabilities, (c) those with physical disabilities and (d) mentally ill people in (i) local authorities, (ii) the voluntary sector and (iii) the private sector in each year since 1979.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested on day centre places, covering survey weeks in 1992 and 1993, is published in "Personal Social Services: Day and domiciliary services for adults 1993", statistical bulletin 1994–98. Data before 1992 were collected on a different basis and for local authority provision only and were published in "Adult Training Centres for People with Learning Disabilities and Local Authority Day Centres for Adults", up to 1991, A/F91/8; and in "Adult Training Centres for Mentally Handicapped People and Day Centres for Mentally Ill, Mentally Handicapped, Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People" up to 1989, A/F89/8. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 248, if she will make it her policy to collate the number of long-stay mental hospitals which have gained trust status.

Mr. Sackville: No.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) of 19 January, Official Report, column 634, what statistics are collected from local authorities on their use of independent sector residential accommodation and day and domiciliary services.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the detail of the routine statistics on residential accommodation and day and domiciliary services was published in the minutes of evidence following the appearance of the director of statistics on 21 April 1993 before the Health Select Committee—paper 624 of Session 1992–93, annexes C, D and E. Information on data sources is also provided in the "Personal Social Services Statistical Information Directory April 1994", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Hostel Places

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hostel places were available for people with mental health problems in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: Hostels are not defined or identified within our information collection system.

Doctors, St. Thomas's Hospital

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors are currently working over 72 hours a week at St. Thomas's hospital, London.

Mr. Malone: St. Thomas's has reported to the South Thames region task force that at 30 September 1994, there were 41.5 junior doctors contracted for an average of more than 72 hours a week. None of these posts was in the hard-pressed specialties which are now subject to a ceiling of 72 hours a week. Task forces were set up in each region to help implement and monitor the new deal on junior doctors' hours. They report progress to the national health service executive.

In December, I announced that £64 million—£14 million more than last year—would be spent in 1995 on tackling junior doctors hours. The extra £14 million will be enough to set up 230 fully funded posts.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has provided to district health authorities on taking local opinion into account when deciding to close a hospital.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance about consultation on hospital closure and substantial changes in service provision was attached to an executive letter—EL(90)185—issued in September 1990, copies of which are available in the Library.

Hinchingbrook Hospital

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds there have been at Hinchingbrook hospital in each year since 1990; and how many times the hospital has had to close to emergencies through lack of beds in the last year.

Mr. Sackville: The hospital has not had to close to emergencies through lack of beds in the past year.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many projects at the Hinchingbrook hospital are currently being considered or have been considered over the last three years which involve ownership of the hospital or part of the hospital by the private sector.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. This is a matter for the Hinchingbrooke Health Care national health service trust and Anglia and Oxford regional health authority. The right hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the trust, Mr. Ken Spink OBE, and the chairman of the health authority, Sir Stuart Burgess, for details.

Cardiac Centres and Cancer Services

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 876, how many cardiac centres and cancer services there are in London; what is her estimate of the number needed; and if she will explain her reference to a great duplication and concentration of specialty services in London.

Mr. Malone: The Tomlinson report found

"unwarranted duplication of specialist services, sometimes at great expense", referring inter alia to 14 cardiac centres and 13 cancer centres providing regional specialty services in inner London. The reports in June 1993 to the London implementation group of an independent review of specialist services in London confirmed Tomlinson's findings and said, of cardiac services, that "there is a clear case for rationalisation to create fewer, larger and stronger centres" and, of cancer services,

"there are several serious disadvantages in the current pattern of small centres".

Both reports recommended some consolidation in order that high-quality clinical care, teaching and research should be sustained. The advice of these and the other specialty reviews remains available to inform health authorities and NHS hospital trusts.

Leeds General Infirmary

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future practice of pathology services at the Leeds general infirmary.

Mr. Sackville: It is for trusts to determine the best means of delivering pathology services to secure high-quality patient care and the most cost-effective use of resources. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. David Hall, the chairman of the United Leeds Teaching Hospitals national health service trust for further details.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress on the capital investment programme at the Leeds general infirmary with particular reference to whether the programme is running in line with budget targets.

Mr. Sackville: The capital investment programme currently in progress for the United Leeds Teaching Hospitals national health service trust, which includes the Leeds general infirmary, is running within budget and on time.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many items she has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Sackville: From the available information, no items have been received from Ian Greer in the last month.

Propofol

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adverse reactions and how many fatalities reported to the Medicines Control Agency were associated with the use of anaesthetic propofol since 27 February 1986.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 3 February 1995]: Since 27 February 1986, the Medicines Control Agency has received 1,072 yellow card reports for propofol describing 1,987 suspected adverse reactions, 35 of which were fatal. The large number of suspected adverse reactions is a reflection of the extensive use of this drug as an anaesthetic agent. No anaesthesia is without risks; the adverse reaction profile for propofol is not significantly different from other widely used anaesthetic agents. A report of a suspected reaction to a drug does not necessarily mean that the drug itself caused the reaction.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Drugs

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what services the European monitoring centre for drugs and drug addiction will be able to offer to developing countries attempting to replace drug-linked cultivation and defeat drug production and trafficking.

Mr. Baldry: The European monitoring centre for drugs and drug addiction is set up to provide the Community and its member states with objective, reliable and comparable information at the European level on drugs and drug addiction and their consequences. The centre's future work programme has not yet been decided. The centre does not have a remit to offer specific services to less-developed countries. However, subject to member states' obligations on transmission of information under the provisions of United Nations drugs conventions, the centre may promote the inclusion of data it collects into international monitoring and drug control programmes, particularly those established by the UN.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total sum the United Kingdom has made available to the UN drug control programme for each year since 1994 and the percentage of these figures used for drug control programmes in developing countries.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom made £4.8 million available to the UN international drug control programme in the financial year 1993–94, the latest complete year for which figures are available. Sixty-two per cent. of this sum was used for UNDCP programmes in less developed countries. The remainder was used for UNDCP programmes in central and eastern European countries.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the criteria, under the draft European action plan to combat drugs which will be used to assess a country's progress in drug control.

Mr. Baldry: The scope and extent of co-operation between the European Community and third countries is set out in individual association agreements. These agreements cover all subjects of common interest, including illicit drugs, and aim to promote co-operation and facilitate joint initiatives. They also provide for a continuing process of consultation and co-ordination. Drugs clauses in these agreements may, for example, include co-operation on measures to tackle the supply, trafficking and demand for illicit drugs, as well as action against money laundering and misuse of chemical precursors.

The draft European action plan to combat drugs proposes that failure by recipient governments to achieve the drugs objectives in association agreements would allow the Union to consider suspension or termination of specific aspects of relations, including imposition of political, economic or financial sanctions.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with European counterparts with regard to the European action plan to combat drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom has been actively involved in discussions with European partners about Commission draft proposals for a new European Union action plan to combat drugs. The proposals require further refinement and improvement, within the mechanisms set up under the treaty on European Union, to produce a balanced multidisciplinary plan for effective action. The draft plan is to be submitted to the European Council during the current French presidency.

We welcome this work within the European Union to consolidate and further improve anti-drugs co-operation between member states and between the EU and other regions and countries. Drug trafficking and misuse remain a serious and growing threat to the UK, other countries in the European Union and most other countries around the world. Drug traffickers are quick to exploit new markets and routes for their pernicious trade. Firm national action by all Governments is fundamentally important. But effective practical action and international co-operation are also essential if we are to succeed in defeating the global menace of the illicit drug trade.

The UK has played, and will continue to play, a leading role in the international fight against drugs, both bilaterally and multilaterally, in particular through the UN international drug control programme, the Council of Europe and the European Union.

Sudan

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consult with the French Government about relations with the Government of Sudan; and if he will make it his policy that while France has the Presidency of the EU, the EU will maintain a united policy towards Sudan with respect to the sale of arms and respect for human rights.

Mr. David Davis: We exchange views regularly with the French Government and other EU partners in the framework of the common foreign and security policy. We have no evidence to suggest that any EU country intends to change its policy towards Sudan with respect to the sale of arms and respect for human rights.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arms or military training the Government of France are providing to the Government of Sudan.

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier reply today. The EU agreed an arms embargo against Sudan in March 1994. This remains in force.

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings representatives of his Department have had with representatives of the Polisario Front; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Polisario representatives have met FCO officials on a number of occasions.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions at the United Nations Security Council the United Kingdom representatives has raised the issue of the performance of the MINURSO force in the Western Sahara.

Mr. Goodlad: The subject of MINURSO and its performance has been raised and discussed in the UN Security Council on numerous occasions, most recently on 13 January 1995.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the statement made to the United States Congress House Appropriations Committee on 25 January by Frank Ruddy concerning the United Nations operation in Western Sahara; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We understand that no transcript or detailed record was made of Mr. Ruddy's comments to the appropriations sub-committee of the United States House of Representatives on 25 January, and have made no assessment of them.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits have been made to the Western Sahara by representatives of Her Majesty's Government; and which diplomatic post deals with relations with the Polisario.

Mr. Baldry: Three visits were made to the Western Sahara by FCO officials in 1994. We do not have formal relations with Polisario.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Britain currently makes to MINURSO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom does not at present contribute personnel to MINURSO. The mission continues to operate from an unencumbered balance assessed on member states in 1991, the UK contribution to which was US $8.2 million.

Mr.Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions have been taken by the United Kingdom to assist giving effect to the United Nations Security Council resolution 973, concerning the future of the Western Saraha.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom will be paying its share of the cost of the reinforcements for MINURSO which are provided for in Security Council resolution 973. Implementation of the resolution is primarily a matter for the UN secretariat. The British ambassadors in Tunis and Addis Ababa have, with French, American and Spanish colleagues, lobbied the President of Tunisia—the current President of the Organisation of African Unity—and the OAU Secretary-General to provide extra observers for the UN's identification process in Western Sahara.

Rwanda

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the Government of France in respect of providing arms or military training to the military, or the militias, loyal to the out-going Government of Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: The French Ministry of Foreign Affairs has informed us that the French Government do not provide arms or military training to the supporters of the former Government of Rwanda.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which country it is proposed to hold the international tribunal into war crimes in Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: The location of the tribunal has yet to be decided but the UN Secretary General is due to report on this and other matters relating to the tribunal soon. In the meantime, a prosecutor's office is being established in Kigali to allow investigations to continue.

Legislatures

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to place in the Library the names and details of each member of the local legislatures for each colony and dependent territory.

Mr. Baldry: I will place such lists in the Library.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by which method it is possible for (a) the chief minister and (b) individual member of colony and dependent territory legislatures to bring to the attention of Her Majesty's Government or hon. Members of the House any grievance they have about the stewardship or conduct of governors or official members of the local government and legislature in respect of those matters for which the governors or official members are directly responsible.

Mr. Baldry: All British dependent territories citizens have the right to approach us or Members of the House on any matter they wish to raise.

Chief Ministers and members of the legislature in the dependent territories can and frequently do raise issues in connection with the Governors' reserve powers with us and hon. Members.

Colonies and Dependent Territories

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total cost and any other subventions paid from United Kingdom public funds to the (a) defence, (b) administration, (c) economic and social generation and (d) promotion of interest for each colony or dependent territory in each of the last five years.

Mr. Baldry: The total amount paid from United Kingdom public funds to the dependent territories over the past five financial years is estimated to be in the region of £1 billion.

To provide a breakdown per subject and territory, as requested by the hon. Member, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total contribution to imperial functions and services paid to the Exchequer from the local governments by each of the colonies or dependent territories over each of the last five years; and if he will list the contributions made towards the cost of (a) defence, (b) the civil list and (c) consular and other services provided by his Department abroad.

Mr. Baldry: The total contribution to United Kingdom public funds made by the dependent territories over the past five financial years is estimated to be £382 million.

To provide a breakdown per territory and subject heading, as requested by the hon. Member, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by which method voters in the colonies and dependent territories are able to influence (a) foreign policy, (b) defence policy and (c) policing policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: All three policy areas fall within the reserve powers of the governors of dependent territories, as laid down in the respective constitutions.

However, control of the individual budgets for some of these powers rests with the elected local government—for example, the police budget in the Caribbean dependent territories—and this allows the electorate to influence policy decisions. Members of legislative councils may appeal to the governor in respect of decisions relating to his reserve powers and in some territories the governor takes advice from statutory advisory bodies and public committees, for example, the Police Complaints Committee in Hong Kong.

Governors have authority to delegate aspects of their reserve powers to elected Ministers, examples of which include certain policing matters in Bermuda and contacts with regional organisations in Anguilla and Montserrat.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of all the governors of the colonies and dependent territories, with the names and functions of each official member of the local government or legislature who are appointed by his Department or governor.

Mr. Baldry: The following are the names of the governors of the dependent territories and the names of official members of the government or legislature appointed by governors:

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent estimate of the population of each colony or dependent territory excluding Hong Kong, with the total population.

Mr. Baldry: The most recent estimates of the population of each colony or dependent territory, excluding Hong Kong, are as follows:

Territory	Population
Anguilla	9,000
Ascension Island	1,132
Bermuda	70,000
British Antarctic Territory	Nil
British Indian Ocean Territory[1]	3,500
British Virgin Islands	17,000
Cayman Islands	30,000
Falkland Islands	2,120
Gibraltar	29,000
Montserrat	11,000
Pitcairn Islands	54
St. Helena	5,390
Tristan da Cunha	294
Turks and Caicos Islands	14,000
Total (including Hong Kong)	6,212,490

[1] No indigenous population.

Tivar to Bari Ferry

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response has been made by the international community to the assertion by the President of Albania regarding the use made by Serbia of the Tivar to Bari ferry route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: We are not aware of such an assertion. According to the international sanctions monitors there is no ferry service operating between Tivar and Bari. The only service operating under UN Security Council resolution 943 is that which links the ports of Bar and Bari.

Refugee Camps (Zaire)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which countries the United Nations appealed for troops to police Rwanda refugee camps in Zaire; and what was the response.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Nations approached a total of 60 potential troop-contributing nations seeking troops to police the Rwandan refugee camps in Zaire. Of those 60, we understand that only one responded positively. A list of the countries concerned is not available.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he is currently giving to British citizens in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Baldry: We have advised British citizens that dependents, and those with no pressing need to stay, should leave the country as soon as possible. We are monitoring developments closely, and will review our advice in the light of changing circumstances.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present security situation in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Baldry: Over the last few weeks there has been a substantial increase in attacks on people and property over a large area of Sierra Leone with many reported deaths. At least 17 foreign citizens including six Britons are being held captive. We have advised British citizens with no pressing need to remain to consider leaving the country. We continue to follow the situation closely and are working for the release of those held captive. We are also responding to requests for emergency aid for those who have been displaced by the latest fighting.

Civil Servants, Hong Kong

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent discussions with the Chinese Government concerning the pensions of Hong Kong civil servants after 1997.

Mr. Goodlad: The Hong Kong Government intend to establish a HK$7 billion pension reserve fund to reinforce existing statutory pension safeguards and the guarantees in the Sino-British joint declaration on the continued payment of Hong Kong public service pensions. This subject has been discussed by the British and Chinese Governments in the Sino-British joint liaison group.

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he will make to the Government of Burma for the release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.

Mr. Goodlad: The continued detention of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi without charge is indefensible. We have repeatedly called for her early and unconditional release. We will continue to express our concerns directly to the State Law and Order Restoration Council and through the relevant international forums.

Burma

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to review Her Majesty's Government trade policy in respect of Burma.

Mr. Goodlad: Our policy with Burma is kept under regular review. For the present we ensure that British firms are aware of trade opportunities not covered by the EU arms embargo. But we offer no financial support to them.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Burma to end their offensive against the Karen ethnic group.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 3 February, at column 883.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Goodlad: To my knowledge there were none.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 23 to 24 January.

Mr. David Davis: The Council began with an open debate on the French presidency programme. All member states broadly endorsed the presidency's plans.

The Commission then set out its timetable for follow-up work to the Essen European Council. Commission priorities include the White Paper on the integration of the central and eastern European states into the single market, proposals on financing for trans-European networks and a paper on the Mediterranean.

The Council agreed the text of the EC/Vietnam co-operation agreement.

The presidency's proposals for handling the preparations for the Euro-Mediterranean conference were agreed.

The presidency reported on progress in the negotiations on customs union with Turkey and on preparations for the review of Cyprus' application for EU membership. This was remitted for further discussion at the 6 February FAC.

Ministers discussed events in Chechnya and issued a statement.

The presidency outlined plans for the preparation for the Council's report to the 1996 IGC study group.

The Council agreed a statement on Algeria which confirmed the EU's support for all initiatives aimed at encouraging dialogue between those who reject terrorism and violence. The EU also confirmed its willingness to support a policy of democratic development and economic restructuring in Algeria.

Over lunch, the Italian Foreign Minister, Ms Agnelli, said the new Italian Government were ready to resume discussions soon with Slovenia over obstacles to the EU/Slovenia agreement.

Ministers took note of the Danish candidacy to succeed Switzerland as OSCE chairman in office in 1997.

The Council heard a report from Lord Owen and exchanged views on the situation in the former Yugoslavia. They approved a declaration on Bosnia and Croatia. They agreed to consider in March whether to begin negotiations on an EU/Croatia trade co-operation agreement. The Council also adopted a common position and Council regulation continuing sanctions relief for Serbia-Montenegro.

The presidency and the Commission informed Ministers about preparations for the concluding conference to adopt the stability pact in Paris on 20–21 March.

The French Foreign Minister, Mr. Juppe, and Sir Leon Brittan briefed the Council on the agenda for their 26–27 January visit to Washington. Mr. Juppe said that he would raise EU/United States relations, former Yugoslavia, the middle east peace process, Latin America, Russia and Chechnya, and the director-generalship of the WTO.

Sir Leon Brittan reported briefly on relations with Japan and looked forward to a full debate at the April FAC. He introduced the Commission's communication on Korea, proposing a Commission negotiating mandate for an EU/Korea trade and co-operation agreement.

The Council approved a statement expressing interest in the Singaporean proposal for an EU/Asian Summit and requesting the political committee and Coreper to present it with a report in March.

The presidency noted that the Commission would shortly come forward with a draft mandate for article XXIV.6 negotiations with the United States and others to compensate for tariff increases arising from EU enlargement.

There was a preliminary discussion on trade aspects of the mid-term review of the fourth Lomé convention, and on the size of the eighth European development fund.

Mr. Martin—Commissioner for the Mediterranean, Latin America, the middle east and Asia—reported on progress in negotiations with Israel, Morocco and Tunisia.

The Council agreed on an early ministerial Troika visit to Lebanon, Syria, Israel and the Occupied Territories.

A partnership and co-operation agreement between the EU and Kazakhstan was signed on 23 January.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Drugs

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what research his Department has carried out into the effectiveness of crop replacement programmes in zones of drug-linked cultivation in developing countries.

Mr. Baldry: The ODA has carried out research in Peru and North Morocco, and has funded desk studies covering the main coca growing areas of South America and the opium growing areas of Asia. Alternative crops have been identified, but their exploitation depends on social, economic and infrastructural changes. Since 1985, the ODA has committed £7 million to promote crop substitution in northern Pakistan.

Algeria

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid, by way of grant, loans, credit or otherwise, has been provided to Algeria by the European Community or European Union and their institutions in the last four years.

Mr. Baldry: European Community support to Algeria is provided through its programme of grant and European Investment bank loan funded assistance to the mediterranean region and loan financed balance of payments support.

Under the Community's mediterranean programme, through the fourth financial protocol, 1992–96, Algeria is eligible for 350 mecu, or £276 million, comprising 280 mecu or £220 million, EIB loans, 18 mecu, or £14.2 million, risk capital and 52 mecu, or £41 million grant aid. By the end of January 1995, 88 per cent. of the budget funds had been committed and 64 per cent. of the EIB loans. Algeria has also received a loan of 55 mecu, or 43.3 million, from the mediterranean structural adjustment facility as balance of payments support.

Since 1991, Algeria has been granted a total of 600 mecu, or £473 million, loan funded balance of payments support. Of this, 400 mecu, or £315 million, was agreed in 1991 and a further 200 mecu, or £157 million, subject to continuing compliance with its IMF programme, in December 1994. The first tranche of the further 200 meco—100 mecu, or £78.9 million—has already been disbursed.

Trinidad and Tobago

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the value of Britain's multilateral and unilateral aid to Trinidad and Tobago for each of the last five years; and what is the projected aid for the next two years.

Mr. Baldry: Gross bilateral aid expenditure for Trinidad and Tobago comprises primarily disbursements by the Commonwealth Development Corporation. Total gross United Kingdom bilateral aid for the last five years is as follows:

Year	£ thousands
1989–90	556
1990–91	808
1991–92	5,310
1992–93	11,659
1993–94	5,725

The latest figures available for the estimated United Kingdom share of multilateral disbursements of net official development assistance to Trinidad and Tobago are:

Year	£ million
1989	0.29
1990	0.97
1991	0.33

The distribution of aid resources for the public expenditure survey period 1995–96—1997–98 is currently being considered and no final decisions have yet been made.

Refugees (Guinea)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what humanitarian assistance is being given to refugees from Sierra Leone in Guinea.

Mr. Baldry: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the World Food Programme are providing food, blankets and shelter materials for an estimated 24,000 Sierra Leonean refugees who have recently fled to Guinea, in addition to sustaining relief assistance to over 500,000 Liberian and Sierra Leonean refugees in Guinea's forest region over the past five years.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the costs of training consultancy visits to Indonesia by British specialists working with the Indonesian police force in each year since 1990; and in each year how many consultants visited Indonesia.

Mr. Baldry [holding reply 3 February 1995]: The costs of consultancy visits have been as follows.

	Costs of consultancy visits to Indonesia £	Number of UK consultants visiting	Total number of visits by consultants
1990–91	155,000	4	6
1991–92	106,000	4	7
1992–93	155,000	4	9
1993–94	99,000	4	8

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list all aid and trade provision projects in Indonesia since 1980, in each case specifying the date of the agreement, the cost to the aid budget and the name of the British companies involved;

(2) if he will list dates when aid and trade provision government-to-government agreements and exchanges with Indonesia were signed in each year since 1980;

(3) if he will list all aid and trade provision contracts with Indonesia since 1980 stating the year and month in which the agreement was reached, the lead United Kingdom company, the value of aid given, and in each case the date of the formal appraisal documents submitted by the Overseas Development Administration and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 February 1995]: A list of all aid and trade provision projects in Indonesia on which government-to-government agreements have been concluded is set out in the attached table. Details of appraisal documents for aid projects are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost in each year since 1990 of supporting work with the Indonesian national police force.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 February 1995]: Costs from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1994 were as follows:

Year	£
1990–91	247,000
1991–92	178,000
1992–93	283,000
1993–94	126,000

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost of scholarship awards in Britain for Indonesian police officers in each year since 1990.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 February 1995]: Costs from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1994 were as follows:

Year	£
1990–91	33,200
1991–92	26,000
1992–93	66,500
1993–94	3,000

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of the Indonesian national police force have visited the United Kingdom for training purposes in each year since 1990.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The numbers of such members financed by the Government were:

1990–91: 14

1991–92: 13

1992–93: 21

1993–94: 1

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the cost to his Department of annual study tours to the United Kingdom for Indonesian police officers in each year since 1990, in each case stating which British police forces are involved.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The cost of study tours, which last up to one month, was as follows:

	UK police forces	Study tour participants	Cost per year £
1990–91	Surrey	10	31,000
1991–92	Surrey	10	30,000

NATIONAL HERITAGE

BBC

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has for the capital receipts from privatising the transmission services of the BBC to be (a) retained by the corporation and (b) paid over to Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Dorrell: I am currently considering the options for the future of the BBC transmission service.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the BBC's annual transmission costs broken down by revenue, capital and regions.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about the BBC's internal costs and charges is primarily a matter for the BBC. We do not routinely hold such information.

Contemporary Arts

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what provision he is making for the encouragement of active participation by the elderly in contemporary arts;

(2) what plans he has to enable regional arts boards to fund educational work with people beyond the age of 25 years.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department provides funds to the Arts Council, and through it to the regional arts boards, which themselves take decisions on how those funds are used. In doing so they take into account both artistic objectives and other issues of the kind the hon. Gentleman mentions.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Dorrell: The public bodies for which I am responsible are all listed in "Public Bodies 1994", which was published on 6 February and is available in the Library. None of the bodies for which I am responsible has been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no record of any items received from Ian Greer in the last month.

Women's Football

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to ensure that women can play league football.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 3 February 1995]: Responsibility for the development of women's football in this country rests with the Football Association. The FA is currently developing a strategy document outlining its aims and objectives for the future development of the women's game.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the median weekly earnings of full-time working men and women on adult rates in Yorkshire and Humberside and the north in 1994 and 1984.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information showing the median weekly earnings of full-time men and women employees on adult rates in each region of England can be found in part E, table 116 of the "New Earnings Survey", copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the change in earnings for full time employees for every year, a cumulatively, since 1979 of the top and bottom (i) 1 per cent., (ii) 5 per cent. and (iii) 10 per cent. of the earnings distribution as recorded in the "New Earnings Survey", also breaking down the data by gender.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The top and bottom deciles are published in part A, table 1 of the "New Earnings Survey" from 1979 to 1994, copies of which are available in the Library. Information on the top and bottom 1 and 5 per cent. points of the earnings distribution is not available.

Investors in People

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest available figures for the number of employees in each training and enterprise council area who have been recognised as achieving investors in people standard; and what percentage of the employees potentially eligible for receipt of the award this represents in each area.

Mr. Paice: The latest figures, at 4 December 1994, for employers in each training and enterprise council area in England and Wales, who have been recognised as achieving the investors in people standard are shown in the following table. It is not possible to provide information on what percentage of the employees potentially eligible for receipt of the award this represents in each area. Organisations committed to, or recognised as, investors in people employ between them 17 per cent. of the UK work force.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the percentage of cases cleared by individual Child Support Agency centres during the first two quarters of 1994–95 (a) in under 40 days, (b) between 40 days and 100 days and (c) in over 100 days; and when he expects to be able to provide detailed information on the average time taken for each stage of the assessment process.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief Executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 8 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency's clearance times for the maintenance application process.

The information you require is shown in the tables in Annex A. Table 1 includes figures on all cases cleared by the Agency, many of which have been outstanding for a long period. Table 2 provides details of the average time taken for each stage of the assessment process.

I hope that this is helpful.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the 2,269 outstanding Child Support Agency cases referred to in his answer of 18 May 1994, Official Report, column 526, in which paternity was being disputed at the end of March 1994, have now been resolved; if he will consider monitoring disputed paternity cases to establish the outcomes; in how many cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency between April and October 1994 the alleged absent parent disputed paternity; how many of these cases have been resolved without reference to court; how many disputed paternity cases have been referred to court by the agency; how many cases have been heard to date; in how many paternity has been established by the court,; and what is the total number of unresolved paternity disputes to-date.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 8 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about disputed paternity cases dealt with by the Child Support Agency.

Improvements were introduced during April 1994 to the Agency's management information systems which improved the monitoring of paternity cases. As a result it has been ascertained that at the end of April 1994 there were 5,350 paternity cases on hand, just over 3,000 more than had previously been reported at the end of March 1994.

Between the end of April and October 1994 there were a further 5,693 cases of disputed paternity. Of these, 4,316 cases were resolved without reference to Court. There were 178 applications to Court for a hearing, and 51 cases were heard. Paternity was established in each of these cases.

At the end of October 1994, 5,976 cases were on hand, of these, 1,761 were more than 6 months old. In addition to the 51 cases where Court action was completed, there have been applications to Court for a hearing in a further 127 cases.

I hope this reply is helpful.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what considerations underlay the decision to transfer from child support offices to area managers the responsibility for issuing reduced benefit directions under the requirement to co-operate procedure in the special cases sections of the regional centres; whom the Child Support Agency consulted before changing the procedure; what training has been given to area managers when taking over this responsibility; and what systems are in place for monitoring the decisions made by area managers and ensuring consistency of decision-making across the country.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 8 February 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the issuing of reduced benefit directions (RBDs).

This work was transferred to Field offices from the Child Support Agency Centres because a degree of double handling had been identified. As is usual in such circumstances, and internal consultation exercise on the implication and viability of the measure took place. The final decision was taken by the Operations Management Team in the light of the Agency's business needs, resources available and relevant staff experience. The Trade Union Side in the Agency were kept fully informed of the changes and the appropriate technical training was given.

The Agency monitors decisions on RBDs in a similar way to other adjudication decisions made by child support officers (CSOs). CSO decisions are also monitored by the Chief Child Support Officer, an independent authority, who reports annually, in writing, to the Secretary of State.

I hope that this is helpful.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give figures for the number of cases taken on by the Child Support Agency that previously involved absent parents that had paid no maintenance as a proportion of all cases for each six-month period since the establishment of the agency; and if he will give figures for the actual child maintenance paid by absent fathers as a proportion of the child maintenance paid by virtue of the work of the agency for each six-month period since the agency was founded.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 8 February 1995:

I am replying to you Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the number of absent parents (APs) who paid no maintenance for each six-month period of the Child Support Agency's operations; and the actual proportion of child maintenance paid as a result of action by the Agency.

The estimated proportion of cases that involve APs who had paid no child maintenance, as a proportion of all cases, is given in the following table:

	Per cent
April 1993—September 1993	43
October 1993—March 1994	59
April 1994—September 1994	77

The gross child maintenance paid by APs via the Agency's collection service is given in the following table. This does not include cases where maintenance is paid direct by the AP to the PWC. These amount to around 20 per cent of cases dealt with by the Agency. There is no business need for the Agency to collect details of payments made in this way and it is assumed that, unless the PWC advises otherwise, payments are received regularly.

Benefits Agency Office, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will make a decision on the plan to build a national Benefits Agency office block on a site in Wood street, Doncaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 6 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the timing of a decision on the plan to build a Benefits Agency office on a site in Wood St, Doncaster.

I confirm that negotiations with the Developer are now at a late stage and a final decision on progressing the project to build a new office to serve the Doncaster area is expected by the end of February 1995.

I hope you find this reply helpful,

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many days in the last five years cold weather payments have been made covering postcode areas NE12 and NE23 in the north east of England; and which weather stations cover these areas.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the Cold Weather Payments Scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Stephen Byers, dated 7 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Cold Weather Payments made in postcode areas NE12 and NE23 in the last five years.

Postcode NE12 is linked to the Leeming Weather Station and NE23 to the Tynemouth Weather Station.

Cold weather periods are forecast or recorded on a weekly basis and, if appropriate, a payment is made for the same period. I have provided a table showing the number of weeks for which Cold Weather Payments were made for each year in the areas in question.

	[1]1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95

[1] The 1990–91 figures include Cold Weather Payments made on a national basis, irrespective of recorded temperatures, for the two week period 1 February 1991 to 14 February 1991.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of benefit clawback that will be attained by the compensation recovery unit of his Department in the present financial year.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 24 November 1994, Official Report, columns 285–86.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received in the past year about the work of the compensation recovery unit.

Mr. Roger Evans: A number of representations have been received, in particular from Clydeside Action on Asbestos and the Association of Personal Injury Lawyers.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to recover benefit paid to guilty parties in motor accident cases.

Mr. Roger Evans: None.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research he has conducted into the impact of the compensation recovery unit on the level of settlements in actions for compensation for industrial injury and disease and traffic accidents.

Mr. Roger Evans: None. The level of settlement is a matter for the plaintiff and the defendant.

EU Pensions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the percentage contributions provided by employers and employees towards public pensions in the member states of the European Union for the latest year for which information is available.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information available is in the table. In some member states, the contributions for retirement pensions and survivors benefits are included in a general contribution. There are also differences between states in the measure of income/earnings to which the contribution rates apply and in the application of ceilings to contribution amounts. Reliable and detailed information on the precise calculation of contributions is not readily available.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if benefit paid to victims of motor accidents or industrial accident, illness or disease is recovered when their compensation award was not for income maintenance.

Mr. Roger Evans: Yes.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Hague: One item has been received by Ministers in this Department, during the week commencing 6 February 1995.

Unemployment Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of unemployment benefit claimed in each of the past five years in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food when he expects to make a decision on the National Rivers Authority's proposed byelaw changes to the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975.

Mr. Jack: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the new National Rivers Authority byelaws intended to rationalise the rules on the close season for fishing for coarse fish. I hope to be able to announce a decision on these in the near future.

Milk Marque

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will conduct an investigation into the sales overseas by Milk Marque during December at discount prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: No. Milk Marque's pricing policy is a commercial matter for the company itself. It is for the competition authorities to investigate any complaints.

Mink and Arctic Fox

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the past three years his inspectors have supervised, examined or monitored the slaughter of factory farm mink and Arctic fox; and by what method killings were carried out.

Mrs. Browning: In the last three years officers of the State Veterinary Service have monitored the slaughter of Arctic fox on one occasion and of farmed mink on 11 occasions. The method of slaughter used for the Arctic fox was by lethal injection. The methods used for the farmed mink were exposure to CO and CO_2 and by lethal injection.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if mink or Arctic fox are still present at premises at Brooksbank avenue, Scholemoor, Bradford.

Mrs. Browning: When last visited by the State Veterinary Service in November 1994 no mink or Arctic fox were found on these premises.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken to improve the welfare of mink and Arctic fox kept at factory farms since the Farm Animal Welfare Council report of April 1989.

Mrs. Browning: The welfare of animals farmed for their fur is protected by the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968, which makes it an offence to cause them unnecessary pain or distress. Fur farms are subject to annual visits from officers of the State Veterinary Service, who will check that this legislation is being complied with. We are currently consulting interested organisations on additional advice received from the Farm Animal Welfare Council in 1994.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences were issued for mink factory farms for each county of England and Wales in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Browning: No licences have been issued in Wales in the last five years. The numbers of licences issued in England are as follows:

Number of Licences issued in England during the last five years[1]

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Agri-Environment Regulations

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to meet the EEC Agri-Environment Regulations; and what funds have been made available for their implementation.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 7 February 1995]: Over the last year we have launched in England six new environmentally sensitive areas, new payments to promote public access in ESA, a habitat scheme, 22 new nitrate sensitive areas, an organic aid scheme and a countryside access scheme. We plan to launch a moorland scheme shortly. These are additional to the 16 existing ESA, the 10 pilot NSAs and the countryside stewardship scheme, which also form part of the agri-environmental programme for England. Expenditure on all these schemes is planned to rise to £75 million in England by 1996–97. In addition, there are separate agri-environment programmes in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Pesticides

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of the connection between pesticide exposure and neurological and other diseases.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 2 February 1995]: The use of pesticides is closely regulated and monitored. There are no proven links between the use of pesticides, in accordance with their statutory conditions of approval, and neurological and other diseases. However, were any evidence of such links to emerge, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides would be consulted and Ministers would take any necessary action as a matter of urgency.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 69.

EDUCATION

School Meals

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received about the call to restore nutritional standards for school meals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: In the last two years, the Department has received 12 written representations on the matter. The Government will be drawing up voluntary nutritional guidance for school meals providers as part of the programme to achieve the targets set in "The Health of the Nation" strategy. I hope that this guidance will be published in the summer.

School Suspensions and Exclusions

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children were (a) suspended temporarily and (b) excluded permanently from secondary schools in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: Information on permanent exclusions from maintained schools in England was collected by the Department over a two-year period, starting with the summer term 1990, under the national exclusions reporting system. In England, 2,910 permanent exclusions were reported in year one and 3,833 in year two. Figures for temporary exclusions were not collected.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many items she has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received no items from Ian Greer Associates in the last month. Her three ministerial colleagues have received invitations to a social event, which have been declined.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gas (Standing Charges)

1. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trace if he will discuss with the Gas Consumer Council the benefits of abolishing standing charges to customers on low incomes.

Mr. Ian Taylor: British Gas's standing charges are a matter for the company and Ofgas. The tariff formula, agreed by Ofgas, limits the prices which British Gas can charge to tariff customers.

Gas Care Services

5. Mrs. Liddell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet the Gas Consumer Council to discuss the future of services to gas customers who have disabilities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: British Gas has made it clear that it will not cut the services it offers to the elderly or disabled or introduce charges for such services. The forthcoming Gas Bill will provide that all suppliers make special services available to these groups of customers.

21. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet the chairman of British Gas to discuss the future of services to gas customers who have disabilities.

32. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet the Gas Regulator to discuss the future of services to gas customers who have disabilities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Members to the oral answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown).

Council of Ministers

8. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he is next due to meet his EU counterparts at the Council of Ministers; and what will be on the agenda.

Mr. Heseltine: My right hon. and noble Friend Earl Ferrers, Minister for Small Firms and Consumer Affairs, will attend the Consumer Council on 30 March. The agenda has not yet been fixed.

Engineering

11. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to promote United Kingdom engineering.

Mr. Needham: Under the title "Action for Engineering" my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has set up an industry—led steering group and five task forces with the remit to increase substantially the influence, involvement and achievements of professional engineers and technicians for the benefit of British industry. This Department also continues to promote innovation, industrially relevant research and development and world-class engineering education and training.

Inward Investment

15. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many inward investment projects were announced during 1994.

Mr. Heseltine: According to figures notified to my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau for the financial year 1993–94, there were 427 decisions by foreign companies to invest in the United Kingdom.

Figures for the financial year 1994–95 will be available in June.

Deregulation

24. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to propose further measures for deregulation.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Deregulation measures are announced as and when the opportunity arises. For example, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister recently announced that we intend to liberalise the legislation on Sunday licensing. We have now brought into force the great majority of deregulation measures in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994. A range of further measures are currently the subject of consultation and consideration and will be announced over the next few months.

30. Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what annual target he has set for his Department with regard to the deregulation of existing rules and regulations; and if he will make a statement as to what progress he has made to reach his target in the current year.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Deregulation targets for the year to 31 March 1995 were published as part of MINIS 94 last July. Progress against these targets will be published in May following completion of MINIS 95.

Business Link

25. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to publicise Business Link.

Mr. Heseltine: A major national campaign to develop awareness of business link and to support Business Links local activity is being developed. This will begin when the majority of Business Links are in place.

The campaign will have three phases: first, an editorial and advertising campaign beginning this April; secondly, a national launch of the Business Link network this autumn, by which time almost 200 Business Links should be open; and, thirdly, highly targeted promotion activity from the end of this year, aimed at small firms.

Manufacturing Exports

26. Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the latest information he has on the level of manufacturing exports; and what was the corresponding figure for the previous year.

Mr. Needham: Manufacturing exports over the three months to October 1994 amounted to £29 billion, 12 per cent. higher than in the same period of 1993.

British Coal Property

27. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the head of British Coal Property to discuss its future activity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Ministerial colleagues and I have had no meetings with the head of British Coal Property. However we meet senior British Coal staff regularly to discuss a wide range of issues.

28. Mrs. Adams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet the gas regulator to discuss the future of services to gas customers who are blind.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown).

Car Industry

29. Sir David Madel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new measures his Department is considering to help the car industry in 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Last May's White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win" identified a wide range of factors critical to the United Kingdom's international competitiveness. We are reviewing with the car industry the importance of each of these to its own performance and aim to agree, during 1995, a joint programme for accelerating the recovery that is already under way in this key sector.

Postal Services, Rochdale

31. Ms Lynne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent meetings he has held with Post Office representatives relating to postal services in Rochdale.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. The provision of postal services in a specific locality is the operational responsibility of Post Office management.

Oil Industry

33. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on prospects for the United Kingdom oil fabrication sector.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Most of the oil and gas discoveries now being developed need small platforms, floating production systems or sub-sea facilities. Demand for large-scale fabrication work has fallen and we do not expect it to increase significantly in the near future.

Gas Supply

34. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he is making with his plans to introduce competition in the supply of gas.

Mr. Heseltine: I expect shortly to bring forward a Bill to introduce further competition in the supply of gas. On 24 January I issued a consultation document with the Director General of Gas Supply, inviting views on the choice of areas for the initial phase of competition which would be introduced from 1996–98, subject to parliamentary approval of the Bill. A copy of this consultation document has been sent to all right hon. and hon. Members.

British Rail Engineering

35. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of assistance his Department has given British Rail Engineering Ltd. since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The company, now ABB Vehicles Ltd, has received Government assistance towards its export and research and development efforts.

Small Firms

36. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet representatives of the small firms sector to discuss the abolition of the audit requirements.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have no such plans at present. My Department is in touch with a wide range of interested parties to see how the changes we introduced last August are beginning to operate. We will review the position with those concerned once the efforts of those changes are clear and will, of course, consult widely on any further proposals.

Electricity Interconnector

37. Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the current agreement for green ticket payments to Electricté de France for electricity supply via the cross-channel interconnector concludes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government are considering the future of the fossil fuel levy and the associated arrangements, including non-leviable status, in respect of nuclear generation as part of the nuclear review, and I cannot prejudge the outcome.

British Companies

38. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the relative size of the largest British companies, by market capitalisation, compared with the largest companies in other EU countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: According to the Financial Times FT500 which appeared in the FT of 20 January, 40 of the top 100 EU companies ranked by market capitalisation were United Kingdom-registered, including three that are Anglo-Dutch.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many civil servants since 4 May 1979 have left the Export Credits Guarantee Department and within two years joined companies engaged in contracts with the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Needham: Such information is not held by ECGD and could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list in order of pound sterling value the 10 principal product imports to the United Kingdom from Indonesia;

(2) if he will list in order of pound sterling volumes the 10 principal United Kingdom product exports to Indonesia.

Mr. Needham: The available information is published in Central Statistical Office business monitor MM20 "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom with countries outside the European Community", available in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each year since 1979 the extent of Export Credits Guarantee Department cover, and the extent of claims paid relating to trade with Indonesia.

Mr. Needham: The figures for business and claims paid in respect of export credits for capital goods and projects to Indonesia are set out in the table:

Year	Business £ million	Claims paid £ million
1980–81	9	0.5
1981–82	150	0.8
1982–83	566	1.5
1983–84	301	2.1
1984–85	249	2.3
1985–86	140	17.1
1986–87	73	7.1
1987–88	48	6.3
1988–89	67	4.8
1989–90	52	4.3
1990–91	150	3.4
1991–92	124	1.6
1993–94	100	0

Reliable comparable data are not available prior to 1980–81.

Sulphur Quotas

Mr. Beggs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek a reallocation over the next two years of unused sulphur quotas from England and Wales to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The allocation of sulphur quotas between England and Wales and Northern Ireland under the United Kingdom's national plan for the implementation of the large combustion plants directive is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. In common with other elements of the plan, this is kept under regular review.

Chemical Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how long the group of chemicals and related products now classified as ML7 has required export licences.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Heading ML7 covering toxicological agents, noxious chemicals, tear gas and related equipment, specially designed components and software was introduced into the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985. Subsequent orders have extended and clarified the items subject to export control under this heading. Prior to 1985 a number of specified noxious chemicals were subject to control.

Export Credits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 25 January, Official Report, columns 127-8, regarding export credits if he will provide similar information for (a) Brazil, (b) Sudan, (c) Libya, (d) Tunisia, (e) the Yemen, (f) Malta and (g) Chile.

Mr. Needham: The figures requested are shown in the tables:

Fire Safety

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement matters arising from the deregulation proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Since the review was announced on 17 January 1994, Official Report, column 381, colleagues and I have received some 3,500 representations from various organisations and individuals about the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement. Following the publication of the review team's report for full consultation, over 460 organisations and individuals have provided detailed written comments on the recommendations in the report.

All these comments are now being fully analysed. No decisions will be taken on making changes to the current fire safety legislation and enforcement regime until we have carefully considered all the views that have been expressed.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the latest estimate of the loss of trade with Libya as a result of United Nations sanctions.

Mr. Needham: The British Government neither promote nor discourage trade with Libya. We are not able to estimate the loss of trade as a result of United Nations sanctions. However, provisional figures for 1994 showed that our visible exports decreased 28.1 per cent. to £197 million compared with £274.1 million in 1993.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Heseltine: No items were received from Ian Greer last month.

ICL Technical Plastics

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance was given to ICL Technical Plastics, in Glasgow in sponsoring sales trips abroad; and what sum was involved.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 January 1995]: It is not normally the practice to disclose such details, but in view of the public interest in recent allegations about this company I am prepared to disclose that support was given in the context of an overseas trade mission to Singapore in 1978. The case papers have since been routinely destroyed, but the amount of travel grant available for Singapore at that time was £505 to help defray air travel costs.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions were held between his Department and ICL Technical Plastics in order to promote its products in the foreign market place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 January 1995]: There is no record of such discussions with, or support for, ICL Technical Plastics Ltd. for the sale of electro-shock equipment. Establishing whether any other discussions have taken place could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost and would in any case be a matter of commercial confidentiality. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him of today in respect of financial assistance to the company towards participation in an overseas trade mission to Singapore in 1978.

Electro-shock Weapons

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the manufacture and supply of (a) electro-shock weapons and (b) instruments of torture by United Kingdom companies to countries with an established record of using torture.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 January 1995]: The manufacture of electro-shock weapons is prohibited under the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1992 and requires the specific authority of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. My Department gives careful consideration to applications for the export of weapons. In considering such proposals special care is taken over the political and military implications of allowing consignments to go overseas. Particular attention is paid to countries with poor human rights records, where equipment might be used for internal repression. The Government deeply deprecate the export of any equipment knowingly to be used as an instrument of torture. The difficultly in this area lies in the fact that many perfectly innocuous goods may be misused for such purposes overseas and it is not practical to control the export of such items. However, if any such cases are brought to the Government's attention we shall make the strongest possible representations to those involved. If they are ignored, we will examine what steps could be taken to prevent export from taking place. When realistic, enforceable controls are possible we can act urgently to impose them.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance has been given by his Department to United Kingdom companies actively involved in the manufacture, marketing and supply of electro-shock weapons, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 January 1995]: I am not aware of any such companies.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received on the manufacture, marketing and supply of (a) electro-shock weapons and (b) instruments of torture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 January 1995]: A number of people, including right hon. and hon. Members, have written to me about the allegations in the Channel 4 television programme "Dispatches" on 11 January 1995. The companies involved have made public denials of the allegations.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the manufacture and supply of (a) electro-shock weapons and (b) instruments of torture by United Kingdom-based companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 January 1995]: None.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the policy of his Department in providing financial assistance to firms involved in the manufacture, marketing or supply of electro-shock weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 January 1995]: I know of no such companies.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assurances are sought from United Kingdom companies active in the manufacture, marketing and supply of (a) electro-shock weapons and (b) instruments of torture that such assistance as is given to them will not be used to facilitate trade in and support the marketing of electro-shock weapons.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 30 January 1995]: I know of no such companies.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 8 December 1994, Official Report, column 301, what percentage of export credits to Indonesia in each year since 1979 have been related to defence exports.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The percentages requested are set out in the following table:

Year	Percentage
1980–81	0
1981–82	36
1982–83	4
1984–85	44
1985–86	59
1986–87	70
1987–88	13
1988–89	4
1989–90	0
1990–91	2
1991–92	2
1992–93	98
1993–94	6

Reliable comparable data are not available prior to 1980–81.

Contractors

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will identify those contracts dated since January 1990 valued at more than £1 million that have been supported by export credit guarantees, together with the country concerned and the leading United Kingdom contractor.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 February 1995]: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose details of individual contracts unless the relevant parties have agreed to this.

DEFENCE

Royal Military Police

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances the Royal Military police central criminal records index office computers store information on the sexual orientation of civilians.

Mr. Soames: The Royal Military police central and criminal records intelligence office stores on its computer database information about sexual orientation in individual cases where this has given grounds for an investigation into a suspected offence. The database includes information about investigations of former service personnel suspected of committing an offence while serving in the armed forces and of UK-based civilians and dependants suspected of committing an offence who, while serving overseas, were subject to the Army Act 1955.

Porton Down

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of running the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down in each of the last five years; what is the planned expenditure for each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment Porton Down, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 6 February 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what has been the total cost of running the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down in each of the last five years; what is the planned expenditure for each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. In providing the gross cash budgets for CBDE Porton Down over the past five years, it is important to recognise that there have been significant changes in accounting and financial practices.

a. From 1990/91 onwards, the figures include works and property management costs as MOD untied from PSA on 1 April 1990.

b. From 1 April 1991, CBDE became a Defence Agency under the Next Steps programme and our annual accounts are in accruals format to a Treasury Accounts Direction.

c. From 1 April 1991 some expenditure previously controlled centrally was desegregated to CBDE causing the gross cash budget to increase.

Consequently the figures provided for 1989/90 and 1990/91 are not directly comparable with those in the published Annual Reports because of the changes in the accounting and financial procedures.

3. The gross cash budgets for CBDE in each of the last five years at 1994/95 price levels was as follows:

Year	Gross cash budgets £ million
1989–90	23.4
1990–91	26.7
1991–92	33.4
1992–93	35.0
1993–94	34.2

The apparent increase in cash budget is primarily due to the changes in accounting and financial procedures resulting in the inclusion of the works and property management costs which vary from year to year depending on the works programme. In addition since becoming an Agency CBDE has successfully won contracts from outside the MOD thereby increasing the gross cash budget.

4. The intention is that from 1 April 1995 CBDE Porton Down will become part of the proposed new Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and operate on a trading fund. From this date, CBDE will no longer receive direct vote funding. Its level of expenditure will therefore be determined by the income which it attracts from a number of MOD budget holders. It is consequently not possible to make a definitive statement about the expenditure for the next three years, although it is not expected on current plans to change significantly.

Land Mines

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the research conducted by his Department on the current need for anti-personnel mines by United Kingdom forces.

Mr. Freeman: The need for, and role of, anti-personnel land mines is not assessed separately from our overall military strategy, and can be considered only in that broader context. It is therefore not possible to release information on the military utility of a particular weapon system without revealing details of wider operational capability and tactics. Such information is classified.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will commission a report on the military utility of anti-personnel mines for United Kingdom armed forces within the context of the United Kingdom's military strategy.

Mr. Freeman: Anti-personnel land mines continue to have an important defensive role. Our requirement for such equipment will continue to be kept under review.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United Kingdom's policy on anti-personnel mines is based on contemporary analysis of the need of these weapons by United Kingdom forces.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom's policy on anti-personnel land mines is based on a number of factors, including not only an analysis of military requirements but a desire to avoid the indiscriminate and irresponsible use of these weapons.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conclusions for United Kingdom policy he has drawn from the report published by the United States Department of Defence in June 1994 entitled "The Military Utility of Landmines: Implications for Arms Control"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have not made an assessment of this report, which I understand was prepared by the Institute for Defence Studies.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give an estimate of the number of land mines on and around the former confrontation lines between the Bosnian Croats and Muslims; what progress has been made in clearing those mines; and if British personnel are involved in this task.

Mr. Soames: Estimates have placed the figure for mines on and around the former confrontation lines as high as 800,000. The mine clearance programme continues and, although this has been successful in clearing many roads and areas in central Bosnia, a significant proportion of mines remain to be dealt with. BRITFOR explosive ordnance disposal personnel continue to make an important contribution to the programme, liaising with Bosnian Muslim and Croatian troops and monitoring clearance operations to ensure that all the mines are lifted and destroyed.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the number of anti-personnel mines still active in the Falkland Islands; and what plans exist for their removal.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 7 February 1995:]: A total of some 30,000 Argentine mines are believed to remain in the Falkland Islands. We do not have precise details of the numbers of individual types of mine, nor their current condition. Work is progressing on the offer by Argentina to pay a third party to clear the minefields in the Falklands.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) people and (b) animals have been injured by anti-personnel land mines in the Falkland Islands and other territories formerly occupied by Argentinian forces.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 7 February 1995]: Four British service men were seriously wounded in the course of operations to clear minefields in the Falklands Islands immediately after the conflict. No personnel have been injured by mines in other United Kingdom territory in the South Atlantic formerly occupied by Argentine forces. No records are kept of animals injured by mines in the Falkland Islands.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of armed forces personnel sent to Indonesia to support Rapier missile sales.

Mr. Freeman: Details of any training assistance to other countries, including costs, are not normally disclosed as they are regarded as confidential between Governments.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the involvement of armed forces personnel in training members of the Indonesian armed forces or security forces in counter-insurgency techniques since 4 May 1979.

Mr. Soames: Details of any training assistance to other countries are not normally disclosed as they are regarded as confidential between Governments.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department in each year since 1990 of supporting work with the Indonesian national police force.

Mr. Soames: My Department has not been involved in work of this nature.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Ministers or officials in his Department have at any time since 1979 been informed of British-supplied defence equipment being used in East Timor or in its territorial waters or airspace.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has no evidence that British-supplied defence equipment has been used in East Timor.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the rank of defence attachés to the British mission in Indonesia in each year since 1979.

Mr. Soames: Since 1979, the defence attaché to the British embassy in Indonesia has been at the rank of colonel. In addition, an assistant defence attaché with the rank of squadron leader was attached to the embassy from 1981 to 1983. The assistant defence attaché from October 1983 until February 1987 was at the rank of lieutenant colonel. He was replaced by a naval/air attaché at the rank of wing commander from July 1988 until February 1991 and at the rank of commander RN from February 1991 until February 1993, when the post lapsed.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the costs of training consultancy visits to Indonesia by British specialists working with the Indonesian police force in each year since 1990; and in each year how many consultants visited Indonesia.

Mr. Soames: My Department has not engaged in consultancy visits of this kind.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the involvement of United Kingdom armed forces personnel in counter-insurgency activities in Indonesia or East Timor since 4 May 1979.

Mr. Soames: None.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom armed forces personnel have served in Indonesia in each year since 1990.

Mr. Soames: A defence attaché with the rank of colonel is attached to the British embassy in Jakarta with a warrant officer in support. Until 1993, a joint naval air attaché was also attached to the embassy. Details of training assistance given by the UK, including the numbers involved, are not normally disclosed as they are regarded as confidential between the Governments.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of military aid to Indonesia for each year since 1979.

Mr. Soames: It is not our practice to disclose information of this nature.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates memoranda of understanding have been signed with the Government of Indonesia since 1 January 1980.

Mr. Freeman: Memoranda of understanding concerning defence contracts with the Government of Indonesia were signed in September 1983, March 1984, April 1986 and November 1991.

Bosnia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what accommodation and facilities are available for British UNPROFOR personnel in Gorazde.

Mr. Soames: British UNPROFOR troops in Gorazde are accommodated in 123 portacabins which are equipped with bunk beds and camp beds and fitted with electric heaters. Troops have access to purpose built shower, toilet and washbasin facilities and the camp has its own tented kitchen facilities which are currently in the process of being replaced by a prefabricated kitchen and dining area. There are also two welfare telephones to enable troops to make calls home.

USA Global Positioning System

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom has direct access to the USA global positioning system; and what agreements or treaties govern such access.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom armed forces make extensive use of the United States global positioning system. They do so under conditions set out in a memorandum of understanding first negotiated with the US Department of Defence in 1978. MOU IV signed in October 1993 provides for an extension of these arrangements into the next century.

School and Related Fees

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which armed service officers are entitled to school and related fees for their children to be met from the armed forces vote; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Boarding school allowance is designed to assist with the payment of school fees, and is available to all ranks of the armed forces who are serving either in the United Kingdom or overseas, providing that they meet the eligibility criteria. Service career and manpower structures and terms and conditions of service, including boarding school allowance, are however the subject of an independent review which the then Minister for the Armed Forces my right hon. Friend the Minister for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley), announced on 30 March 1994, Official Report, columns 752-53.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what purpose school and related fees are paid from the armed forces vote in respect of the education of children of officers in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Boarding school allowance is provided to assist eligible service parents of all ranks in providing a stable education for their children in the face of the domestic turbulence frequently encountered in service life.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost over the past 10 years of school and related fees for the children of officers in the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The total cost of school and related fees is not held by my Department. Boarding school allowance is paid up to a maximum annual limit, and service parents are expected to make a contribution of 10 per cent. to the fees. Additionally, for schools whose fees are higher than this maximum rate of BSA, parents are expected to make up any shortfall themselves. The total amounts of BSA paid for all ranks for the years in question is as follows:

	£ million
1985–86	85.00
1986–87	93.60
1987–88	106.58
1988–89	107.10
1989–90	104.51
1990–91	105.61
1991–92	115.35
1992–93	116.72
1993–94	113.61

The total estimated expenditure for financial year 1994–1995 is £104 million.

Armed Forces (Work and Activities)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records are kept of the work and activities undertaken by members of the armed forces during the hours in which they are on duty.

Mr. Soames: The chain of command in each of the three services exists to ensure that its personnel are working effectively. Against this background, records of work carried out by service personnel are kept only in certain circumstances. These include reports of aircraft or vehicle maintenance completed; stores records of receipts and issues; and log books of various types, including aircrew log books of flying hours. In addition to this, certain records are maintained of individuals' on-the-job training.

Horses (Insurance)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average cost per year of insuring a horse owned by his Department which is involved in (a) hunting, (b) ceremonial duties and (c) neither (a) nor (b).

Mr. Soames: Horses owned by my Department are not insured for hunting, ceremonial duty or any other official use.

Hunting

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel from Britannia Naval college in Devon took part in hunts with the Britannia Beagles during duty hours in each of the last three years.

Mr. Soames: No service personnel from the Britannia Royal Naval college have taken part in hunts during duty hours in the last three years.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many horses are owned by his Department; and how many have participated in hunts in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: My Department has an establishment of 474 horses with an average strength of around 470. Records do not separately identify hunting from other forms of recognised training, but it is estimated that some 70 horses have participated in hunts in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received relating to damage caused to property under the control of his Department by the Bicester with Whaddon Chase hunt.

Mr. Soames: My Department has no record of any representations relating to damage caused by the Bicester with Whaddon Chase hunt.

Royal Navy Ships

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those Royal Navy ships which are in a state of (a) refit, (b) repair and (c) rest, giving the date when he expects each will return to full service.

Mr. Freeman: All Royal Navy vessels undergo essential repairs and maintenance as required while remaining part of the operational fleet. The following Royal Navy surface ships are, however, undergoing refit and are consequently non-operational: HM Ships Birmingham, York, Edinburgh, London, Bulldog and Orkney. We expect all of these vessels to be returned to operational service within the next year.

We do not hold Royal Navy vessels in a state of rest. Some vessels are held in extended readiness, thus enabling significant running cost savings to be achieved whilst maintaining assets against the eventuality of adverse changes in the international situation. At present, HMS Ark Royal and HMS Intrepid are in extended readiness. For operational reasons, it is not our policy to discuss when these vessels will be returned to operational service.

Type 23 Frigates

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order for the next batch of type 23 frigates.

Mr. Freeman: Invitations to tender for a further batch of up to three type 23 frigates were issued in November 1994. Subject to a successful outcome of the current competition, we hope to be in a position to place an order around the end of the year.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications from members of his Department to join defence or defence-related companies have been approved (a) subject to a waiting period and (b) with a ban on the involvement of the applicant in a specific project or area of work on behalf of the employer in the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: Over the last 10 years, 4,422 business appointment applications have been approved. Of these, 328 were subject to a waiting period and 242 were subject to a ban on the involvement of the applicant in a specific project or area of work. Many staff submitted multiple applications of a speculative nature, and it is not known how many appointments were taken up.

Departmental Houses (Sales)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and location of his Department's houses sold off on the last two years; if he will give (a) the name of the company which bought the houses, (b) the amount received by his Department for the sale of each house; and (c) what monitoring is carried on of the price at which the houses were subsequently sold on by estate agents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: In the last two years from 1 January 1993 to 31 December 1994 my Department sold the following dwellings:

Bulk sales are carried out by tender or at the district valuer's valuation to ensure that we receive a full market price. Individual purchasers include service personnel who have bought through the services' discount scheme, tenants of MOD civilian houses who have bought at a discount and individuals who have bought on the open market through the estate agents. The amount received from sales is commercial in confidence and there are no measures in hand to monitor the price at which houses are subsequently sold on by estate agents.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel houses have been sold by his Department in each of the last five years; and how much money was received for the sales in each of these years.

Mr. Soames: The number of service married quarters sold and the capital receipts from these sales in each of the past five financial years was as follows:

Financial year	Total sold	Receipts £ million
1989–90	1,380	46
1990–91	2,121	44
1991–92	1,306	51
1992–93	857	33
1993–94	1,254	24

Receipts do not always relate directly to the number of houses sold in a particular year because of stage payments and accounting procedures.

Type 42 Destroyers

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's current policy towards the Horizon class replacement for type 42 destroyers.

Mr. Freeman: We remain committed to Project Horizon. A memorandum of understanding for the joint development of this project was signed by the three partner nations, Britain, France and Italy, in July of last year. We continue to plan to replace the Royal Navy's type 42 destroyers with the common new generation frigate early in the next century.

Competing for Quality Programme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision for continuity of supply is made in the contracts awarded to private contractors as part of his Department's competing for quality programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Continuity of supply, or service, is ensured by the arrangements under which our contracts are placed. These arrangements include the use of appropriate conditions of contract, and proper planning of tendering programmes.

Ministerial Duties

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what days he attended the House during the parliamentary week beginning 30 January.

Mr. Soames: Mr right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence attended the House on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of the parliamentary week beginning 30 January.

Ian Greer

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Freeman: My ministerial colleagues and I keep no records of the unsolicited mail or other items that we receive.

I have received one social invitation from Ian Greer Associates which I have declined.

Procurement Projects

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the 10 most expensive procurement projects currently being undertaken by his Department; what was the original estimated cost of each of these projects and their current estimated cost at today's prices; and what was the original planned in-service dates of each project together and the latest estimate of the in-service date.

Mr. Freeman: The 10 most expensive procurement projects currently being undertaken by the Ministry of Defence are set out below. Where data are classified or of a commercially sensitive nature this had been omitted.

Procurement project	Original estimated cost £	Current estimated cost £	Original planned in-service date	Current in-service date
Trident	15.1 billion	11.6 billion	December 1994	[2]December 1994
EF 2000[1]	12.7 billion	14.9 billion	December 1998	December 2000
Common New Generation Frigate (project horizon)	4.5 –5 billion	4.5 –5 billion	December 2002	[3]n/a
EH101 Merlin[1]	3.8 billion	3.9 billion	December 1993	December 1998
Bowman[1]	2.1 billion	1.9 billion	December 1995	January 2000
Challenger 2[4]	1.1 billion	2.02 billion	December 1995	December 1995
Spearfish	885 million	[5]1.1 billion	December 1987	March 1994
Asraam	871 million	795 million	December 1994	December 1998
Tornado MLU	[6]829 million	837 million	June 1993	September 1998
High Velocity Missile (HVM)[7]	397 million	411 million	December 1990	Mid 1995

Ministry of Defence Police Federation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions he visited the Ministry of Defence Police Federation's exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall during the week beginning 30 January; which police or federation officers he met; what topics he discussed with these officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend did not make an official visit to the exhibition, but had the opportunity to see it when he was in the Upper Waiting Hall on Wednesday 1 February 1995. At the time, there were no MOD police or Defence Police Federation representatives present.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what independent medical audit is carried out on the assessments made of Gulf war veterans claiming to be suffering from Gulf war syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department is obviously concerned that any serving or former members of the armed forces should be worried about their health following service in the Gulf. It was for this reason that numerous appeals have been made for individuals to come forward for a thorough medical examination under our Gulf medical assessment programme. Under this programme, which has been the main focus of our investigations into the alleged Gulf War syndrome, United Kingdom Gulf veterans receive a full medical evaluation by military medical specialists. Approximately one third of the 233 veterans who have so far come forward under this programme have now been assessed and diagnosed, enabling some provisional conclusions to be drawn.

Although there remains no scientific or medical evidence of a syndrome, the substantial statistical assurance which these investigations provide now make it appropriate for these preliminary findings to be subject to independent verification and to be publicised. consequently, the Royal College of Physicians has been approached to carry out an independent clinical audit of our assessment programme and its results to date, and it has kindly agreed to do so. It has been our intention to make public the detailed preliminary findings of the assessment programme at an appropriate stage when sufficient Gulf veterans have been examined under the MOD medical assessment programme, and I have agreed with the Surgeon General that he should do this in a letter to the British Medical Journal after 100 such assessments have been made.

I again urge all current and former armed forces personnel with concerns about their health as a result of service in the Gulf conflict to come forward, through their normal doctors, for assessment under the programme. For those still serving I repeat my assurance that their careers will not be jeopardised as a result.

Defence Industrial Base

Sir John Cope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will set out the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the United Kingdom's strategic defence industrial base and its relationship to defence procurement decisions.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 December 1994]: Although we see our relationship with industry as principally one of customer to supplier, we fully recognise that it is an advantage to us and to the economy more generally to have a healthy, technologically capable and broad-based defence industry.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 6 February, by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury, Official Report, column 69.

SCOTLAND

Executive Search Agencies

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 1055, which posts were filled as a result of the employment of executive search agencies, which executive search companies were involved in this exercise; and what were the values of the individual contracts involved.

Mr. Lang: Between 2 December 1993 and 30 November 1994, my Department made use of executive search agencies Goddard Kay Rogers and Associates Ltd. and Korn Ferry International. These were for appointments to Director of Human Resources and Director of Finance respectively, both within the NHS-Management Executive in Scotland. The total cost was £69,912 including VAT, as stated on 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1055.

In addition, although none of my agencies has used executive search agencies for search purposes, the Scottish Prison Service has used recruitment services provided by the following companies:

Companies
Melville Craig	Marketing and sales manager
NB Selection	Five human resource managers; one senior procurement officer
Rileys	Ongoing campaign to recruit band C
Search	Prison officers. Partial cost only paid so far. Remaining costs to be paid at the successful conclusion of the campaign.
Search	Procurement buyer

The cost of this work, which involves advertising and dealing with resulting applications was £64,358.84.

The value of individual contracts is a matter for the companies themselves and is regarded as commercial in confidence.

Agricultural Census

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the rate of response in each of the past five years in respect of the June agricultural census forms; and when was the last prosecution for failure to return the agricultural census forms.

Sir Hector Monro: The response rate for the main June census was as follows:

1990 per cent.	1991 per cent.	1992 per cent.	1993 per cent.	1994 per cent.
93	93	90	92	92

The last year in which non-respondents were prosecuted for failure to return a June agricultural census form was 1992.

Gourock Ropeworks

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last discussed the present circumstances surrounding the Gourock ropeworks in Port Glasgow with Historic Scotland and the Inverclyde district council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Historic Scotland is an executive agency within the Scottish Office and reports to my right hon. Friend on built heritage matters.

My right hon. Friend has recently received a letter from Inverclyde district council conveying the council's view that the Gourock ropeworks should not be converted for residential accommodation but should be demolished. He has noted that view.

The building is a category A listed building. Its demolition would require the granting of listed building consent, for which no application has yet been received.

Historic Buildings

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those historic buildings, listed for their architectural merit in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole which have subsequently been de-listed and demolished in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The subjects of the question relate to matters undertaken by Historic Scotland. I have asked its Director and Chief Executive, Mr. Graeme Munro to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from F. J. Lawrie to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 8 February 1995:

You tabled a Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Scotland for written answer on 8 February seeking statistics on de-listing and demolition of listed buildings. As your Question relates to operational matters undertaken by Historic Scotland, Mr. Graeme Munro, Historic Scotland's Director and Chief Executive, has been asked to provide the information you seek. In Mr. Munro's absence, I am responding.

I regret that we cannot answer the Question precisely as posed, since we do not keep a separate record of demolitions of listed buildings. Listed buildings may be demolished after the granting of listed building consent, but listed buildings are also lost from time to time by accident, such as through fire damage or structural failure.

The removal of demolished buildings from the statutory list would occur either through routine list maintenance or as a result of the rolling programme of national re-survey. Information on the annual number of deletions from the statutory list is only readily available from 1989; this information is as follows:

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Strathclyde	26	6	7	8	17	16
Scotland	704	374	123	23	81	44

Although we do not keep separate statistics to show why listed buildings have been deleted from the statutory lists, the majority of the deletions arise following re-assessment of merit under the re-survey programme.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mink Farming

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licences were issued for mink factory farms for each county of Scotland in each of the last five years.

Sir Hector Monro: The numbers of licensed mink farms over the past five years are as follows:

Region	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Central	1	—	—	—	—
Grampian	1	1	1	1	—
Strathclyde	3	1	1	—	—
Tayside	1	—	—	—	—
Total	6	2	2	1	—

Lochgreen Hospital

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will instruct Forth Valley health board to extend beyond 8 February the period for consultation on the board's proposal to close Lochgreen hospital;

(2) if he will instruct Fort Valley health board to hold a public meeting as part of the consultation process on the board's proposal to close Lochgreen hospital.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The three-month public consultation on the closure of Lochgreen hospital was originally due to finish on 11 January. Forth Valley health board extended the period to finish on 8 February in response to a request from Central regional council and has no plans to extend the period further.

The Scottish Office guidance on closure and change of use of health service premises published in June 1975 sets out the procedure which health boards must follow when proposing to close a hospital. It is a matter for the health board concerned to decide whether to hold public meetings.

Housing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the names of the housing associations in (a) Greenock and (b) Port Glasgow which will be allowed by Scottish Homes to bid for houses which Scottish Homes seeks to release;

(2) what constraints have been placed upon Rankin housing association by Scottish Homes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if the ballot papers issued to Scottish Homes tenants in Greenock and Port Glasgow will have an option for the tenants to vote (a) to remain with Scottish Homes, (b) to be transferred to (i) the Rankin housing association, (ii) the Clock housing association (iii) the James Watt housing association, (iv) the Victoria housing association (v) some other community-based housing association or (vi) the Inverclyde district council; and if he will make a statement;

(4) which housing schemes in (a) Greenock and (b) Port Glasgow Scottish Homes is attempting to transfer to housing associations or other landlords;

(5) what is the current value of the houses in (a) Greenock and (b) Port Glasgow that the Rankin housing association is seeking to acquire from Scottish Homes; and how much will be charged by Scottish Homes for these acquisitions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 February 1995]: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

NHS Trusts

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which hospital and related trusts have introduced elements of performance-related salaries for their employees.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 February 1995]: All NHS trusts in Scotland have introduced elements of performance-related salaries for some of their staff.

Agri-environmental Regulations

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to meet the EEC agri-environmental regulations; and what funds have been made available for their implementation.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 February 1995]: The Scottish agri-environment programme introduced under Council regulation EEC 2078/92 includes the extension of the environmentally sensitive area scheme and new schemes to encourage the conservation of heather moorland, the creation of wildlife habitats, organic farming, and informal recreation in ESAs and on set-aside land. The only scheme not yet introduced is the heather moorland scheme and this is scheduled for the spring. Expenditure on all these schemes is planned to rise to £12 million by 1996–97.

Recruitment

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department spent during 1994 on recruiting staff to his Department and its executive agencies; and how many staff were recruited.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 January 1995]: In 1994, the Scottish Office and its executive agencies recruited 158 staff at a total cost of £416,000. This excludes the recruitment of casual, temporary and seasonal staff. It also excludes the cost of executive search agencies which was the subject of a separate answer on 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1055.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out for each of the next steps agencies in his Department, whether they have acquired their own headquarters buildings and, if so, at what purchase cost or annual rental; how many support staff they have required which were not required when their operations were within his Department; how many of them published periodical journals and at what annual cost; how many have fleets of executive cars or single executive cars and at what annual cost; how many have specifically designed logos and at what cost; how many have corporate clothing and at what cost; and what is the cost of specifically designed and printed corporate stationery.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 January 1995]: These are matters which are delegated to agency chief executives and I have asked them to reply. Copies of their letters will be placed in the House Library.

Registers of Scotland was a separate Government Department in its own right and the Scottish Record Office was an associated department of the Scottish Office and as such neither was part of the Scottish Office before they became executive agencies.

When functions were transferred from the core of the Scottish Office to the agencies, so was the necessary funding; staffing levels in the Scottish Office and its agencies have decreased over the four years since the establishment of the first Executive Agency in my Department.

The record of agencies in improving effectiveness and efficiency in government is summarised in the "Next Steps Review 1994," Cm 2750.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information is not available for the full period covered by the question. According to the best information available, our total expenditure on external consultants in 1992–93 was £3.531 million at 1993–94 prices.

Consultants are used in a variety of activities designed to produce different benefits. Much of their work is linked to the requirements of Government programmes such as training and designing IT systems, rather than simply cost-cutting exercises. In addition, consultants are often only one of a number of contributory elements in projects that may produce savings. In these circumstances, it is not possible to quantify the annual savings which have resulted from the use of consultants.

The Lord Chancellor is responsible for three agencies: Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. As the question concerns specific operational matters on which the chief executives of the three agencies are best placed to provide answers, I have accordingly asked the chief executives to reply direct.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 7 February 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary, of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your parliamentary question listed on 6 February 1995, regarding expenditure on external consultants.

The Public Trust Office's (PTO) expenditure since 1987 is as follows:

Year	Consultants	Actual spend	Spend in 1994 prices
1992–93	Ernst and Young	26,508.00	27,865.49
	P-E International	6,110.00	6,422.90
	Total	32,618.00	34,288.39
1993–94	Ernst and Young	1,917.60	1,955.95
	P-E International	8,460.00	8,629.20
	Total	10,377.60	10,585.15
1994–95	Price Waterhouse	65,742.55	65,742.55
	Total	65,742.55	65,742.55

The Price Waterhouse report is still under discussion and decision are expected in the next month. The P-E International work resulted in savings of £91 kpa. The Ernst Young project did not lead to quantifiable reduction in cost. However it enabled the PTO to establish a corporate planning process which has helped us to plan for and achieve Executive Agency status without any additional cost in overall terms.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 February 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION—EXPENDITURE ON CONSULTANTS IN HM LAND REGISTRY

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, since 1987. I can provide the following information:

Year	Actual Cost £	Cost at 1994 prices £
1987–88	17,956	25,719
1988–89	37,149	49,872
1989–90	42,900	53,833
1990–91	48,062	55,836
1991–92	98,539	107,710
1992–93	54,224	57,001
1993–94	157,022	160,162

HM Land Registry has not used consultancy services extensively (the actual cost in 1993–94, for instance, represented only 0.08% of its total expenditure) and its main engagements are for specialist tuition and information Systems business services—the latter being provided throughout the period by the Government Centre for Information Systems (CCTA), particularly providing advice and services on procurement. Consequently, it has not been possible to quantify annual cost savings. Consultants' services have made a contribution to the overall cost savings achieved by the Registry which, for example, in 1993–94, amounted to a 2.97% reduction in unit costs in real terms over the previous year, equivalent to an overall saving of £5.9 million.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 8 February 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: EXPENDITURE ON EXTERNAL CONSULTANTS

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about expenditure on external consultants since 1987, and the quantified annual cost savings which have resulted from this expenditure.

1. The Public Record Office's annual expenditure on consultants (in 1994 prices) was:

1986–87: nil

1987–88: nil

1988–89: £80,276

1989–90: £46,745

1990–91: £243,000

1991–92: £349,111

1992–93: £971,568

1993–94: £674,305

2. The above includes £87,954 spent over 1992–93 and 1993–94 on consultancy to support the market testing programme, which has resulted in an annualised net saving of £291,000 per annum.

3. Other consultancies have been to carry out necessary specialised work beyond this department's normal scope, rather than to realise direct cost savings. They have related primarily to the construction of a new building, also to the installation of computer systems and training.

Government Legal Departments

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the actual annual expenditure on Government legal departments in each year since 1979, in 1994 prices; and if he will provide the breakdown of such expenditures between (a) courts services, (b) legal aid, (c) magistrates courts and (d) salaries of the judiciary; and if he will provide similarly tabulated data showing expenditures on the Public Record Office.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The readily available figures for the Lord Chancellor's Department are those published in the Government's expenditure plans. They are set out in table 1. Column (a) is net of receipts and includes court building. To allow comparisons between years, the figures have been adjusted to include superannuation contributions, inter-departmental transfers and the transfer of responsibility for magistrates courts from the Home Office in 1992.

Figures for the Northern Ireland court service are set out in table 2. The Northern Ireland court service took over responsibility for legal aid in April 1982 and before that figures are not available. Column (a) includes the magistrates courts, which in Northern Ireland are an integral part of the court service and separate figures are not available.

ENVIRONMENT

Care in the Community

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the housing implications for local authorities of the care in the community programme.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The impact of care in the community on local housing policies was raised with my Department by a number of local authorities during meetings to discuss the 1995–95 housing investment programme.

Housing Grants, Sandwell

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in Sandwell are in a condition qualifying them for repairs or renovation grants; and what is the average cost per household and grants.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The only data on condition available are Sandwell's estimates of the number of private sector unfit dwellings which, subject to the household test of resources, would be eligible for a mandatory renovation grant. The authority estimated that there were 13,600 dwellings in this category at 1 April 1994. The average mandatory renovation grant payment in England is £8,600; this relates to grants where final payment was made during the financial year 1993–94.

Dog Licensing

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further consideration he has given to introducing a system of dog licensing in England and Wales similar to the scheme operating in Northern Ireland.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government have no plans to introduce dog licensing in England and Wales.

Nirex

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many letters his Department has received calling for a wide public inquiry into the Nirex rock characterisation facility.

Sir Paul Beresford: About 340 letters have been received by the planning inspectorate requesting a wide-ranging inquiry into UK Nirex's planning appeal against Cumbria county council's refusal of permission for the rock characterisation facility.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses his Department has received to its consultation on the radioactive waste management review.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. member for Surrey, East (Mr. Ainsworth) on Tuesday 29 November, Official Report, column 647.

Uranium

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet discovered the source of the depleted uranium tailings found at Poplar farm, Chelveston.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is investigating the origins of the depleted uranium swarf found in a field at Poplar farm, Chelveston, Northamptonshire. It has uncovered evidence which may point to the likely source of at least some of the material. However, the investigation is continuing and at this stage it would be premature to release information until all the evidence has been fully substantiated and future action decided.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will issue directives to enforcing agencies to ensure that the deadline of 1 October set out in guidance note PG5/1 relating to clinical waste incinerators is enforced in a rigorous and timely manner;

(2) if he will make it his policy to remove any disparities of environmental standards imposed on clinical waste incinerators of differing sizes by guidance note PG5/1 and regulations IPR5/2.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) by the Under Secretary of State for the Environment on 19 January 1995, Official Report, column 659.

Local Planning Authorities

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if local planning authorities have an obligation to protect the local community from the effects arising from opencast mining sites and other large land obligations.

Sir Paul Beresford: Mineral planning guidance note 3 advises mineral planning authorities to take into account the effect of opencast coal mining on local communities, together with any steps that the operator proposes to take to minimise these effects, before deciding whether planning permission should be granted for opencast coal proposals. Where permission is granted, appropriate planning conditions should be attached to the permission to protect the interests of local communities. In addition, the Coal Industry Act 1994 imposes an environmental duty on the coal industry, and mineral planning authorities are required to have regard to the extent to which the operator has complied with the duty.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in respect of the obligation of bonds imposed by local planning authority on the owners of opencast mining sites and other large land obligations for the restoration of such sites.

Sir Paul Beresford: It is Government policy that sites used for opencast mining should be properly restored to a beneficial use when extraction has ceased. This policy objective should normally be achieved through implementation by the mineral operators of appropriate planning conditions attached to the permissions. Therefore local authorities should not usually have to require a bond to secure site restoration, in addition, through a planning agreement or obligation.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987 in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is not held centrally by my Department and is obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Credit Liabilities

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the purposes to which the provision for credit liabilities may be applied.

Mr. Gummer: Amounts set aside by local authorities as provision for credit liabilities under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 may be applied to meet liabilities in respect of borrowing and credit arrangements. Such amounts may also be applied to meet capital expenditure, subject to the use of a credit approval. However, authorities with no long-term debt and negative credit ceiling may spend or transfer their provision for credit liabilities in accordance with regulations under the 1989 Act.

Valuation Tribunals

Mr Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response was received to the consultation paper on the appointment of members of valuation tribunals in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The list of responses received has been placed in the Library of the House; copies of individual responses may be obtained from my Department's Library. In addition, one response was submitted by an individual on a confidential basis. Amendments to regulations will be introduced shortly to give effect to the following measures: the limit on billing authority members to one third of the total membership is to be extended to include county councillors; to extend the period of membership of a chairman at the end of his or her appointment until a replacement has been re-elected; the president, on election, is to fill the post of one of the chairmen; tribunals may elect a deputy president from one of the chairmen; employees may not be appointed as members; and the president may apply to the Secretary of State for a case to be heard by a different tribunal if it involves a former member or employee.

Scrap Metal

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to provide exemptions from waste management licensing for the recovery of scrap metal and the dismantling of waste motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: On 8 November 1994, I published a consultation paper setting out our proposals for exemptions from waste management licensing under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for the recovery of scrap metal and the dismantling of waste motor vehicles. We have considered the responses to that consultation exercise and have now laid before Parliament the Waste Management Licensing (Amendment etc.) Regulations 1995, S.I 1995 No. 288.

The Government's policy is that the controls applied to waste should be proportionate to the risks involved and the benefits to be obtained and should not impose unjustifiable or disproportionate burdens on those subject to control, especially small businesses. The scrap metal and waste motor vehicle dismantling industry plays an important role in the recovery of waste.

The aim of the exemptions from licensing provided in the regulations is to encourage the recovery of scrap metal where the industry's activities do not pose a threat to the environment or human health. To ensure that this aim is fulfilled, the exemptions we have provided specify the types and quantities of waste and the conditions under which the industry's activities will be exempt. Any scrap metal or waste motor vehicle dismantling yards which do not meet these conditions will be subject to waste management licensing.

Our consultation paper invited comments on whether the fragmentisation of scrap metal and waste motor vehicles should be the subject of an exemption. We have considered the comments made on this issue. Our conclusion is that it would not be appropriate to provide an exemption for fragmentisation and that this activity should remain subject to licensing.

The main purpose of the regulations is to provide exemptions for scrap metal recovery, but they make certain other provisions. These provisions include an extension of the transitional arrangements which exempt certain people from the requirement to demonstrate technical competence when applying for a waste management licence. The new exemptions will apply to people who have managed waste facilities authorised under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and managers of facilities which did not need a licence under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. The regulations also extend the list of equipment prescribed as mobile plant for the treatment or disposal of waste.

We will publish as soon as possible a circular providing guidance on the regulations and waste management paper No. 4A, which will provide guidance on those scrap metal recovery activities remaining subject to licensing.

PRIME MINISTER

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

The Prime Minister: There has been no expenditure by my Office on external consultants, including management consultants, since 1987.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 9 February.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 9 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Permanent Secretaries

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the pay of permanent secretaries.

The Prime Minister: The Government announced in Cm. 2748 presented to Parliament on 26 January that they intended to introduce new arrangements for the pay of Permanent Secretaries from 1 April, and that they would make a further announcement in conjunction with its response to the report of the senior salaries review body. The Government have now considered the recommendations of the review body.

As foreshadowed in the Command Paper, a remuneration committee will be established to advise Ministers on where individual permanent secretaries should be placed within the pay range. The full terms of reference are given.

The final decisions on the pay of individual permanent secretaries will be for the Government, who expect normally to accept the recommendations of the committee.

There will be five members of the committee—three members of the review body, the head of the civil service and the head of the Treasury. The chairman of the review body will normally chair the committee.

The three external members will, sitting alone, make recommendations to the Government on the salaries of the Heads of the civil service, the Treasury and the diplomatic service.

Sir Michael Perry, who will succeed Lord Nickson as chairman of the review body in April, has agreed to chair the committee. Mr. Gordon Hourston and Ms Yve Newbold, both members of the review body, have agreed to serve on it. I am grateful to all of them for undertaking this important additional task.

The review body proposed a pay range of £90,000-£150,000. The Government accept this recommendation. The salaries of individual posts will be published in £5,000 bands once each year in the following annual report of the review body. Parallel arrangements will be made for the most senior ambassadors.

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF THE REMUNERATION COMMITTEE

Membership

1. There shall be a committee on the pay of Permanent Secretaries of whom the members will be:

3 members of the Senior Salaries Review Body (SSRB);

the Heads of the Home Civil Service and Treasury.

2. The chairman of the committee will be one of the members, normally the Chairman, of the SSRB.

Remit: Permanent Secretaries other than the Heads of the Home Civil Service, the Diplomatic Service and the Treasury

3. The purpose of the committee is for the three SSRB members to make proposals to Ministers on the pay of individual Permanent Secretaries save insofar as their pay is determined by the terms of an individual appointment.

4. The pay of Permanent Secretaries will be accommodated within the pay range to be determined from time to time by the Government. The committee may not propose other forms of remuneration or benefit than pay falling within this range.

5. In making proposals the committee shall take the following factors into account in relation to individuals:

the relative level of responsibility of the post occupied;

the performance of the Department in executing the policy of Ministers and the personal contribution the individual has made in terms of policy advice and efficient management, including where appropriate meeting the measured objectives of the Department;

the experience of the individual in the present post or in others occupied at Permanent Secretary/Head of Department Level; in the case of those newly promoted, the level of pay in their previous post;

any views which the Minister, to whom the Permanent Secretary is principally responsible, may wish to offer to the committee;

the individual's own assessment of his/her achievements and the main requirements of the job.

6. The committee should also take into account these wider factors:

the pay levels of other staff in the Senior Civil Service, and in particular those immediately below Permanent Secretary;

the increases recently given to, or likely to be given, in the period ahead, to civil servants generally, and the pay progression available to them;

the extent of the change for any individual as well as the absolute level of pay, and the presentation of both;

any movement in the pay range as a whole;

the nature and terms of the Civil Service pension scheme;

any statements made by the Government on public sector pay;

the maintenance of the confidence of the individual, that recommendations have been properly and fairly determined;

the need to ensure recommendations are consistent with the Government's equal opportunities policy.

Remit: Pay of Civil Service members of the Remuneration Committee and Head of the Diplomatic Service

7. The SSRB members of the committee will, sitting alone, make proposals to Ministers on the pay of the Heads of the Home Civil Service, of the Diplomatic Service and of the Treasury. For this purpose they will take account of all the factors noted in paragraphs 4–6 above as relevant to the pay of Permanent Secretaries.

Review Bodies

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the review body reports.

The Prime Minister: The 1995 reports of the review bodies on the pay of schoolteachers, senior civil servants, the senior military, the judiciary, the armed forces, doctors and dentists, nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and the professions allied to medicine have now been published. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library of the House. The Government are grateful to the members of the review bodies for the time and care which they have put into the preparation of the reports.

The Government's policy is that increases in pay must be fully met from existing budgets. Pay increases for public sector staff therefore have to be paid for by greater efficiency or by other economies. This position was reaffirmed in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's statement on public sector pay on 14 September 1994, and in the Government's evidence to the review bodies. It is fundamental to the Government's response to their recommendations.

The review bodies have made the following recommendations:

The Armed Forces Pay Review Body has recommended a range of increases in daily rates of between 2.5 and 2.9 per cent., averaging 2.6 per cent. for the various ranks in its remit group.

The Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine has recommended a 1.0 per cent. increase in national salary rates to be supplemented by local negotiations on pay and, where appropriate, leads and allowances and/or conditions. The Review Body has said it expects that, in the majority of cases, the outcome of local negotiations would provide improvements for the staff concerned totalling between 1.5 and 3 per cent., including 1 per cent. increase in national rates.

The Doctors and Dentists Review Body has recommended pay increases of 2.5 per cent. generally for members of its remit group, and 3 per cent. in the intended average net remuneration of general medical practitioners. It has recommended that Trusts able to conclude local agreements with the profession should proceed accordingly. It also recommends an alternative system of transitional local pay for hospital consultants accepting a divergence from the nationally determined scale subject to a maximum increase of 5 per cent. in consultants' average salary in each Trust.

The School Teachers' Review Body has recommended a 2.7 per cent. increase in teachers' pay.

The Senior Salaries Review Body has recommended:

(i) an increase of 2.5 per cent. in the budget for performance related pay for civil servants in Grades 2 and 3 and increases in the relevant pay ranges;

(ii) a new pay range for Permanent Secretaries to replace the existing system of spot rates with pay decisions to be made on the basis of advice from a new remuneration committee.

(iii) a range of increases between 2.5 and 3.8 per cent., averaging 3.2 per cent., in the pay of senior armed forces officers.

(iv) a 2.5 per cent. increase in the pay of the judiciary.

The Government have taken their decisions on these recommendations on the basis of our approach to public sector pay. We accept the recommendations and propose to implement them from the due date of 1 April. The costs will be met from the public expenditure totals published at Budget time. There will be no new money to finance these pay increases, and for the third year running there will be no call on the reserve.

The Government in particular welcome and support the recommendations of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine for the development of local pay determination for members of its remit groups. Negotiations with the staff sides at national level need to be concluded quickly to facilitate additional local payments. The Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body has reaffirmed its support for moves towards local pay determination and negotiations are being held with the professions on changes to the distinction awards scheme for consultants which should lead to much greater local involvement. The review body had advocated brisk progress and both sides expect these negotiations to be concluded in the next few months.

I am making a separate announcement on the arrangements for determining the pay of individual permanent secretaries.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Saharawi Refugees

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Algeria concerning their policy on the needs of the Saharawi refugees resident in that country.

Mr. Baldry: We have held no discussions with the Government of Algeria on this subject.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been provided (a) directly by the United Kingdom and (b) through bilateral procedures to the Saharawi people who are victims of floods at their refugee camps.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom has provided no aid directly or through bilateral procedures to the Saharawi people. However, we provide support for refugees through UNHCR on a regular basis and in response to special appeals from them and other interactional agencies. UK contributions to UNHCR in 1994–95 so far amount to over £20 million. In 1994, UNHCR earmarked £4 million for assistance to Saharawi refugees in Algeria and have earmarked a further £4 million this year.

EU Overseas Development Programmes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements exist in the United Kingdom for monitoring and evaluating overseas development programmes of the European Union.

Mr. Baldry: The primary responsibility for the monitoring and evaluation of European Community development assistance rests with the Commission. Monitoring is undertaken by in-country delegations and staff in Brussels administering the various programmes, supported as required by consultants. The evaluation unit in directorate general VIII of the Commission has a wide-ranging work programme covering EC assistance to Africa, the Caribbean, the Pacific, Asia, Latin America and the Mediterranean. Evaluation systems have been established to cover the more recent Poland and Hungary assistance for economic restructuring and Tacis programmes in eastern and central Europe and humanitarian aid—ECHO.

The United Kingdom has pressed successfully for the findings of mid-term reviews to be discussed by member states in management committees. We participate in the regular meetings of heads of evaluations services from the Commission and member state aid administrations. We play an active role in joint evaluations of EC and member state assistance.

Reproductive Health Programmes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reproductive health programmes are currently being funded by the European Union for developing countries.

Mr. Baldry: The European Community is currently supporting at least 50 population and reproductive health programmes in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean. These seek to improve maternal and child health, access to family planning services and contraceptive supplies. In some programmes, these activities are undertaken as elements of broader health care initiatives.

We continue to encourage the Commission to develop strategies for increasing support to population and reproductive health activities following the 1994 Cairo conference on population and development.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to fund reproductive health activities in Botswana.

Mr. Baldry: At present, there are no plans to support reproductive health programmes in Botswana. The Government of Botswana have agreed that British aid should focus on education, natural resources and public sector financial management. Support for health services is provided by other aid donors and from Botswana's own resources.

Education Projects

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the breakdown of spending on education projects within the Overseas Development Administration in the year 1993–94; how much of the total is allocated to (a) basic education for children, (b) literacy for adults, (c) secondary and tertiary education, (d) buildings, for educational purposes, and (e) other services to education beyond a basic level.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 7 February 1995]: Total ODA spending on education projects during 1993–94 amounted to just over £117 million. The figures include all project aid and technical co-operation as well as the ODA's grant to the British Council.

The categories given correspond as closely to those in the question as the ODA economic sector codes covered by education allow.

ODA expenditure on education in 1993–94

Category	Expenditure (£000)
Primary education	8,532
Adult education and literacy	660
Secondary and tertiary education	17,806
Buildings for educational purposes	1,735
Other education services (including ODA's grant to the British Council)	88,665
Total Education	117,398

Note:

"Other education services" includes:

1. ODA grant to the British Council (£31m).
2. Education expenditure allocated to the ODA's general education economic sector code and not broken down to a lower level. This will include expenditure in all categories of education including those specifically covered in the question.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies House (Sickness)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the board of Tradie what assessment he has made of the reasons for the relative rates of sickness of staff (a) at Companies House and (b) the Laboratory of the Government Chemist.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department's agencies are assessed against a range of measures and have good records of meeting targets and improving their performance from year to year. I am, however, looking into the issues raised by my hon. Friend's question.

Shipbuilding Intervention Funding

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's policy on the level of shipbuilding intervention funding during 1995.

Mr. Eggar: I have decided that the United Kingdom's maximum level of support for large ships from 1 January 1995 shall continue to be 9 per cent., including shipbuilders' tax relief of 2 per cent. This follows a decision of the European Commission, notified to member states on 27 January 1995.

I have similarly decided that the maximum level of support for small ships from 1 January 1995 shall continue to be 4.5 per cent., including shipbuilders' tax relief at 2 per cent.

Those levels are at the maximum permitted by the EC shipbuilding regime.

This is the last year in which shipbuilding intervention will be available for new contracts. The OECD agreement respecting normal competitive conditions in the commercial shipbuilding and repair industry prohibits direct subsidies from 1 January 1996.

Biological Warfare

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, in his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 28 February 1994, Official Report, column 541, in respect of exports to Iraq, what licences were (a) required for the exports referred to and (b) issued for such exports in the 10 years prior to 1986.

Mr. Heseltine: The agents referred to were not subject to export control before July 1985.

From 1985 to 1992, the toxicological agents were licensable only if adapted for use in war. The agents became licensable in their own right by virtue of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992.

Records prior to 1986 are not available except at disproportionate cost, and even then are unlikely to be complete.

Coal Industry

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he consulted local government planning authorities when preparing the restructuring scheme in the Coal Industry Act 1994;

(2) what considerations he gave to the interests of local planning authorities when including schedule 2 in the Coal Industry Act 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: When the Bill was introduced, the Department made widely available to interested parties, including to all those mineral planning authorities which expressed an interest, general guidance on its privatisation proposals.

The restructuring powers under the Coal Industry Act 1994 provide for the transfer of existing property, rights and liabilities of British Coal to successor companies to enable privatisation to take place. The powers are general in nature to deal with many different forms of property, rights and liabilities which had to be transferred.

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if Clydesdale district council made representations to Her Majesty's Government before the Coal Industry Act 1994 in respect of the dangers of transferring personal planning consent to the new coal owners without first referring it to the local planning authority.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Her Majesty's Government received no such representation before or during the passage of the Act. Representations on the matter were made to my officials by the district council in October 1994.

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations led Her Majesty's Government to allow full discretion of schedule 2 to the Coal Industry Act 1994 to treat the transferee as the same person in law as the British Coal Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ensure that the ongoing operations of British Coal could continue without disruption on transfer to a successor company, it was necessary for the transferee to be treated as the same person in law as the British Coal Corporation.

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Trade and Industry Minister in the House of Lords, Lord Strathclyde, was explaining Government policy when he said on 3 May 1994, Official Report, column 1056, that if a coal owner became bankrupt the Coal Authority would be responsible for any costs of restoring the site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My noble Friend made two salient points on a number of occasions: he drew attention to the important duty of the Coal Authority to secure so far as practicable, that operators are able to finance their operations and the discharge of associated liabilities, and he noted that where the Coal Authority is the owner of land, underground workings or coal reserves the associated responsibilities fall on its lessees or, where there is no lessee, on it.

Opencast Mining Sites

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who will be responsible for the cost of restoration to opencast mining sites in the event of the new owners going into liquidation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The obligation to restore a site of opencast coal extraction generally falls on the owner of the surface. Its enforceability during and following an insolvency would depend on the relevant facts.

Rom Data, Falmouth

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will begin an investigation into the running of the Rom Data computer firm in Falmouth.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The company is in liquidation. The Department will consider any information regarding the affairs of Rom Data Ltd. forwarded in the usual manner.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from hon. Members in connection with the Rom Data computer firm in Cornwall.

Mr. Charles Wardle: One. I had a meeting with the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) on 23 January 1995.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount in grants given to the Rom Data computer firm by his Department and if he will make a statement about his Department's funding of Rom Data.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The total grant paid to Rom Data Ltd. was £825,000. This grant was made under the criteria for regional selective assistance, which is a grant available to projects which create or safeguard employment in the assisted areas.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Soley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is his intention, when contracting out the functions of the Official Receiver's Insolvency Service, to include the local office information system; and if contractors will have to bid for this.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In the absence of any decision to contract out the functions of official receivers, the question of whether the local office information system, LOIS, will be included in any contract specification has not yet been considered.

Consultants have been engaged by the Insolvency Service to work up a specification, bid documentation and evaluation criteria and will consider matters such as this as part of their work.

Additional Export Licensing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which countries or destinations were subjected to additional export licensing procedures from April 1991 for dual-use or other technologies.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The following countries are currently subject to special licensing procedures:

Afghanistan
Albania
Algeria
Angola
Argentina
Armenia
Azerbaijan
Belarus
Brazil
Bosnia and Herzegovina
Bulgaria
Burma (Myanmar)
China
Croatia
Cuba
Egypt
Estonia
Georgia
India
Iran
Iraq
Israel
Kazakhstan
Kyrgyzstan
Latvia
Libya
Lithuania
Macedonia
Moldova
Mongolia
North Korea
Pakistan
Romania
Russia
Slovenia
Somalia
South Africa
Syria
Taiwan
Tajikistan
Turkmenistan
Ukraine
Uzbekistan
Vietnam

Changes since April 1991 have included the removal of central European countries, and the addition of the CIS republics and those countries which were formerly part of Yugoslavia, except Serbia and Montenegro, which are subject to UN sanctions.

Amoco Fabrics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent offers of regional selective assistance have been made to Amoco Fabrics in relation to jobs created at Consett, County Durham.

Mr. Ian Taylor: None.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years, indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 1 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury on 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 69.

Domestic Gas Appliances

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report column 396, if he will list the qualification of those engineers engaged in the servicing of domestic gas appliances; and what assessment he has made of the consequences for safety standards if no other engineers were employed in gas maintenance.

Mr. Oppenheim: I have been asked to reply.

The Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1994 require anyone who works with a gas fitting, including servicing of a domestic gas appliance, or a gas storage vessel to be competent. The Health and Safety Commission's approved code of practice, "Standards of Training in Safe Gas Installation", published in 1988, provides practical guidance on the scope of training necessary for those engaged in gas installation work.

No assessment has been made of the consequences for safety of a shortfall in the availability of competent gas fitters to undertake gas maintenance work, because I cannot foresee circumstances in which such a shortfall would arise.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fisheries Guidance Grants

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when application forms for financial instrument for fisheries guidance grants will be made available for the period 1994 to 1999; and for what reasons application forms are not available in January.

Mr. Ancram: The United Kingdom fisheries sectoral plan under Council regulation No. 3699/93 was not approved by the European Commission until 29 December. It will be necessary to introduce secondary legislation to provide the UK national or regional aid required to trigger EU aid and advise interested parties when the scheme is open for application. We are proceeding with the implementation as quickly as possible, including the preparation of application forms.

Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why he has not yet provided the information about next steps agencies requested by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton in his question of 20 January.

Sir John Wheeler: Because of the number of next steps agencies involved, the information took some time to compile. It was, however, provided to the right hon. Member on 7 February.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans are presently under consideration at the Department of the Environment for the creation of agencies to carry out its functions; and if he will list (a) the areas identified, (b) the expected work force within each agency, (c) the stage which each agency proposal has reached and (d) what consultation has taken place with elected Northern Ireland members.

Mr. Moss [holding answer 7 February 1995]: There are already four next steps agencies in the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) covering rate collection, driver and vehicle testing, Ordnance Survey and driver and vehicle licensing.

On 19 July 1994, my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) announced that the Public Record Office would become a next steps agency from 1 April 1995 and that the Water Executive would become an agency from 1 April 1996—Official Report, 19 July 1994, column 193. The Public Record Office will have a work force of 94, including three part-time staff, but decisions have not been taken about the workforce for the Water Executive.

On 18 January 1994, my right hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) announced that the functions of the planning, roads and environment services and the Land Registry were potential candidates for next steps agencies and that the possible "prior options" of abolition, privatisation or contracting out would be considered in each case, Official Report column 521. On 21 July, my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield announced that a prior options study of Works Service would also be undertaken, Official Report, column 443. These studies are undertaken in pursuance of the Government's policy that, where the prior options of abolition, privatisation, market testing and contracting out do not apply, executive functions within Departments are best carried out in next steps agencies. A report on the DOE studies was completed in December and is currently under consideration. When conclusions have been reached, an announcement will be made regarding any further agencies to be created.

I should be glad to discuss with Northern Ireland Members of Parliament the action being taken to create next steps agencies and other initiatives directed at improving efficiency and value for money in the Department of the Environment. I will write to them shortly on this matter.

Mink Farming

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many licences were issued for mink factory farms for each county of Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 8 February 1995]: There has only ever been one licensed mink farm in Northern Ireland. It was situated in County Down and was issued with an annual licence in 1990 and 1991. No licences were issued in 1992, 1993 or 1994.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the extent to which appropriation in aid was taken into account in his answer of 28 October 1994, Official Report, columns 895–96, in relation to the Crown Prosecution Service's cash and running cost limits for 1994–95.

The Attorney-General: The revised running costs limit of £224,392,000 reported in my earlier answer took account of appropriations in aid of £91,000. Gross expenditure without such deduction determines the gross running costs limit. Following the transfer of £80,000 to the Department of Social Security, the Crown Prosecution Service's running costs limit will therefore now be £224,483,000.

Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General what was the actual annual expenditure on (a) the Treasury Solicitor's Department, (b) the Crown Prosecution Service, (c) the Serious Fraud Office and (d) the legal secretariat to the Law Officers, in each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

The Attorney-General: The gross expenditure is given in the table in 1994 prices. Superannuation contributions have been included from 1987–88 although until 1992–93 these were borne centrally.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Attorney-General what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

The Attorney-General: The expenditure is given in the table in 1994 prices. Such consultants were engaged primarily to advise on matters of management or to develop new systems and, while their advice is considered to have contributed very significantly to efficiency, it is not possible to quantify the annual cost savings attributable to this expenditure.

SCOTLAND

Housing Associations

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effects on existing council tenants of the wholesale transfer of council housing stocks to housing associations; and what further assessment he has made of the effects of such transfers following local authority reorganisation and of the influence such activity will have on the ability of new authorities to provide housing services to all districts within their jurisdiction.

Mr. Lang: There has, as yet, been no wholesale transfer of council housing stock to a housing association in Scotland. However, there has been a steady flow of smaller scale transfers with over 15,000 council houses having transferred to the private sector, mainly to locally based housing associations.

While transferring tenants change from secure to assured tenancy agreements, they generally continue to enjoy at least the same rights as before on a contractual basis, including the right to buy their home. Furthermore, tenants are also usually offered a rent guarantee for at least the first few years after transfer. As investment in the transferred stock no longer counts as public expenditure, tenants can also expect to benefit from accelerated investment in improving the stock. Tenants also often have the opportunity to become directly involved in the management of their housing through participation in the activities of the housing association and representation on its management committee.

The wholesale transfer of housing stock will enable local authorities to concentrate on their strategic and enabling role in meeting housing needs in their area, free from the day-to-day burdens of acting as a landlord. Part of any receipt arising from the stock disposal can, with the consent of the Secretary of State, be used to support new housing investment and the establishment of nomination rights with the acquiring landlords will enable authorities, and their successors after reorganisation, to perform their statutory duties in ensuring that the housing needs of the area are met.

Strathclyde Passenger Transport Authority

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many responses he has received on his consultation on the boundaries of the Strathclyde passenger transport authority and executive following local government reorganisation in Scotland; how many supported (a) map 1 in his consultative document, (b) map 2 in his consultative document and (c) the whole of the present Strathclyde region; if he will list the organisations which supported each of the three options; and if he will make a statement on how he now proposes to proceed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Although the consultation period ended on 31 January 1995, responses are still being received from organisations which had difficulty in responding within the deadline. The responses have come from a wide variety of sources including local authorities, community councils, voluntary and representative bodies, Members of Parliament, councillors and individuals, and have covered a range of issues including the options contained in the consultation document. The responses will be carefully assessed before any decision is taken.

Negative Equity

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homes in Scotland were in negative equity for each of the past three years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We do not hold this information centrally. Recent studies have shown that the problem of negative equity is less pronounced in Scotland than in any other region of the United Kingdom.

Repossessions

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the number of house repossessions for mortgage default in Scotland in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We do not currently hold this information centrally. Figures supplied by the Council of Mortgage Lenders suggest that, in 1993, 2,330 properties were taken into possession in Scotland. This represents 0.29 per cent. of the total number of properties with mortgages outstanding, which is around half the proportion for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Warrant Sales

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many warrant sales have been conducted in Scotland in each year since 1987 in each sheriffdom; and if he will list for each sheriffdom, the numbers instigated by (a) local authorities, (b) Government Departments, (c) private firms and (d) private individuals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Figures for the number of warrant sales reported to the Sheriff courts from 1987 to 1994 are set out by sheriffdom in the table. The figures for 1994 are provisional only. A breakdown of the numbers by (a) local authorities, (b) Government Departments, (c) private firms and (d) private individuals is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Health Education

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent on health education programmes in schools designed specifically to dissuade children from smoking cigarettes in each of the past five years in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scottish schools the management and content of the curriculum in matters relating to health education, including the effects of smoking policy, are the responsibility of education authorities and headteachers. The information sought is not held centrally by the Scottish Office. In Strathclyde, the life skills approach to drug, alcohol and smoking education will continue to be the core of education programmes rather than a focus on individual substances like tobacco. No separate allocation of money is therefore spent to dissuade children from smoking cigarettes.

Scottish Agricultural Science Agency

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the performance of the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency against its targets for 1994–95 and the setting of targets of 1995–96.

Mr. Lang: The agency is on course to meet the key performance targets for 1994–95 which I set out in my answer of 2 March 1994, columns 777–78.

For 1995–96 I have set the agency the following key performance targets:

- fulfilment of the service level agreement with the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department within the running costs voted to the agency for 1995–96;
- recovery of full economic costs on average for charged services;
- formal consultation with all major customers on the quality of the work done by the agency in 1995–96;
- completion of 90 per cent. of all scientific tests and analyses within the timescales set by customers;
- increase by 1 per cent. in the proportion of the agency's full cost attributable to scientific activities rather than support services.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what records, maps and other data are maintained showing (a) the radioactive inventory, (b) the nature and (c) the precise location of low-level radioactive wastes disposed of on authorised landfill sites; and to what extent this information is available to members of the public.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Details of low-level radioactive wastes disposed of by controlled burial in landfill sites are held by the operator of the landfill site, usually the local authority. Operators are not required to publish this information. However, a request for such information to the operator would be considered within the framework of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

Mink and Fox Farming

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the last three years his inspectors have supervised, examined or monitored the slaughter of factory farm mink and Arctic fox; and by what method killings were carried out.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 February 1995]: During the period in question, a veterinary officer was present at the killing of Arctic foxes at one farm. The method used was injection of pentobarbitone. There are currently no fur farms in operation in Scotland.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Gianfranco Fini

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what arrangements have been made for the visit of Mr. Gianfranco Fini to the House; which hon. Member was responsible for inviting him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I am unaware of any such invitation to Mr. Fini.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases the Child Support Agency has applied for a liability order; how many cases have been heard to date; and what has been the outcome of these hearings.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 9 February 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of liability orders for which the Child Support Agency has applied.

From April 1993 to the end of November 1994, the Agency has referred a total of 1,010 cases to court for liability orders. Figures are not available for the number of cases heard and the outcome of those cases, but a new system for collecting this information has been introduced from this month.

Sir John Cope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions section 2 of the Child Support Act 1991 has been applied to reduce the amount of child maintenance paid by an absent parent.

Mr. Burt: I have recently written to my right hon. Friend in reply to his letter to me on this matter. The information that the right hon. Member requires is not available. The law used in making decisions should be recorded on individual files, and notified to the client, but there is no requirement to keep or collate records centrally.

Disabled People

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for replacing provision for the care and mobility needs of disabled people, currently made through disability living allowance, with private insurance against long-term disability.

Mr. Hague: We have no plans to do so.

Family Credit

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total sum paid as family credit for each year since 1989.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Croydon, North-West (Mr. Wicks) on 12 December, Official Report, column 534.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will break down the amounts recovered by the compensation recovery unit in cases of industrial disease and illness by the disease or illness suffered, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 8 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the amounts recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit (CRU) in cases of industrial disease and illness, by the disease or illness suffered for each of the last five years.

Information is not available in the exact format requested. This is because data prior to April 1994 is no longer held on the computer system and to obtain such information would be at a disproportionate cost. The information that is collated covering the period 1 April 1994 to 31 January 1995 is provided at Annex A.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Habitual Residence Rule

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many British (a) women and (b) men aged (i) 24 to 35 years, (ii) 35 to 55 years and (iii) 55 years and over have been denied benefits under the habitual residence rule;

(2) how many British citizens with children (a) under five years, (b) over five years and (c) under 16 years have been denied benefits under the habitual residence rule;

(3) how many (a) Canadian, (b) Australian and (c) New Zealand citizens have been denied benefits under the habitual residence rule.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Expenditure on external consultancy since 1987 at current and constant 1994–95 prices

£ million

	Current prices	1994–95 prices
1987–88	23.2	33.2
1988–89	49.5	66.5
1989–90	43.3	54.3
1990–91	83.2	96.7
1991–92	69.7	76.2
1992–93	[1]36.4	[1]38.3
1993–94	[1]38.0	[1]38.8

[1] Figures for 1992–93 onwards now refer solely to expenditure on consultancy services following work undertaken for the efficiency scrutiny into the Government's use of external consultants.

Figures for earlier years include the costs of contracted services.

The additional information requested in respect of quantified annual cost savings is not available.

Unemployment Benefit

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the value of unemployment benefit, in actual and 1994 terms, for each of the years 1964, 1974, 1984 and 1994.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in tables 5.3a and 5.3b of the "Abstract of Statistics for Social Security Benefits and Contributions, and the Indices of Retail Prices and Average Earnings—October 1994", a copy of which is in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants. for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Norris: In each of the financial years from 1990–91 to 1993–94 the expenditure on external consultants, at 1993–94 prices, was as follows:

Year	Expenditure £ million
1990–91	185
1991–92	196
1992–93	229

Figures from 1987–88—1989–90 are not available except at disproportionate costs.

It is not possible to quantify the annual cost savings resulting from this expenditure, the vast majority of which was for specific deliverables such as road schemes. Most of the expenditure was incurred on highways-related work.

Underground Trains (Speed Restrictions)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the chairman of London Transport indicating which sections of the underground network have train speed limits of 20 mph or less; what are their locations; what are the reasons for this restrictions; and what plans there are to take remedial action.

Mr. Norris: No, these are operational matters for London Transport.

Driving Test Examiners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is (a) the number and (b) the percentage of employees conducting tests to award driving licences in the Greater London area who are from an ethnic minority background.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Driving Standards Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from L. M. Manley to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 9 February 1995:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the number of Driving Examiners conducting driving tests in the Greater London area who are from an ethnic minority background.

There are 219 Driving Examiners conducting driving tests in the Greater London Area. Six (2.7%) of these Examiners are from an ethnic minority background.

Sickness Absence

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 881, how many staff suggestions have led to initiatives to reduce stress levels and sick absences among employees of his Department.

Mr. Norris: In the last three years, the Secretary of State for Transport has received no staff suggestions which have led to such initiatives.

Risk Assessments

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 881, if he will list (a) for each agency and (b) for his Department, the number of risk assessments conducted.

Mr. Norris: The details are as follows:

		Number
(a)	Coastguard Agency	232
	Driving Standards Agency	820
	Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency	2,191
	Highways Agency	232
	Marine Safety Agency	2[1]
	Transport Research Laboratory	672
	Vehicle Certification Agency	1
	Vehicle Inspectorate	n/a
(b)	Department (CTG)	55

[1] Not included those in the process of being conducted. n/a Not available.

Hesketh Report

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the conclusions and recommendations of the Hesketh report on the state of the signalling infrastructure on Britain's railways; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Watts: The Hesketh report was an internal British Rail document and not an official report for external release. Responsibility for signalling infrastructure passed to Railtrack on 1 April 1994. We expect Railtrack to publish its first investment plan later this year.

HEALTH

Antibiotics

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost to the NHS of general practitioners prescribing antibiotics.

Mr. Malone: The annual cost to the national health service for antibacterials prescribed by general practitioners for the last available year—1993–94—in England is:

Prescriptions (millions)	Net ingredient cost (millions)
43.3	£171.3

Notes:
1. The term antibiotics is taken to mean antibacterial drugs as defined in the British national formulary, section 5.1.
2. The figures cover prescriptions written by general practitioners and dispensed by community pharmacists and dispensing doctors.
3. The net ingredient cost is the basic cost of the drugs before discount and does not include any dispensing costs or fees.

National Register for Carers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to recognise the work carried out by the national register for carers, assessors and verifiers in combating the employment of dangerous carers; and what assessment she has made of the work carried out by the national register for carers.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle under Lyme (Mrs. Golding) on 25 January, column 254.

Anthrax Vaccines

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual cost of (a) hospital-prescribed anthrax vaccine and (b) GP-prescribed anthrax vaccines in the years 1990 to 1993; to what extent such vaccine was obtained (i) commercially and (ii) directly from government sources of supply; if these vaccines were suitable for use against penicillin resistant anthrax strains; and if he will place in the Library guidance on the use of such vaccines.

Mr. Sackville: Anthrax vaccine, whether prescribed in hospital or by a general practitioner, is obtained from a common Government source and is not commercially available in the United Kingdom. The annual costs of supply were as follows: 1990, £34,000; 1991–92, £52,000; and 1993, £58,000. The breakdown of this cost between hospital and GP-prescribed vaccine is not readily available.

Anthrax vaccine creates protective immunity to the toxin produced by the anthrax bacillus. The vaccine is, therefore, effective against all strains of anthrax, irrespective of their antibiotic sensitivity.

Guidance on the use of anthrax vaccine is contained in the memorandum "Immunisation against infectious disease", copies of which are available in the Library.

Blood

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many (a) chief executives and senior managers have left the national blood transfusion service since June 1994 and (b) zonal managers have been appointed in advance of the conclusion of the consultation process by the National Blood Authority;

(2) if she will list the joint ventures entered into, both in the United Kingdom and abroad, by the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the total number of units of blood collected by the blood transfusion service in 1994 and (b) her future projections of the demand for blood for the years for which projections have been made.

Mr. Sackville: We are informed by the National Blood Authority that in 1994 the number of donations collected increased by 5 per cent. to 2.4 million. The NBA's current demand projections estimate an annual increase of around 4 per cent.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to introduce screening of blood products and blood for Anti-HTLVI and II and Anti-HBc.

Mr. Sackville: None.

The last advice which we received from the expert committee in September 1992 in the case of anti-HTLV and in November 1993 in the case of anti-HBc was that routine screening of blood donations for these antibodies should not be introduced. The expert committee is keeping its advice under review.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when she expects to receive analysis of responses to the consultation document of the National Blood Authority together with its final proposals and publish the final proposals for reorganisation of the National Blood Authority;

(2) if she will publish (a) all the responses to the National Blood Authority consultation document and (b) a list of all the organisations and individuals who have opposed the reorganisation proposals of the National Blood Authority;

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority is currently considering the comments received during its thorough and widespread consultation. The authority will in due course produce and publish its final proposals, having taken account of the comments received, but cannot yet provide a firm date for this. The format of the publication is a matter for the NBA. The authority has announced the appointment of an independent panel who will ensure that the comments made on the original proposals receive due and objective consideration.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria were used in the selection of the independent committee members appointed to consider responses to the National Blood Authority's consultation process.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each regional blood transfusion centre (a) the date it received a Medicines Control Agency licence, (b) the date it acquired accreditation under BS5750 and (c) the date it made any unsuccessful application for either (a) or (b).

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 1 November 1994, columns 1078–79. The manufacturers licence held by the National Blood Authority covering all centres was first issued on 8 August 1994 and was last updated on 7 December 1994. The wholesale dealers licence, No. WL/13733/1, held by the authority was issued on 27 July 1994 and was last updated on 15 November 1994. No unsuccessful applications for licensing of blood transfusion centres has occurred. Accreditation under BS5750 is not a statutory requirement for the NBA. The pursuit of accreditation by individual transfusion centres is a matter for the NBA.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will identify and list the immunoglobins currently exported by the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Sackville: The Bio Products Laboratory, a part of the National Blood Authority, occasionally exports human normal intramuscular immunoglobulin when it has supplies available which are surplus to requirements in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the joint ventures entered into, both in the United Kingdom and abroad, by the National Blood Authority.

Mr. Sackville: Apart from those entered into in the course of research or normal commercial contracting activity, the National Blood Authority is not involved in any joint ventures either in the United Kingdom or abroad.

NHS Trusts

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to implement full public disclosure by trusts of (a) ambulance waiting times and (b) hospital bed shortages.

Mr. Sackville: Information on ambulance response times is published centrally by the Department in "Patient Transport Services—Summary information for KA 34: England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Information on bed availability is published in "Bed Availability for England", copies of which are also available in the Library. There are no plans to extend this information. Trusts must aim to meet current needs, while demand for beds is unpredictable.

The new patients charter for England introduced a fresh standard that from 1 April 1995 patients who need to be admitted to hospital through accident and emergency departments will be given a bed within three hours to four hours, improving to two hours from 1 April 1996. All health authorities will be required to monitor the performance of their provider hospitals in meeting the new standard and publish local information about their achievements in their annual reports.

GP Fundholders

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the amount of money saved from general practitioner fundholding budgets which is being used to increase the value of the premises owned by fundholding general practitioners.

Mr. Malone: None. Paragraph 24 of the National Health Service (Fund-holding Practices) Regulations 1993 states that general practitioner fundholder audited savings may be used to supplement future budgets, to purchase material or equipment and to improve practice premises for the benefit of patients.

Family health services authorities are responsible for monitoring fundholders' expenditure, including savings, to ensure that they are used, in accordance with regulations, for the benefit of patients.

Many fundholders have used efficiency savings to purchase additional services, or improve their premises, for example, to build extra treatment rooms for community nurses or visiting consultants or to bring more services into the practice. This investment in primary care improves convenience for patients and the cost-effectiveness of the service.

Diabetes

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the NHS budget is currently allocated to (a) research into diabetes and (b) the treatment and continuing care for diabetes sufferers.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service funds a range of research and development work into diabetes. Detailed information on the amount and proportion spent is not available centrally.

Treatment and continuing care for diabetes sufferers is provided throughout the country by general practitioners and diabetic centres. Information on cost is not collected centrally.

Intervention Butter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to offer NHS trusts advice on the sale of EEC intervention butter in out-patients' and visitors' buffets and coffee shops.

Mr. Sackville: None. Advice on the European Community regulations relating to supply of subsidised butter to hospitals and other organisations through the EEC Intervention Board is set out in the board's leaflet, LP18.

GP Administration Costs

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hours have been spent per general practitioner on administration (a) in each year since 1979 and (b) in each of those years when surveys have been undertaken.

Mr. Malone: The full-year results of the 1992–93 survey of general practitioner's work load will be made available shortly. It will contain the most recent information on time spent on practice administration.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which countries have set up compensation programmes for people developing Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease caused by human growth hormone.

Mr. Sackville: I understand that the French Government have offered to compensate families of children treated with growth hormone between January 1984 and May 1985 who contracted Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease provided they agree not to proceed with the litigation over the treatment programme. The extent to which this offer was taken up is not known. In the United Kingdom, the treatment was provided in good faith and conformed with the best known scientific and medical advice available at that time. In the circumstances, compensation is not appropriate without proof of negligence.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health with whom junior hospital doctors will make their contracts following the reform of the health authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The Government intend that the training programmes of registrars and senior registrars and, in future, those of doctors in the proposed new unified training grade, will be managed at regional level by postgraduate medical deans. Discussions continue with postgraduate deans and with the medical profession more widely on the appropriate locus for employment contracts.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for her Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has spent the following amounts, in 1994 prices, from running costs on consultancy since its establishment as a separate Department.

1991–92: £26,007,000
1992–93: £18,977,000
1993–94: £15,933,037

The Department is unable to separately identify those savings that were made as a direct result of consultancy expenditure.

Physical Punishment (Children)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to respond to the report of the United Nations committee on implementation of the UN convention on the rights of the child regarding her policies with regard to the physical punishment of children; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rwanda

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of (a) France and (b) other EU countries in respect of (i) the establishment of normal political and commercial relations with the Government of Rwanda and (ii) granting permission to the new Government of Rwanda to draw on loan facilities offered by the Bretton Woods institutions.

Mr. Baldry: It is not for the British Government to explain the policies of other European countries.

Zaire

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about current EU relations with Zaire; and if Governments of the United States, Belgium and France still agree on how to take forward the troika negotiations with Zaire which they have been conducting on behalf of the OECD countries.

Mr. Baldry: The European Union continues to attach great importance to progress in Zaire towards democracy, greater respect for human rights and economic reconstruction. I understand that the informal co-ordination of policy towards Zaire between the United States, Belgium and France continues.

Russia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed human rights in Russia with the Russian Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: We and our partners in the European Union have made clear to the Russian Government our concerns about violations of human rights following their military intervention in Chechnya. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed this with Foreign Minister Kozyrev most recently by telephone on 19 January, and will have another opportunity when he meets him in Stockholm on 14 February. We have encouraged the Russians to accept assistance of the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe in finding a solution in Chechnya, and one of the focuses of its attention will be human rights issues.

Social Development Summit

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria will govern his decision on who will represent his Department at the world summit for social development in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Baldry: A final decision on attendance at the summit will be taken nearer the date.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support the inclusion of a new commitment on health and education in the programme of action for the world summit on social development as proposed by the G7 at the final PrepCom in New York in January.

Mr. Baldry: We welcome the proposal for a new commitment on education, which may include health issues. The final text of this commitment will be negotiated during the summit.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to strengthen the commitment relating to debt relief in the programme of action for the world summit on social development, with particular reference to multilateral debt relief.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom sees debt relief as an important factor in alleviating poverty and will continue to work for improved references in the documentation in line with UK policy initiatives.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Goodlad: A full list of public bodies for which the FCO retains responsibility is published in the index to "Public Bodies 1994".

It was announced in the Queen's Speech on 16 November 1994 that the Government plan to introduce legislation in the current Session of Parliament to transfer the Crown Agents to the private sector. It is expected that the transfer will be completed within a few months of the Bill receiving Royal Assent.

In addition, the Natural Resources Institute, currently an agency of the Overseas Development Administration, has been identified as a candidate for transfer of ownership to the private sector.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if United Kingdom sales of arms to Indonesia meet the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe principles on arms sales; and if those principles were agreed by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes. The principles governing arms transfers agreed by the forum for security co-operation of the Conference for Security and Co-operation in Europe in November 1993 are among the criteria we consider in examining applications for licences to export defence equipment.

Mr. Sergei Kovalev

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will consult the Russian Government in respect of its policy towards Mr. Sergei Kovalev, Russia's human rights ombudsman.

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will have the opportunity to discuss a wide range of issues, including human rights questions, when he meets Foreign Minister Kozyrev in Stockholm on 14 February.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's ambassador to Russia last met Mr. Sergei Kovalev, Russia's human rights ombudsman, to discuss human rights.

Mr. David Davis: Her Majesty's ambassador to Russia last met Mr. Sergei Kovalev on 31 January 1995.

Gibraltar

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice has been given by Gibraltar's customs, port and police authorities to ship's masters whose transhipments within Gibraltar's waters were illegal under the imports and export ordinance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: Ship's masters are informed that it is an offence to trans-ship goods without the prior permission of the Customs Department, and that offences are liable to heavy penalties and imprisonment.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking with the Spanish authorities on their advice to ship's masters to ignore the attempts by the customs, port and police authorities endeavours to enforce the imports and exports ordinance within Gibraltar's waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: In the wake of two recent incidents, we believe that the Spanish authorities are fully aware of the requirements of the imports and exports ordinance, and of Gibraltar's determination that it shall be enforced.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Goodlad: The table shows the relevant information for expenditure on external consultants by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic and aid wings in 1992–93 and 1993–94 and estimated expenditure in 1994–95 as at 31 December 1994.[1]

Similar information on expenditure from 1987 to 1991, and quantified annual cost savings resulting from expenditure on external consultants since 1987, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

[1]Most of the expenditure by the aid wing has been incurred on the engagement of consultants under the overseas aid programme.

£ million

	Diplomatic wing	Aid wing
1992–93	13.2	107
1993–94	14.2	252
1994–95 (to 31 December 1994)	9.7	257

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Quotas

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the balance of Hague preference losses and gains in terms of fish quota accruing to the United Kingdom for each of the years 1995, 1994 and 1993.

Mr. Jack: The overall balance was a net United Kingdom loss of 525 tonnes in 1993 and a loss of 1,285 tonnes in 1994. Figures for 1995 will depend on the agreement to be reached with Norway on total allowance catches for jointly managed stocks in the North sea. This agreement is due before the end of March 1995. The application of Hague preference before 1993 resulted in significant net gains for the United Kingdom.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the losses of quota from the United Kingdom due to application of the Hague preference on fish stocks in the sector VII(a) of the Irish sea in 1995.

Mr. Jack: As a result of the application of Hague preference in the Irish sea—area VII(a)—the United Kingdom's 1995 share of the quota allocation for cod, whiting and plaice was reduced by 2,210 tonnes.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is undertaking into the spread of sheep scab in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: Official records on the number of sheep scab outbreaks are not available following the deregulation of sheep scab controls in April 1992. Unofficial reports indicate it has been found in every county in Britain.

A surveillance exercise at markets carried out in March 1994 by the state veterinary service found 177 batches of sheep in which sheep scab was suspected at 869 market days surveyed; this exercise will be repeated this spring.

Official veterinary presence at sheep markets was significantly increased on 1 September 1994. Since that, date, 2,086 market visits have resulted in 326 cases of suspected sheep scab being detected.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations his Department has received on the subject of (a) sheep scab and (b) organophosphate sheep dips in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The Department has continued to receive a number of representations on both subjects in the past 12 months.

In response to representations on the increasing incidence of sheep scab early last year, a surveillance exercise was carried out by the state veterinary service at markets and sales in March 1994. While the results were not conclusive, they indicated that a minority of farmers were failing to keep their flocks free from scab and that the number of infested sheep had increased. A substantial publicity campaign was therefore carried out last autumn to encourage farmers to treat their sheep for scab. In addition, the official vet presence at markets was significantly increased; animals suspected of scab infestation are being withdrawn from sale and treated and the owner risks prosecution. A further surveillance exercise in markets and sales by the state veterinary service is planned for the spring of 1995 to measure the impact of the stricter market enforcement measures and of the publicity campaign.

Representations have also included concerns about the possible human health effects arising from the use of organophosphorous sheep dips. The safety of these products was reviewed by the independent veterinary product committee 1993. It concluded that there was no scientific justification for banning OP sheep dips, but they must be used correctly, and that includes the wearing of appropriate protective clothing. The Government accepted the VPC's recommendations, one element of which was the introduction of a certificate of competence scheme for those wishing to continue to purchase OP sheep dips, aimed at improving awareness of the safety precautions to be taken when using these products. From 1 April 1995 therefore, sale and supply of OP sheep dips will be restricted to those holding certificates or their representatives.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 643, what plans he has to make those responsible for exporting consignments of livestock obliged to provide information about deaths of animals in transit.

Mrs. Browning: We do not consider that such an obligation would produce worthwhile information.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what requirements he has placed upon the merchant bankers that he has appointed to advise on the privatisation of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in respect of the assessment of the forecast made available to them by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service board.

Mr. Waldegrave: Charterhouse Bank Ltd. has been asked to advise on a range of possible options for the future of ADAS. It will, inter alia, consider and advise on any financial projections submitted by the ADAS board.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made as to (a) the level of staff cuts and (b) other measures that will be necessary to ensure the commercial feasibility of a privatised Agricultural Development Advisory Service.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since no decisions have yet been taken on privatisation, no such assessments have been made.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the report by Charterhouse Bank Ltd. on possible options for the privatisation of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service to be published; and if he will place it in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: Charterhouse is expected to report in February. The report will not be published.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of Government expenditure to date on the report by Charterhouse Bank Ltd. on possible options for the privatisation of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service.

Mr. Waldegrave: Details of individual contracts are a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information and documentation has been supplied by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service to Charterhouse Bank Ltd. to enable it to meet its remit to examine the commercial background of the agency.

Mr. Waldegrave: Charterhouse representatives have had extensive with ADAS Directors and have visited three ADAS offices. Information has been supplied as requested.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made as to which of the assets presently owned by his Department would be eligible for transferral into the private sector as a consequence of the privatisation of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service.

Mr. Waldegrave: The assets that might be transferred will depend on the future needs of the Ministry and would need to be discussed with the purchaser. The Ministry will, of course, take account of any legal restrictions on disposal.

Ante-mortem Inspections

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Ministry's policy of using only veterinary surgeons for ante-mortem inspections accords precisely with the practice followed in all the other EU member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: We have decided that the meat hygiene service, when it is launched in April, should be allowed to make use of experienced meat inspectors acting under the responsibility of the official veterinary surgeon to assist with the ante-mortem inspection of young animals. The OVS will be required personally to inspect all adult animals and casualty animals, and any other animals detained by the meat inspector for veterinary examination.

We believe that these arrangements will be consistent with the practice in several other member states. All EU member states, including the United Kingdom, accept the principle of veterinary responsibility for hygiene and inspection of fresh meat. Some member states use veterinary surgeons for all meat hygiene and inspection work.

Public Bodies

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which quangos his Department has abolished since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1994, column 311]: I regret that some of the information provided in my answer of 24 November 1994 to this question was inaccurate. A revised list showing non-departmental public bodies abolished, or reclassified, between 1979 and 1993 is as follows. This has been checked as thoroughly as possible without incurring disproportionate cost.

Public bodies abolished since 1979

1979

1. Advisory Council for Agriculture and Horticulture in England and Wales.
2. Farm Settlements Advisory Committee for Selection of Tenants.
3. Plant Variety Rights Advisory Panels (12).

3. Area VII White Fish Industry Advisory Committee (change of status).

1993

1. Steering Group on Chemical Aspects of Food Surveillance (reclassified).

2. Banana Trade Advisory Committee.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons Officers Association

13. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the agenda for his next meeting with the Prison Officers Association.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend met the Prison Officers Association on Thursday 26 January. No further meeting has been requested.

Identity Cards

14. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his plans for the introduction of a national system of identity cards.

Mr. Howard: We plan to publish a Green Paper on identity cards in spring which will set out options for a national identity card scheme and invite views upon them. We will consider the way forward in the light of the comments we receive.

Prisons Service (Morale)

15. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the current staff morale in the Prison Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Whenever I have visited a Prison Service establishment I have been impressed by the dedication and enthusiasm of the staff who do a difficult job well.

Pornography

16. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking against computer-generated pornography.

Mr. Maclean: New powers have been taken in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, including extending the law on child pornography to cover computer-simulated images and ensuring that computer transmissions are covered by the Obscene Publications Act 1959.

Bail (Reoffenders)

17. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in taking measures to deal with those who offend while on bail.

Mr. Maclean: We expect to bring into force within the next two months the provisions in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act which are designed to tackle the problem of offending on bail. We have also made sure that the courts have the powers they need to deal more severely with those who offend on bail.

Crime, Merseyside

18. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to visit Merseyside in the near future to discuss levels of crime.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to visit Merseyside in the near future but hope to do so later in the year. Levels of crime would be among the subjects for discussion, as would the measures the Government have put in place to tackle crime.

Closed Circuit Television

19. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of closed circuit television in combating crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Research, and evidence from local schemes, has shown that closed circuit television can be extremely effective both in preventing crime and in helping to convict criminals. My Department is currently carrying out a further evaluation of the effectiveness of town centre CCTV schemes with a view to identifying best practice.

Police Custody (Deaths)

20. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths in police custody are being investigated by the Police Complaints Authority; how many of them have occurred in the last six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: At the end of January this year, the Police Complaints Authority was supervising the investigation of 30 deaths in police custody. Of these, 27 had occurred in the last six months.

The term "death in police custody" includes, for these purposes, any death which occurred in the presence of the police, whether or not the deceased was under arrest or in a police station at the time, and which has been referred to the Police Complaints Authority because it may give rise to public concern.

IRA Terrorists

21. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted Irish Republican Army terrorists have been transferred to complete their sentences in Northern Ireland prisons since 31 August 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since 31 August 1994, two prisoners convicted of terrorist offences have been granted permanent transfers to Northern Ireland to complete their sentences. These transfer will be effected as soon as operational and security considerations allow. In addition, four prisoners convicted of terrorist offences were temporarily transferred to Northern Ireland on 1 September 1994 to receive visits.

Police Funding

22. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from chief constables with regard to the impact of the grants formula for policing on police numbers.

Mr. Maclean: Nineteen chief constables have made representations.

Prison Discipline

23. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to improve the disciplinary regime in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am currently considering the prison disciplinary system and expect to reach conclusions shortly.

Prisoner Categorisation

24. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure the correct categorisation of prisoners.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The criterion and procedures to be used in decisions on categorisation are set out in circular instruction 7/1988 and the Prison Service manual on security, copies of which are available in the Library. Security category assessment is a continuous responsibility of Prison Service staff both at establishments for prisoners categorised B, C and D, and at headquarters for category A prisoners.

Sussex Police

25. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the proposed funding for Sussex police.

Mr. Maclean: For 1995–96, £145.78 million will be available to Sussex police. That is an increase of £14.2 million, or 10.8 per cent., over 1994–95. In addition, the police authority has been allocated £7.62 million for building projects and the purchase of equipment.

On top of all that, the way in which police grant has been calculated for 1995–96 means that Sussex will not have to find a further sum to pay for common police services such as the police national computer. For 1994–95, that is costing Sussex £1.14 million.

These significant increases in resources will help Sussex police to continue their excellent performance.

Electoral Register

26. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary State for the Home Department what steps he taking to increase the numbers on the electoral register.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The vast majority of eligible people are included in the register. The Government run television advertising campaigns to encourage people to register to vote, and we also give advice on best practice to electoral registration officers based on annual research.

Public Houses

27. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to public house licensing hours on week days; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am considering arguments both for and against some relaxation in the licensing hours for public houses on weekday evenings. No conclusions have yet been reached.

Safer Cities

28. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities in respect of the future of safer cities projects.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Middlesex Probation Service

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes are to be made in the Middlesex probation service following the 1994 Budget statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The 1994 Budget Statement will result in a specific grant cash limit for 1995–96 for the Middlesex probation service of £12.9 million plus a further £0.6 million to support probation service partnerships with the independent sector previously funded separately by the Home Office. It will be for the Middlesex probation committee to decide what specific changes within the service should be undertaken on the basis of the total expenditure limit implied by this level of grant support.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were employed and at what grade by the Middlesex probation service, on 30 June 1992, 30 June 1993 and 30 June 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information is given in the table:

Staff employed by the Middlesex probation service, in post at 30 June, whole-time equivalent[1], by grade and type.

Number of staff, whole time equivalent

	30 June 1992	30 June 1993	30 June 1994
Probation Officers
Chief	1	1	1
Deputy Chief	2	2	2
Assistant Chef	7	8	8
Senior	42	41	41
Main grade	202	212	214
Total probation officers	254	264	266
Non-probation grade staff
Probation Services' Officers[2]	54	53	57
Clerical/secretarial	127	138	137
Administrative	38	45	46
Other non-probation grade staff, excluding hostel staff[3]	30	24	25
Hostel staff	13	15	15
Total non-probation grade staff	262	276	279
Total probation staff	516	540	545

[1] Whole-time staff plus whole-time equivalent of part time staff. Figures rounded to the nearest whole number. Components and totals are rounded independently and so components may not add precisely to totals.

[2] Formerly ancillaries.

[3] Figures include sessional supervisors on community service schemes, staff employed in student training units and on miscellaneous functions.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many court reports were compiled by Middlesex probation service during 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Middlesex probation service completed 8,382 pre-sentence reports, social inquiry reports, family court reports and other reports for courts in 1992 and 8,607 reports in 1993.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders were supervised by Middlesex probation service on 30 June 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The latest available information is for December 1993, when the number of offenders supervised by Middlesex probation service was 5,227. This is on the basis of the information published annually in probation statistics—table 12.1 of the 1993 issue—and excludes offenders on community service orders.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes were made in respect of the Middlesex probation service following the November 1993 Budget statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The 1993 Budget statement resulted in a specific grant cash limit for 1994–95 for the Middlesex probation service of £13.1 million, 6.8 per cent. higher than for 1993–94. It was for the Middlesex probation committee to decide what specific changes within the service should be undertaken on the basis of this level of grant support. The committee's report covering the current financial year will be available from the secretary in due course.

Exclusion Orders

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently subject to exclusion orders under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts; what is the name and nationally of each such person; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: A total of 66 persons are currently subject to exclusion orders under the Prevention of Terrorism Act, of whom 14 are excluded from the United Kingdom. Fifty from Great Britain and two from Northern Ireland. It is not the practice to identify those excluded. All those subject to orders are believed to be citizens of this country or the Irish Republic, or both, but more detailed information is not available.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Howard: Information on expenditure on all external consultants let by the Home Office during the period specified is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from local authorities over the announcement of section 11 bids; what reports he has received about the timing of his announcement on local authority budget making and employment contract obligations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Various local authority representatives have made clear their concern about budgetary timetables and the contractual position of staff. That is why we are maintaining our target of announcing the results of the bidding round by the end of February, despite extending the bidding period by a month, as stated in my reply to the hon. Member of 17 January, Official Report, column 382.

Metropolitan Police Committee

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the membership of the Metropolitan police committee; and what are the terms of reference of the new committee.

Mr. Howard: Following consultation with the chairman Sir John Quinton, I have today appointed the following as members of the Metropolitan police committee:

Miss M. V. Callaghan
Mr. T. Chan
Mr. M. J. Hastings
Counsellor M. Heaster
Major General M. P. J. Hunt
Counsellor Mrs. M. A. O'Neill

Mrs. S. Sadeque
Mr. M. Souhami
Mr. I. S. Uppal
Mr. R. J. Watts
Ms R. E. Whittaker

The committee will formally take up its duties on 1 April. Its task is to advise me in relation to the discharge of certain of my functions as police authority for the Metropolitan police. The functions in question are based on those which, outside London, are the responsibility of the police authorities established under the Police Act 1964, as amended by the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994. In particular, the Metropolitan police committee will be required to advise me about: establishing priorities for policing, in consultation with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and local communities, particularly the consultative bodies established under section 106 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984; approval and publication of an annual costed plan for policing designed to achieve both the objectives set for police forces outside London under section 28A of the Police Act 1964 and those I have approved for the Metropolitan police district; monitoring by reference to the policing plan the financial and other performance of the Metropolitan police during the year; considering proposals for expenditure which require my approval; and publication of annual performance results in a standard form to allow comparison of performance against other forces.

The Metropolitan police committee will be required to advise me on other matters relating to the Metropolitan police as necessary.

Mr. Quddus Ali

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about the investigation of the assault upon Mr. Quddus Ali, including details of admissions to taking part in the attack, what the police did with such admissions; what representations have been received about the police handling of this case; and if he will make a statement upon this.

Mr. Maclean: The Commissioner has kept my right hon. learned Friend informed of the police investigation into the assault upon Mr. Quddus Ali. My right hon. learned Friend has received a number of representations, including a petition of local residents.

Police Paperwork

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to reduce the volume of paperwork involved for the police in processing cases; and what consideration has been given to creating software for use on personal computers to ease this burden.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have set up an efficiency scrutiny, which is examining the administrative burdens faced by the police in the context of their role in the criminal justice system as a whole. The scrutiny aims to build on existing initiatives, including those arising out of a study carried out in 1993 by external consultants. The consultants' report, "Opportunities for Reducing Administrative Burdens on the Police", made 16 detailed recommendations, all of which were accepted by the Government. Good progress has been made in all areas.

As recommended by that report, standard computer systems for all forces will be developed under the terms of the national strategy for police information systems, which my right hon. and learned Friend launched last November. A standard case processing system is among the highest priorities for development under the terms of the strategy.

Electric Shock Equipment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 152, (1) if he will take steps to ensure that electric shock equipment will never be used against members of the public;

(2) what police forces in the United Kingdom have applied to his Department for permission to hold or use electro-shock equipment;

(3) in what circumstances electro-shock equipment would be used against the civilian population;

(4) if he will list the police forces which possess electro-shock shields and prods for use against ferocious dogs;

(5) on what occasions electro-shock equipment has been used anywhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: It is for chief officers of police to ensure that the electric shock equipment which their forces may possess for use against ferocious dogs is not used against members of the public. No police force has asked for the permission of my right hon. and learned Friend to hold or use such equipment: there is no requirement for them to do so, except in the case of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I am sure that no police force in this country would use such equipment against people. Information about which forces possess electric shock equipment for use against ferocious dogs is not available within the Home Office. I understand that the Association of Chief Police Officers is currently gathering information on this subject. It is for chief officers of police to decide how best to protect their officers against physical attack.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeal Panel

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many members of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeal Panel he expects to appoint;

(2) how many of the nominees for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeal Panel have been (a) rejected and (b) appointed; and if he will list the names and sources of nomination of the appointees so far;

(3) how many nominations he received for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeals Panel; and from which sources these nominations came.

Mr. Maclean [holding answers 6 February 1995]: We expect in due course to appoint between 40 and 50 members to the appeals panel.

We have received 212 nominations from the following sources:

Source	Number
Public Appointments Unit (OPSS)	40
British Medical Association	15
British Dental Association	1
Trades Union Congress	12
Chief Whip's Office	6
Victim Support	2
Department of Health	19
Welsh Office	7
Self-nomination	110

The following have so far been appointed to the panel:

Name	Source of nomination
Chairman
Mr. M. Lewer QC	Existing Member of CICB
Members
Sir Derek Bradbeer OBE	Existing Member of CICB
Mr. D. J. Brown	Public Appointments Unit
Miss D Cotton QC	Existing Member of CICB
Mr. K. Drummond QC	Existing Member of CICB
Dr. A. Fingret	Public Appointments Unit
Mr. D. J. L. Gabbitass	Public Appointments Unit
Dr. H. E. Godfrey	British Medical Association
Mr. F. J. Howard	Trades Union Congress
Mr. J. Leighton Williams QC	Existing Member of CICB
Ms G. Lindley	Public Appointments Unit
Mr. C. Lindsey QC	Existing Member of CICB
Mr. H. Lumsden	Public Appointments Unit
Lord Macaulay of Bragar QC	Existing Member of CICB
Mr. D. S. Mackay QC	Existing Member of CICB
Mr. H. J. Malins	Public Appointments Unit
Mr. J. R. Miles	Self nomination
Mr. T. A. Molloy	Trades Union Congress
Mr. M. Park CBE	Existing Member of CICB

No nominations have been formally rejected, but no further appointments will be made until the final outcome of the legal challenge to the tariff scheme is known.

EDUCATION

College Buildings

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans she has to provide funds for the maintenance of college buildings, in response to the report of the Further Education Funding Council;

(2) what response she has made to the finding in the Further Education Funding Council's report on the extent of hutted accommodation;

(3) what is her response to the findings of the Further Education Funding Council on the necessity for major and minor building programmes for colleges.

Mr. Boswell: Capital investment in the further education sector has more than doubled since colleges left local authority control, and we have taken steps to increase it still further. In 1992–93—the last year of their control—local authorities spent £102 million. In 1993–94, the Further Education Funding Council and colleges spent £224 million, to which the Department contributed £152 million. We contributed £157 million in 1994–95, and plan to contribute £159 million in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98. From April, colleges will be able to use their capital allocations to service loans or other finance raised from the private sector, as well as to incur direct expenditure. This will permit another substantial increase in their capital programmes.

Disabled People

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has for initiatives to encourage colleges to provide learning support and specialist advice for people with physical disabilities.

Mr. Boswell: There are already comprehensive provisions in the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 to ensure that the Further Education Funding Council and Local Education Authorities take into account the support and advice needs of students with learning difficulties and disabilities. Nevertheless, the Government are committed to reviewing the provisions for SLDD in further education in the light of their new policies on disability. In doing so, the Government will look at the availability of advice to people with disabilities.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to encourage colleges to monitor their equal opportunities policies.

Mr. Boswell: The charter for further education emphasises the importance of equal opportunities policies in FE sector colleges, and makes it clear that students have a right to expect colleges to explain what they are doing to foster equal opportunities. Within this framework, colleges are responsible for the day-to-day management of their affairs.

Teachers (Administration Duties)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she will take to ensure that teachers spend less time on administration.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for teachers, under the direction of head teachers, to manage their own workload. The Government have taken steps to reduce the burden imposed by the national curriculum and assessment.

College Library Books

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make it her policy to increase the provision of college library books in line with the increases in student numbers.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council has developed a new funding methodology after wide consultation; its proposals gained a high degree of acceptance. The new methodology provides a direct link between funding and the numbers of students recruited and retained. Allocations to colleges are made monthly as a block grant, and colleges are free to determine how best to use the resources made available to them.

Science Subject Exams

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration she has given to the introduction of a stronger vocational element in the GCSE, GCE and Business and Technician Education Council science subjects.

Mr. Boswell: We have set in place a new qualifications framework comprising general education qualifications—GCE A-levels and GCSE, general vocational qualifications—GNVQs, and occupationally specific qualifications—NVQs. GNVQs are becoming well established as a regular vocational alternative to general educational qualifications, with comparability at the appropriate level. Science GNVQs are now widely available post-16 at intermediate level and advanced level and are being piloted at foundation level. BTEC is one of the three GNVQ awarding bodies.

Staff Development

Mr. Jim Cunningham : To ask the Secretary of State for Education what priorities she attaches to staff development in colleges, and what assessment she has made of disparities of funding in this area, region by region.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend attaches great importance to staff development in colleges. The new Further Education Development Agency will have a major role in improving management training and development for college staff. It is, of course, for colleges to determine the level of resources they allocate to staff development in the light of their individual circumstances. The funding of FE colleges is a matter for the Further Education Funding council.

A preliminary review of occupations in the further education sector and closely related areas is being undertaken during the first half of 1995. The outcome of the review will help inform decisions on possible future lead body arrangements and the development of national vocational qualifications for college staff.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she will take to lessen the drop-out rate on the GNVQ courses, to ensure documentation arrives on time, and that the documentation is written in clear English to the GNVQ specifications.

Mr. Boswell: Such evidence as we have to date suggests that the rate of non-completion of GNVQ courses is not a cause for special concern. We, together with the vocational awarding bodies and the National Council for Vocational Qualifications, shall continue to monitor the situation.

We have asked the NCVQ and the vocational awarding bodies to take action to improve the timeliness and clarity of the relevant documentation. We understand that they are pursuing these matters urgently.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans she has to inspect the NVQ training provided by private companies and employers' in-house training schemes;

(2) what steps she will take to reduce teaching discrepancies in the NVQ training around the country.

Mr. Boswell: NVQs are primarily the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications has overall responsibility for assuring the quality of NVQs. The Government will provide additional funding to enable the national council to employ a local field force to give added impetus to quality assurance.

The quality of NVQ provision in colleges of further education is subject to inspection by the FEFC inspectorate, along with other courses provided in colleges.

Teachers' Pay Increases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the total cost to each local education authority and nationally of the teachers' pay increases in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and of a 2.7 per cent. increase in 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table below sets out the cost of updating the 1992–93 expenditure recorded by LEAs in England for teaching staff salaries in nursery, primary, secondary, and special schools by the teachers' pay awards of 1.5 per cent in 1993, 2.9 per cent. in 1994 and 2.7 per cent. in 1995 to arrive at the notional cost of the increases in 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96. The 1992–93 expenditure figures are the latest available for LEA-maintained schools. The figures in the table take no account of changes in teaching numbers or other factors that affect the teachers' pay bill.

Nursery Education

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much Government proposals on the provision of nursery education will cost (a) nationally and (b) in Norfolk.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has been consulting widely before drawing up detailed proposals on my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's commitment to provide, over time, a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish to take it up. The cost will be determined as part of this work.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many year and four-year-olds there are in nursery schools in each local education authority in England; and what percentage this represents of the population in those age groups for the latest figures available.

Mr. Forth: Information about the number of pupils under five years of age being taught in maintained nursery schools in each local education authority area in England in January 1994 is shown in the table.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are her latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for her Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Boswell: The figures requested, at 1994 prices, are as a follows:

Year	£
1987	502,221
1988	569,882
1989	673,650
1990	1,096,699
1991	1,597,599
1992	2,012,962
1993	1,629,000
1994	1,800,000

The information is not readily available to enable resultant cost savings to be calculated.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of state for education how many schools became grant maintained in each local education authority in England in each school year from 1989–90 and in 1994–95 to date.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out in the table.

Access Funds

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she will list (a) at current prices and (b) in cash terms the allocation of access funds to each further education institution in each year since 1992–93;

(2) if she will list the total number of students in receipt of access funds of each further education institution in each year since 1992–93.

Mr. Boswell: I will write to the hon. Member shortly with the information requested.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average cost per pupil in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for (i) teaching staff, (ii) books, (iii) equipment and (iv) premises refurbishment, as estimated by the Government, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows LEA expenditure per pupil in pre-primary, primary and secondary schools on (i) teaching staff, (ii) books and equipment combined, and (iii) repairs and maintenance. Figures disaggregating expenditure on books and equipment are not collected. Equivalent information on grant-maintained schools is not available.

[1] provisional—figures include unchecked data on 85 LEAs and estimated figures for 24 LEAs.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average cost per pupil in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for (i) teaching staff, (ii) books, (iii) equipment and (iv) premises refurbishment, estimated for each local education authority in the last two years.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have placed tables in the Library showing LEA expenditure per pupil in pre-primary, primary and secondary schools on, (i) teaching staff, (ii) books and equipment combined, and (iii) repairs and maintenance. Information is given for 1991–92 and 1992–93, the latest year for which final figures for each LEA are available. Figures disaggregating expenditure on books and equipment are not collected. Equivalent information on grant-maintained schools is not available.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average cost per pupil in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools of meeting the requirements of the national curriculum for each year since 1989.

Mr. Forth: Schools meet the requirements of the national curriculum largely from within their own unhypothecated resources. Central Government expenditure specifically on the implementation of the national curriculum in the financial years in question has been:

£ million

	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95[1]
Expenditure	90	99	131	140	141	127
Expenditure per pupil	15	17	22	23	23	22

[1]Estimate

Most of this expenditure has been in the form of grants for education support and training and, to a much lesser extent, grants to the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority and its predecessors: it is not possible to separate out this expenditure as between primary and secondary education other than pro rata to pupil numbers.

Further Education Funding

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total allocation of funds from the European social fund under objective 3 to ruther education colleges in 1994; and what was the total allocation for each region designated by the Further Education Funding Council.

Mr. Boswell: The total allocation of funds from the European social fund under objective 3 to further education colleges in England in the calendar year 1994 was £43.503 million. The total allocation for each region was:

	£ millions
East Midlands	3.349
Eastern	2.725
London	6.866
Northern	4.790
North west	6.267
South east	3.165
South west	3.060
West Midlands	7.340
Yorkshire and Humberside	5.941

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many colleges of further education have been visited by the Further Education Funding Council's audit service; and how many of these were found to have unreliable internal audit systems.

Mr. Boswell: The questions raised by the hon. Member are matters for the funding council. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total allocation of funds from the European social fund under objective 3 to further education colleges in the last three years for which figures are available in (a) cash prices and (b) current prices.

Mr. Boswell: The total allocation of funds from the European social fund under objective 3 to further education colleges in England in the last three calendar years for which figures are available, in cash and current prices, is:

Year	Cash prices £ million	1995–96 prices £ million
1993	41.783	44.004
1994	43.503	44.917
1995	44.030	44.030

Assisted Places

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current average cost per pupil under the assisted places scheme for 1993–94 for each participating school in the scheme in Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested, which relates to the academic year 1993–94, is given in the table:

School name	Average cost per assisted pupil £
Dame Allan's Boys	2,239
Dame Allan's Girls	2,507
Central Newcastle High	2,267
La Sagesse Convent	2,962
Newcastle upon Tyne Church High	2,194
Royal Grammar, Newcastle	2,182

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the marginal tax rate implied by the withdrawal of support against income under the assisted places scheme means test; and when the means test scheme was last revised.

Mr. Robin Squire: Parents whose incomes are above the threshold for full fee remission—currently £9,352 for academic year 1994–95—are required to pay a proportion of their income towards assisted place fees in accordance with a parental contribution scale. The scale has six successive income bands, and three percentage rates in each band according to the number of children holding assisted places in the family. For 1994–95, the lowest percentage required in respect of one assisted place holder is 9 per cent. of the income in the first tranche above the threshold. The corresponding percentages in the successively higher income bands are 12 per cent., 15 per cent., 21 per cent., 24 per cent. and 33 per cent.—the later percentage applying to that part of income exceeding £18,183.

Parental contribution scales are reviewed annually. The uprating proposed for academic year 1995–96 compared with 1994–95 is set out in the answer given to the hon. Member for Bury St Edmunds (Mr. Spring) on 26 January, Official Report, columns 316-17.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 219, if she will make a statement indicating for the financial year 1993–94 for each school covered by the assisted places scheme which is not covered in that answer in descending order the amounts which each school received, the number of pupils covered by the assisted places scheme at each school, the proportion of the school roll covered by the assisted places scheme and the fees charged for assisted places scheme pupils at each school.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 26 January 1995]: The information requested, as collected for the academic year 1993–94, has been placed in the Library.

Inflation

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her Department's estimate of inflation for education costs in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: No such estimate is made by the Department.

National Curriculum

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff are employed to formulate the national curriculum and at what cost.

Mr. Forth: Formulating, and monitoring, the national curriculum in England is the responsibility of the Schools Curriculum and Assessment Authority. The SCAA advises the Secretary of State for Education on all aspects of the school curriculum, not just the national curriculum, and of school examinations and assessment. The SCAA employs 200 staff at a staff cost of £5.8 million—1994–95 estimate. It is not possible accurately to apportion these staff between their work on the national curriculum and their other work.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils were in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in England and Wales for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The numbers of pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in January for years 1985 to 1994 are shown in the table. Pupil numbers in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools in England

Further Education

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in how many cases, and in which local education authorities the Education Assets Board has been called in to determine the ownership of land or assets following the transfer of further education institutions from local authority to Further Education Funding Council control.

Mr. Boswell: The Education Assets Board has determined, or is determining, 99 disputes involving the transfer of land or other property from 44 local education authorities to colleges in the further education sector.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what grounds the Education Assets Board is required to consider when making decisions about the transfer of assets from a local authority to institutions funded by the Further Education Funding Council.

Mr. Boswell: Under schedule 5 to the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the Education Assets Board may determine disputes about the transfer of property only where it appears unlikely that agreement will be reached, or where agreement has not been reached within a prescribed period.

The board may determine whether assets were being used or held for the purposes of the institution on the transfer date, or whether they were being used or held for other purposes of the authority. In the first case, the assets will have transferred to the institution on the transfer date, in the second they will have remained the property of the authority.

If the board determines that assets were used or held partly for the purposes of the institution and partly for other purposes of the authority, the board must, where the nature of the property permits, divide or apportion the assets in such proportion as may be appropriate. Where division or apportionment is not feasible, the board must direct that the assets be either transferred to the institution or retained by the authority in accordance with the criteria laid down in paragraph 1(3) of schedule 5. In any such case, the board must direct that arrangements be made for the protection of the party who does not keep or receive the assets.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the severance payments made to special advisers in the last five years, indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury gave on 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 69.

WALES

Speech Therapists

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to provide bursaries for postgraduates pursuing two-year courses to qualify as speech therapists.

Mr. Richards: It is for employers to consider whether bursaries for postgraduates are needed to recruit and retain staff.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of speech therapists per head of population in (a) Wales and (b) Clwyd.

Mr. Richards: Provisional figures for 31 December 1994 show that there were 7.5 whole-time equivalent NHS speech therapists per 100,000 population in Clwyd and 6.2 per 100,000 population in Wales as a whole.

Art Collection

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when and where the Welsh Arts Council's art collection is likely to be housed in the immediate future;

(2) what was the total purchase value of the Welsh Arts Council's art collection; and what is its present estimated value;

(3) where the Welsh Arts Council's art collection is currently held;

(4) when the Welsh Arts Council's art collection was last examined for inventory purposes.

Mr. Richards: This is a matter for the Arts Council of Wales, and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Chiropody

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the subject of the provision of chiropody services in (a) Gwynedd and (b) Wales during 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The Welsh Office received 11 representatives about the provision of chiropody services in Wales in 1994, one of which concerned services in Gwynedd.

Housing

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) residential and (b) non-residential properties there are currently in (a) Wales and (b) each Welsh constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on residential properties, for Wales and for district council's, is published in table 1.4 "Welsh Housing Statistics", No. 14, 1994 and on non-residential properties in table 9.1 of "Welsh Local Government Financial Statistics", No. 18, 1994, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Equivalent information for Welsh constituencies is not available.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the percentage of existing residential property built before 1945 for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales and (c) each Welsh constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information for Wales and the United Kingdom is in table 6.3 of "Regional Trends 29", 1994, published by the Central Statistical Office, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Information is not available for each Welsh constituency.

Pensioners

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the population is aged 65 years or over for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales, (c) each Welsh county and (d) each Welsh constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The latest available information for the United Kingdom, Wales and each Welsh county is from the 1993 mid-year estimate and for each constituency from the 1991 census of population, as given in the following tables:

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 747, on what grounds the information requested cannot be provided by the hospitals; and on what grounds the consent of GPs is necessary.

Mr. Richards: The information on waiting times requested is routinely provided by hospitals but, by agreement with the General Medical Services Committee (Wales), data identifying individual GPs or GP practices are not issued or published without their individual consent. As information on average waiting times by general practitioner practice is not regularly published, no steps have been taken to obtain the necessary consents for such publication. To provide the requested information would therefore entail disproportionate costs in obtaining individual consents.

Contagious Epididymitis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the cases of contagious epididymitis in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No cases of contagious epididymitis—B. ovis—have occurred in Wales since 1985.

Departmental Parking Spaces

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) bicycle and (b) car parking spaces there are for use by staff in (i) Gwydyr house office and (ii) Cathays Park office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There are six car parking spaces at Gwydyr house. Welsh Office personnel are also able to park up to seven vehicles in the adjacent MOD car park. There are 47 spaces available for bicycles in that car park.

There are 533 car parking spaces and spaces for 72 bicycles at Cathays Park.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Redwood: Expenditure on management and other consultants engaged by the Welsh Office since 1987–88 is as follows:

	Current prices	1994–95 prices
1987–88	345	494
1988–89	479	643
1989–90	342	429
1990–91	229	266
1991–92	1,109	1,212
1992–93	1,416	1,489
1993–94	1,454	1,483
1994–95[1]	475	475

[1] Year to date.

Information on savings resulting from consultancy work is not recorded centrally.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 423, what further consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency pursuant to the resignation of the executive director, finance; if he will place a copy of his letter to the chairman relating to the breaches of the procurement rules in the Library; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 27 January.

The resignation of the chief finance officer is a separate matter and I understand that his decision was connected with his wish to return to the private sector.

DEFENCE

Winter Training

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what activities are included in winter training.

Mr. Soames: The British Army's winter training exercise includes cross-country skiing, downhill skiing, operating on snow shoes, survival in arctic conditions, live firing in the sub-arctic, tactical training over snow and ice up to unit and force level, logistic support in arctic conditions and maintenance and operation of vehicles, predominantly BV 206s.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's horses have been killed as a result of winter training in the last five years.

Mr. Soames: No horses have been killed as a result of winter training.

Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the collocation of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency.

Mr. Soames: Following issue of a consultative document on 18 October 1994 recommending collocation of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency on a single site, representations were made by trade unions, a number of local authorities, Members of Parliament and an action group based at Colchester. Full and careful consideration was given to all of these representations and the criteria of the original investment appraisal has also been subject to close scrutiny and recalculation where additional relevant factors have been drawn to our attention. Following this work, I am satisfied that the basis of the original recommendation was sound and I have decided to proceed with the collocation of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency on part of the former RAF Bicester site at Caversfield, Bicester. This work will be undertaken in accordance with the phased programme published in the consultative document. We will of course continue to consult staff and trade unions about the detailed implementation of this programme.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the licence number granted by the Medicines Control Agency and who are the listed manufacturers of anthrax vaccine.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

The product licence number of anthrax vaccine is PL 01511/0058. Information about manufacturers can be commercially sensitive and is not normally disclosed. However, in this case I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 995–96.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the savings for the overall reduction in staffing at AWEs.

Mr. Freeman: Estimated savings are expected to rise to some tens of millions of pounds.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for liaising with representatives of the local community regarding the future of AWE Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Liaison with the local community is undertaken by the company managing AWE, Hunting-BRAE. The company will be discussing the consequences of rationalisation with local representatives when its Cardiff liaison committee next meets.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which functions of AWE Burghfield are to be transferred to AWE Aldermaston and which are to be discontinued.

Mr. Freeman: Some work on rubber, plastics, salts, high explosives components and detonators will be transferred from AWE Burghfield to AWE Aldermaston. No functions will be discontinued.

Mr. Mullin : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimated savings from the proposed closures of (a) AWE Cardiff, (b) Foulness and (c) the proposed cuts at Burghfield.

Mr. Freeman: Eventual estimated savings for the proposed closure of AWE Cardiff, for rationalisation of work from AWE Foulness, and for the proposed changes at AWE Burghfield, will be substantial. Costs of the defence nuclear programme have been regarded by successive Governments as inappropriate for public disclosure.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional activities will be carried out by AWE Aldermaston as a result of the recent review.

Mr. Freeman: Some component manufacture, including work on rubber, plastic, salts, high explosives components and detonators, as well as some laboratory work from Foulness, will move to AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual operating cost of AWEs (a) in the year prior to contractorisation and (b) in the year after contractorisation.

Mr. Freeman: The costs of the defence nuclear programme have been regarded by successive Governments as inappropriate for public disclosure. With contractorisation, AWE operating costs have also become commercially sensitive.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for liaising with representatives of the local community regarding the proposed changes at AWE Burghfield and AWE Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Liaison with local communities is undertaken by the company managing AWE, Hunting-BRAE. I understand it is meeting local representatives today.

Polaris

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the running costs at current prices of Polaris for each year since the programme began.

Mr. Soames: The running costs of Polaris from 1991–92, at 1993–94 prices, are as follows:

1991–92: £176,000,000
1992–93: £156,000,000
1993–94: £103,000,000

This includes the costs of manpower, stores and spares, refits and the in-service support of warheads, submarines and their weapons systems. The annual running costs of Polaris since it first entered service could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tornado GRI Aircraft

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average annual running cost of a squadron of Tornado GRI aircraft.

Mr. Soames: The average cost of operating a Tornado GRI squadron, including the variable hourly flying costs and the apportionment of the station's fixed costs and overheads is £71,000,000 per annum.

RAF Running Costs

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the annual running costs of RAF Marham, RAF Honington and RAF Bruggen.

Mr. Soames: The annual running costs, including staff costs, utilities, contract services and property management of RAF Marham, RAF Honington and RAF Bruggen for the last financial year 1993–94 were:

Station	£
Marham	60,200,000
Honington	47,100,000
Bruggen	90,600,000

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) Official Report, column 448, how chemical weapons and munitions disposed of by methods other than being sealed in sunk cargo vessels were disposed of; and at what dates and locations such other methods were used.

Mr. Soames: Surviving records of sea dumping indicate that between July and October 1945 some 14,000 tonnes of 5-in artillery rockets filled with phosgene gas were dumped in Beauforts Dyke explosive dumping ground in the north channel. The munitions, contained within ammunition crates, were jettisoned from vessels and sunk. Current scientific evidence indicates that chemical weapon dump sites present no significant risk to human health or to the marine environment and the living resources it supports. On exposure to sea water, phosgene gas rapidly decomposes to non-toxic compounds through dilution and hydrolysis.

US Reconnaissance Systems

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom has direct access to the information produced by the United States of America satellite reconnaissance system; and what agreements or treaties govern such access.

Mr. Soames: It is not our practice to comment on such matters.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when and in what circumstances United States high altitude long-range reconnaissance aircraft are based in Britain; if new types of such aircraft have been located, or are being considered for location in Britain; and what treaties or agreements authorise any such arrangements.

Mr. Soames: The basing of all United States Air Force aircraft in the United Kingdom is governed by arrangements mutually agreed between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States in accordance with the operational need pertaining at the time. No new types of high-altitude, long-range reconnaissance aircraft have been based or are being considered for basing in the UK.

Equipment Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 25 January, Official Report, column 286, if he will list the changes in accounting conventions relating to the Defence Export Services Organisation.

Mr. Freeman: Receipts from the disposal by sale of equipment belonging to the Royal Navy, British Army and Royal Air Force have been disaggregated from the DESO budget to the relevant service principle accounting officer budgets. Receipts from the disposal for Defence Research Agency equipment have, since the establishment of the agency, also been disaggregated.

Weapons of Mass Destruction

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies are being undertaken with North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies into the risks posed by proliferation of weapons of mass destruction; if these studies include (a) defences against ballistic missiles, (b) defences against theatre missiles and (c) defences against cruise missiles; and what time scale is intended for their completion.

Mr. Soames: At the NATO summit in January 1994, alliance leaders agreed that NATO should develop a policy framework to address the risks posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. The first phase of this work, which assessed the risks posed to the alliance by the proliferation of these weapons, has been completed. This assessment did not examine specific defensive measures, though future work is likely to do so. We hope that significant progress will have been made by the end of this year.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy in respect of the conclusions of the NATO assessment of proliferation risks.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom has welcomed the NATO report on the risks posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their delivery means. We believe that it will form a good basis for the future work of the alliance in addressing risks posed by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

Navy and Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which countries buyers have been, or will be, invited to the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Freeman: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to release details of invitations issued to attend British forces equipment exhibitions. Invitations are issued on a confidential basis and it would be a breach of trust to release details.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition will be held; and on which days it will be open to (a) overseas customers, (b) the press and (c) the public.

Mr. Freeman: The Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition will be held at Pegasus Village, Aldershot, with daily ships visits to Portmouth, from 3 to 10 September 1995. The exhibition will be open to overseas visitors from 4 to 8 September, to the national press on 3 September only, and to the trade press for the whole week. The exhibition is not open to the public. Trade visitors are admitted on 7 and 8 September.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be opening the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Freeman: As with the previous Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition, the opening ceremony is expected to be performed at ministerial level.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Freeman: The cost of the exhibition will not be available until the list of participants has been finalised. There will, however, be no direct cost to the MOD since this will be covered by participating companies.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which categories of guests will be invited to the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Freeman: Invitations to attend the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition are extended to appropriate overseas Government officials and industrialists, members of the United Kingdom national and technical press and British representatives from the trade.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visitors are expected at the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Freeman: Based on the attendance at the previous Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition, between 20,000 and 25,000 visitors are expected to attend.

Army Regiments

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many regiments there are currently in the British Army.

Mr. Soames: There are currently 32 regular and 23 Territorial Army infantry regiments in the British Army.

Land Rovers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the tonnage of Land Rovers currently used by the Army; when they first came into operational use; and what major refurbishments have been carried out on them.

Mr. Soames: The Army currently has three basic Land Rover variants: the half-ton truck utility light, TUL, the three-quarter-ton truck utility medium, TUM, and one ton which is being replaced by the truck utility heavy, TUH, and by the TUM, heavy duty; the replacement is expected to be completed by 1996, when the final buy of TUM, heavy duty, is completed.

In service, the Army currently has the following numbers in each category:

TUL—4,584; this is made up of Land Rover Series III and Land Rover Defender 90 vehicles, all but three of which entered service after 1973.

TUM—10,824; this is made up of Land Rover Series III and Land Rover Defender 110 vehicles, all but five of which entered service after 1973.

1 Tonne—573; all these vehicles are of the one type which initially entered service in 1972.

Apart from routine maintenance, none of these vehicles has been subject to a refurbishment programme. Engines and major assemblies from the vehicles are routinely overhauled and refurbished through the Army base repair organisation.

RB44 Army Light Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RB44 Army light vehicles have been purchased; what was the total cost; and when they became operational.

Mr. Soames: My Department purchased 846 RB44 vehicles from Reynolds Broughton Ltd. at an approximate cost of £24,000,000. First deployment was made in May 1992.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what technical and operational concerns resulted from the trials of the RB44 Army light vehicle at Larkhill; what actions were taken to remedy them; and how much it cost;

(2) what technical and operational difficulties his Department has found with the RB44 Army light vehicle during its operational service;

(3) what plans his Department has for the RB44 Army light vehicle.

Mr. Freeman: During the initial operational deployment to Larkhill a problem associated with the handling of the vehicles while braking was experienced. The manufacturer proposed and demonstrated a modification which was accepted by my Department. The modification was incorporated at the manufacturer's expense. Following acceptance into service there have been further technical problems of a similar nature which are being investigated by my Department in conjunction with the manufacturer. All vehicles have been taken out of service until the problem has been rectified.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Bosnia have involved the RB44; and what was the cause of these accidents.

Mr. Soames: Since its introduction into service, 25 accidents have been reported which have involved the RB44—22 in the UK, two in Bosnia and one in Germany.

Except for one in Bosnia, where a vehicle overturned on a greasy road, all the accidents were of a minor "road traffic" nature. In seven cases, the MOD driver was not at fault, the other 17 can be attributed to driver error.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current position in relation to the RB44 Army light vehicles at Larkhill.

Mr. Soames: There are 33 RB44s currently located at Larkhill. They were issued to meet the approved requirements of the two Royal Artillery units stationed there.

The vehicles are currently out of use while a steering under braking defect is investigated and are subject to appropriate maintenance to ensure they do not deteriorate.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the Army light vehicle capability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Army light vehicle fleet is currently able to meet all its tasks. As a result of "Options for Change", all units have had their vehicle requirements scrutinised to ensure that they are suitable for the units' new roles. A review of future requirements and developments in the light fleet area is currently being undertaken by my Department.

Somalia

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what part United Kingdom naval forces have played in aiding the withdrawal of (a) Indian and (b) Pakistani UN troops from Somalia.

Mr. Soames: Indian UN troops completed their withdrawal from Somalia in December 1994 under their own arrangements. United Kingdom naval forces were not involved. The Royal Navy has deployed a ship to support the withdrawal of the remaining elements of the UN force, including the Pakistani contingent.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what part United Kingdom forces have played in the withdrawal of United Nations troops from Somalia.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 30 January, Official Report, column 545.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what logistical support the United Kingdom is providing for United Nations operations in Somalia.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom has made a ship available to support the operation to withdraw United Nations forces from Somalia. No logistic support is being provided.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice on drug abuse is available to British forces serving in the former Yugoslavia on behalf of the United Nations.

Mr. Soames: All service personnel, wherever they are serving, are aware of the armed forces' policy on the misuse of drugs. Army personnel serving in the former Yugoslavia were informed of the Army's intention to introduce compulsory random testing in January 1995.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the incidence of drug abuse among British forces serving in the former Yugoslavia on behalf of the United Nations;

(2) how many members of the British forces serving in the former Yugoslavia on behalf of the United Nations and of what rank have been the subject of (a) investigation and (b) disciplinary proceedings for drug abuse.

Mr. Soames: One corporal, two lance corporals and four private soldiers have been investigated for alleged drug offences in the former Republic of Yugoslavia. Of these, one lance corporal and three private soldiers are awaiting disciplinary proceedings. No evidence was found against the other service men investigated. At present, investigations are being conducted into alleged drug offences by two further lance corporals and one private soldier. Although we view all cases involving the misuse of drugs with concern, the total number of personnel investigated represents less than 1 per cent. of the British forces serving in the former Yugoslavia.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Soames: Individual budget holders in my Department have delegated powers to employ external consultants as they think fit within the limit of their resources and consistent with all requirements for propriety and value for money.

The information requested is, therefore, not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Diversification

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met representatives of local authorities to discuss defence diversification.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 December 1994]: In the course of implementing the decisions of the recent defence costs study, local authorities' representatives are consulted as and when necessary to facilitate, where possible, productive use of sites following withdrawal of my Department's activity.

The suitability of specific schemes for funding under the EC's Konver programme is a matter for the DTI.

EMPLOYMENT

Investigations

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what firms have been investigated by his Department or agencies in the last five years; and what was the reason in each case.

Miss Widdecombe: In the last five years, the Employment Service. an agency of the Employment Department, has successfully prosecuted 215 collusive employers—that is, those who actively encourage their work force to claim unemployment benefits fraudulently. The yearly breakdown is as follows:

1989–90: 6
1990–91: 9
1991–92: 40
1992–93: 55
1993–94 100

Details of individual employer investigations are not held centrally. Records are held at the Employment Service sector fraud office responsible for the investigation. There are 65 sector fraud offices throughout England, Scotland and Wales.

The Health and Safety Executive, NDPB of the Employment Department, also prosecutes those in breach of health and safety regulations. The figures for such prosecutions are given in Command Paper 2205. "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1993–94 to 1995–96: Employment Department Group and earlier papers".

It would not be possible to obtain details of individual employers and companies prosecuted in the last five years except at disportionate cost.

Contractors

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what safeguards ensure that his Department or agencies do not engage firms as contractors that have been investigated for breaches of the law.

Miss Widdecombe: Employment Department contracts require contractors to take reasonable measures to ensure that their employees are not drawing benefit and are legal residents of the United Kingdom. A revised contract will allow termination of the contract if the contractor's behaviour is prejudicial to the Department's interests of reputation.

Previous records are taken into account, as is any substantiated evidence of illegal activities.

If it were discovered after the award of a contract that a contractor had been found guilty of an offence which had a material bearing on his ability to perform the contract, appropriate action would be taken.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the contractors who have been removed from the Department's approved list of contractors in the last year.

Miss Widdecombe: Contractors leave the supplier lists for many reasons, most of which have nothing to do with issues of propriety. Three suppliers were removed from the Department's approved suppliers list in the last year. The names of our suppliers are confidential.

Burns International

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which contracts let by his Department or agencies have been awarded to Burns International in the last year.

Miss Widdecombe: None at present, though it is the intention of the Employment service to award three contracts to Burns International from 3 April 1995.

Burns International was also used three times on a casual basis by the Health and Safety Executive's estates management contractor to guard scaffolding overnight whilst renovations were carried out to the HSE area office in Edinburgh. That work finished in June 1994.

Earnings

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers have earnings (a) above the national insurance contributions maximum payments ceiling and (b) below the lower earnings limit; and how many in each case are women.

Mr. Oppenheim: It is estimated that in April 1994 there were 3.1 million employees earning above the national insurance upper earnings limit and 3.1 million employees earning below the national insurance lower earnings limit. The corresponding numbers for women were 0.5 million and 2.3 million respectively.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the credit rating of training and enterprise councils is assessed; and how contractors on the TECs can ascertain it.

Mr. Paice: The Government do not check the credit ratings of training and enterprise councils. They keep in touch with TECs' own statements of their financial position through regular scrutiny of their management accounts, which they receive on a commercial-in-confidence basis.

The Government also examines TECs' annual statutory accounts, which they are required to lodge with this Department by 31 July and with Companies House by the end of the January following each financial year.

Until the date by which the statutory accounts have to be lodged at Companies House, they are commercial-in-confidence, but as this Department receives them, copies are placed in the Library.

Credit rating organisations in the private sector offer assessment of TECs as part of their normal business. These would be available to training providers as are the statutory annual accounts lodged with Companies House.

Coal Mining

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men aged 55 years and over were employed in British coal mines as underground workers for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Oppenheim: Estimates of the numbers of employed persons by industry are collected by the Employment Department's "Labour Force Survey". However, no information is available for the age group requested, because the sample size is too small to provide reliable estimates.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether it is his policy that those administering the jobseeker's allowance be set financial targets for disqualifying claimants of unemployment benefit; and whether any of their pay will be related to the financial outturn for unemployment benefit under the performance-related pay policy.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no policy of setting targets for disqualifying claimants.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what special help will be provided for directing persons from minority groups who are seeking entitlement to the jobseeker's allowance.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The Employment Service currently provides help for people from minority groups through specialist inner city officers and outreach officers. Key leaflets are also produced in the main ethnic minority languages. Interviews with clients whose first language is not English and who need help with translation are arranged to take place in the client's own language or with a translator. These provisions will continue when the jobseeker's allowance is introduced.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria will be used to specify the skills required by Employment Service officers in undertaking the role of assessor for the purposes of entering into the jobseeker's agreement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The criteria will be based on what is needed to ensure that the jobseeker clearly understands the entitlement conditions and how these relate to the local labour market. A full programme of training is being prepared for Employment Service staff before the proposed introduction of the jobseeker's allowance.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in relation to the jobseeker's allowance, what is the composition of the business assurance committee; how often it has met; and what is its cost.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The Employment Service and Benefits Agency have both set up business assurance committees to ensure that the jobseeker's allowance is developed in accordance with the business needs of each agency. Although set up in slightly different ways, each committee is made up of representatives from the agency's field organisation and from its head office. The committees meet, as necessary, and the only costs incurred above normal staff salaries are travel costs.

South Thames TEC

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the training providers for South Thames TEC currently known to the receiver; and what assessment he has made of whether the list is comprehensive.

Mr. Paice: There are 124 youth training and training for work providers, and four South Thames enterprise programme providers contracted to South Thames TEC currently known to the receiver. To the best of the Department's knowledge, this list is comprehensive.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 539, when the information relating to contractors to the South Thames TEC will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Paice: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to her on Tuesday 7 February 1995, Official Report, column 183.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cost to (a) South Thames TEC and (b) his Department of the use of outside consultants, accountants and the receiver in investigating the financial difficulties at South Thames TEC from 28 November 1994 to date.

Mr. Paice: I am not in a position to estimate the cost to South Thames TEC of the use of outside consultants and accountants. This is a matter for the receiver. The cost to the Department of the use of outside consultants and accountants was £32,182 as of December 1994. This is the latest estimate available. As is normal commercial practice, the receiver's costs are a first charge on the assets of South Thames TEC. These have not yet been fully established.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Miss Widdecombe: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Wages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average wage of workers in England in each year since 1989.

Mr. Oppenheim: The average wage of adult full-time workers in England is published in table X5 of part A of the "New Earnings Survey" reports. That of adult part-time women is published in table 180 of part F. Copies of these reports are available in the Library.

TREASURY

Paris Club

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Cuban Minister of Finance and Prices about the Paris Club; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I met Mr. Rodriguez, the Cuban Minister of Finance and Prices, on 30 January 1995. We discussed a variety of issues, including Cuba's external debt and the Paris Club.

International Bodies (Parliamentary Scrutiny)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he intends to bring forward to improve parliamentary scrutiny of activities at (a) the World Bank and (b) the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom's contribution to the World Bank group is part of the aid programme and as such is subject to scrutiny from Parliament and the Foreign Affairs Select Committee. Parliamentary approval is also required for the UK's contribution to capital increases or replenishments. The UK's quota as the IMF is financed from the national loans fund, which is audited by the National Audit Office. The accounts are laid annually before Parliament. We believe these existing arrangements provide ample scope for oversight by Parliament.

Civil Servants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the terms under which the Treasury civil service jobs unit was established; how many civil servants work in it and for how long; and what is the annual cost of the unit's operation.

Mr. Nelson: The purpose of the unit is to help surplus Treasury staff to find jobs in other parts of the civil service. It takes up part of the time of a grade 5 and a personal secretary who both have other duties. The unit was set up in November 1994 and will remain in being, although not necessarily with the same staff, while there are staff surpluses to resolve. The annual cost is approximately £20,000.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the annual cost of the career decision seminars, the career transition or self-marketing workshops and the career centres which his Department has established for civil servants leaving the Treasury;

(2) what contract his Department has given to Focus Ltd., professional outplacement consultants; how long the contract will last; and how much it is costing the Treasury.

Mr. Nelson: Following a competition, a two-year contract was let with Focus Ltd. in September 1994 to provide a range of services, including counselling, career decision seminars, self-marketing and other job-search training on a call-off basis. As use of the contract depends on demand, it is not possible at present to give costs on an annual basis. Expenditure to date is £23,546. The career centre is staffed by a member of the Treasury at an annual cost of approximately £17,000.

World Summit on Social Development

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to seek international support for his multilateral debt initiative at the World Summit on Social Development in Copenhagen.

Mr. Nelson: I understand that the world summit on social development will discuss the problems of poor countries when it convenes in March, including developing countries' debt. We shall encourage participants at the summit to support the Chancellor's multilateral debt initiative.

The next step for the multilateral debt initiative will be to secure support from other members of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank. We intend to pursue this at the institutions' spring meetings in April.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The areas of the Treasury which deal with public expenditure control and pay are keeping the level of Treasury delegations to Departments under regular review, but have not withdrawn any rules or regulations in the last 12 months.

The rule requiring the Treasury to certify new ordinary save-as-you-earn schemes has been removed.

The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed.

The manpower implications are taken into account in the Department's central manpower plans, which will be published in the departmental report on Her Majesty's Treasury in March.

Single European Currency

Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned or intends to commission in order to ascertain the views of British business and financial concerns towards the establishment of a single European currency.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 7 February 1995]: Treasury Ministers and officials have frequent meetings with representatives of the business sector, including financial services, to hear their views on a variety of subjects.

European Investment Fund

Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the establishment and operation of the European investment fund as described in the conclusions of the presidency of the Edinburgh summit.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 February 1995]: The establishment of a European investment fund, or EIF, was one element of the declaration on promoting economic recovery in Europe, agreed by the European Council at Edinburgh, in December 1992. The new fund was envisaged as a joint venture, with a share capital of 2 becu, £1.55 billion, allocated between the European investment bank, 40 per cent. the EC itself, 30 per cent., and EC financial institutions and banks, 30 per cent. It was proposed that the EIF should provide guarantees for loans to trans-European networks, TENs, and to small and medium-sized enterprises, SMEs, throughout the Community. These guarantees would be a form of insurance to the lender, for which a premium would be charged. It was also envisaged that the EIF could, after two years of operation, take equity stakes in SMEs or TENs, subject to the agreement of its shareholders.

The creation of the fund required an amendment to the statute of the EIB, which is itself a protocol of the treaty of Rome. Therefore it could not be established until the treaty had been amended, and the amendment ratified by all EC member states. This process was concluded, and the amendment came into force, on 1 May 1994, and on the 25 May the governors of the EIB—EC finance Ministers, including the Chancellor of the Exchequer as the UK's representative—took the formal decision to establish the fund. The EC and the financial institutions were then formally invited to become members of the EIF, and its inaugural general meeting was held on 14 June 1994.

The fund began operations in July 1994. By the end of that year, 11 guarantees had been approved, with a total value of some 711 mecu or £551 million. Of these, seven operations, representing 75 per cent. of the total value of guarantees approved, were in the TENs sector, while the remaining four operations involved SMEs.

All figures converted at 1994 average annual £/ecu conversion rate £1=1.289273 ecu.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Newton: Expenditure of £14,500 was incurred in 1994 by the central drugs co-ordination unit in respect of research conducted on its behalf by the Institute for the Study of Drug Dependence. This work was not undertaken for cost-saving purposes.

No other relevant expenditure has occurred since 1987, nor does the Privy Council Office have any current plans to engage external consultants.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sexual Intercourse (Age of Consent)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the age of consent for lawful sexual intercourse in each of the countries in the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: The following table sets out what I understand to be the ages at which, provided that there is mutual consent and no special provisions apply—see footnotes—persons may legally engage in heterosexual and homosexual sexual acts in each EC country.

Group 4

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what vetting procedures are in place on the staff of Group 4 who will be involved in the transportation of prisoners to Birkenhead Crown court; and if Group 4 will be responsible for the transportation of prisoners irrespective of their offence.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Frank Field, dated 10 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the vetting procedures and responsibilities of Group 4 staff at Birkenhead Crown Court.

All Prisoner Custody Officers (PCOs) at contracted out prisons and those working in the contracted court escort and custody service are certified by the Home Secretary. This is in accordance with Section 89 of, and Schedule 10 to, the Criminal Justice Act 1991. Before issuing such a certificate, routine enquiries are made. These investigations are similar to those made in relation to applications for Prison Service employment and include checks made by the police against criminal records held in the National Identification Bureau. Candidates applying for employment as PCOs are exempt for the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 and conviction which ordinarily are regarded as "spent" are therefore taken into account.

Group 4 will be responsible for the escort of all prisoners to and from court and for their custody at court, with the exception of category A prisoners, who will continue to be escorted by the Police and Prison Service.

Coroner Service, Greater Manchester

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce his decision concerning restructuring of the coroner service for Greater Manchester.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Following local consultation, my right hon. and learned Friend has decided not to proceed with a proposal to make an order under section 4(1) of the Coroners Act 1988 to restructure the coroners district in Greater Manchester. The present four coroners districts will therefore continue unaltered.

Forensic Science Laboratory

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to announce his decision on the future of the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: On the basis of a review initiated by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and the Home Office, I have concluded that the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory should merge with the forensic science service to form a national organisation serving all police forces in England and Wales through seven regional operational laboratories; that direct charging for forensic science services should be extended to include services currently provided by MPFSL; and that the Metropolitan police and the City of London police should be untied from their reliance on the MPFSL as sole provider of these services. There will of course continue to be a Metropolitan laboratory.

These changes will ensure that arrangements for providing forensic science support to the criminal justice system will be the same throughout England and Wales. The merger will ensure that strong forensic science support continues to be made available to the Metropolitan police and the City of London police. Both FSS and MPFSL have traditions of excellence in the provision of forensic science support to the criminal justice system. Within an enlarged agency they will maintain and build upon already high standards of forensic science support to crime investigation in London while ensuring the continued development of effective and efficient forensic science provision throughout England and Wales; characterised by its high quality, clear impartiality and availability equally to police, prosecution and defence.

The worldwide reputations which the MPFSL and FSS have established will be enhanced by bringing them together. International standing is especially important at a time when developments in forensic science are increasingly being brokered across national boundaries and overseas markets are opening up.

I intend that the MPFSL and FSS should merge with effect from 1 April 1996. Merger will be preceded by a transitional period, beginning on 1 April 1995, during which the director general of the FSS will manage MPFSL on behalf of the commissioner, and prepare, with MPFSL and FSS staff, and with the concurrence of the commissioner and the Home Office, detailed plans for the changes.

Prisoners

Mr. Straw : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been diagnosed as mentally ill in each year since 1979; and how many of these have been transferred to NHS facilities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 January 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jack Straw, dated 10 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners diagnosed as mentally ill in each year since 1979 and how many of them were transferred to NHS facilities.

The information sought in the first part of your Question is not available in the form requested. Since December 1991 Prison Service establishments have, however, been carrying out regular medical monitoring exercises. To monitor the assessed needs of mentally disordered prisoners information is collected and collated by the Directorate of Health Care on a periodical basis. On a given day prisoners who are considered by prison doctors to need some form of mental health care are categorised as follows:

(a) prisoners requiring removal or transfer to a psychiatric hospital under Mental Health Act provisions and who are awaiting such transfer. This figure includes remand prisoners awaiting disposal by the court.

(b) prisoners who are sufficiently ill to be occupying in-patient beds in prison health care centres; and

(c) prisoners requiring some form of mental health care but not removal/transfer to psychiatric hospital or in-patient treatment in a prison health care centre.

Tables 1 to 3 enclosed show the numbers of mentally disordered prisoners recorded in each of the above categories over the period from December 1991 to September 1994.

We do not yet know the precise reason for the fall from 802 to 331 in the number of mentally ill prisoners occupying in-patient beds in February and September 1994 but it is more than offset by the increase, from 1766 to 2598, in the number of such prisoners being cared for elsewhere within establishments.

Table 4 enclosed gives the number of transfers to hospital from 1979 onwards under sections 47 and 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983, or their equivalents under the preceding legislation, sections 72 and 73 of the Mental Health Act 1959. This shows that there has been a marked increase in the number of transfers over the last 15 years, with more than double the number of transfers in 1994 when compared with 1990.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 9 February 1995]: Disaggregated information on the basis requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the then Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs on 13 March 1990, Official Report, column 173, which showed the fees paid by the Department of Trade and Industry for general consultancies in the years 1984 to 1989, and to the answer given by my hon. Friend the then Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs on 1 May 1991, Official Report, columns 219-20, which gave the corresponding figures for 1989–90 and 1990–91. Since 1986–87, programme-related consultancy work has been funded from within programme budgets. The fees for general consultancy work for the years 1990–91 to 1993–94 are given in the following table:

Year	£000
1990–91	3,139
1991–92	3,490
1992–93	3,171
1993–94	4,774

High-level Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much high-level waste is currently stored at Sellafield; and how much of this has been vitrified.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 9 February 1995]: This is an operational matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what unforeseen technical problems have been experienced by BNFL in the commissioning of THORP; and what are their safety implications.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 9 February 1995]: This is a management matter for BNFL. The commissioning programme for THORP is being implemented subject to the appropriate regulatory requirements.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's response to the cancellation of two German reprocessing contracts for THORP; how the cancellation of these contracts will affect the projected profits from the plant; and if he will ensure that the Touche Ross report commissioned by BNFL is made public to allow verification of the projected profits from THORP.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 9 February 1995]: These are commercial matters for the company. The two German reprocessing contracts which were cancelled related to business for the second 10 years of THORP's operation. I understand from BNFL that they do not affect the baseload operations of THORP and hence its profitability during its first 10 years of operation. The projected profits from THORP were set out in the document published by the company entitled, "The economic and commercial justification for THORP", copies of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current operational status of THORP.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 9 February 1995]: This is an operational matter for BNFL.

Nirex Research Projects

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research projects have been commissioned by Nirex on geology since 1990; and if he will state their cost, research departments and staff and their publication dates.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 February 1995]: This is a matter for the management of UK Nirex Ltd. Nirex has published a wide variety of reports on its activities.

Electricity Regulator

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to extend the powers of the electricity regulator to include the examination of directors' and chairmen's pay rises, pension contributions and share options.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 6 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 7 February 1995, Official Report, column 139.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Construction Contracts

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress the Government are making in their review of procurement procedures following the Latham report on the construction industry's contractual arrangements.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The multi-departmental scrutiny of Government construction procurement began on 28 November 1994, as announced in the news release of that date. Completion of the scrutiny is expected by early spring 1995. It is normal practice for efficiency scrutiny reports to be published.

WALES

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Redwood: Information on most of the public bodies for which I am responsible is given in "Public Bodies 1994", HMSO, which is available in the Library of the House.

In addition to those listed, I retain departmental responsibility for the following:

Community health councils
Mental Health Act Commission
National Rivers Authority regional flood defence committee

None of these bodies has been identified as being suitable for privatisation. Substantial property holdings of the Welsh Development Agency are being sold, and south Wales councils are currently selling Cardiff Wales airport.

Insulation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for introducing major programmes of insulation in Wales; and what assessment he has made of the impact of insulation on atmospheric pollution.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The home energy efficiency scheme runs on a United Kingdom basis and is a major programme for home insulation for those in receipt of a state retirement pension and low incomes.

I have made no assessment of the impact of insulation on atmospheric pollution. This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Cardiff Bay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 538, if his consent was sought for the development agreement between Associated British Ports and the Cardiff Bay development corporation in March 1991; what assessment he has made of the contributions Associated British Ports would have made to the infrastructure costs of Cardiff Bay development corporation if the previous arrangement of 11 May 1989 had remained in place; and whether the measurement of the appropriate level of development to be undertaken by Associated British Ports related exclusively to the level of private sector development attracted.

Mr. Redwood: These questions relate to operational matters to which the chief executive will respond, as indicated in my answer of 7 February 1995, Official Report, column 151.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation about its contract with N. M. Rothschilds and Son Ltd.; between which dates Rothschilds was retained as financial consultants to Cardiff Bay development corporation; and if he will list its principal duties during this period.

Mr. Redwood: I understand the contract ceased in 1990. The issues raised are operational and the chief executive will write to the hon. Member. I have had no discussions with the chairman about Rothschilds.

Urban Regeneration, Barry

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the Welsh Development Agency signed the joint venture agreement with Associated British Ports, South Glamorgan county council and the Vale of Glamorgan district council for the urban regeneration project of Number One Dock, Barry.

Mr. Redwood: The redevelopment of land at Number One Dock, Barry is the subject of an agreement between Associated British Ports and the Welsh Development Agency signed on 31 March 1994.

Cyclist-pedestrian Crashes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many accidents occurred between cyclists and pedestrians in Wales; and how many prosecutions took place for cycling on the footway, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Redwood: The number of accidents between cyclists and pedestrians and the number of prosecutions for cycling on the footway in Wales are given in the following table:

	[1]Number of accidents between cyclists and pedestrians	Number of persons prosecuted for riding on a footpath
1989	14	26

Pensions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of United Kingdom state pension expenditure is formed by state expenditure on old-age pensions for pensioners resident in Wales in (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table.

Percentage of UK retirement pension expenditure for pensioners residing in Wales

Year	Per cent.
1992–93	5.27
1993–94	5.26

Notes:

1. Sources: DSS pension scheme computer system data and expenditure information.

2. For the purposes of this reply "Retirement Pension expenditure" includes payable additional pension, graduated retirement benefit, increments, age addition and increases for dependants.

3. Information for 1993–94 is provisional.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many self-employed people (a) failed to qualify for a retirement pension and (b) qualified for only a reduced pension, due to an inadequate insurance record for each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current contribution conditions for (a) unemployment benefit, (b) sickness benefit and (c) the retirement pension; and if he will list how these conditions have changed in the last 30 years.

Mr. Arbuthnot:

(a) Unemployment Benefit

Prior to 1975 the contribution conditions for unemployment benefit were that—

(1) not less than 26 class 1 contributions had been paid by the claimant in respect of the period between his entry into insurance and the day for which benefit is claimed; and

(2) not less than 50 class 1 contributions had been paid by or credited to him in respect of the last complete contribution year before the beginning of the benefit year which includes the day for which benefit is claimed.

In 1975, with the changeover from flat rate to earnings-related national insurance contributions, the contribution conditions were amended to:

(1) in respect of any one tax year, the earnings factor derived from the person's payment of Class 1 contributions was at least 25 times the lower earnings limit for payment of National Insurance contributions in that year; and

(2) in the relevant past tax year which governs the claim, the earnings factor derived from class 1 contributions paid by or credited to the person was not less than 50 times the lower earnings limit for payment of national insurance contributions in that year.

The contribution conditions which have applied since 1988 are that—

(1) in respect of one of the two tax years relevant to the claim, the earnings factor derived from the person's payment of class 1 contributions is at least 25 times the lower earnings limit for payment of national insurance contributions in that year;

(2) in respect of both the tax years relevant to the claim, the earnings factor derived from class 1 contributions paid by or credited to the person is at least 50 times the lower earnings limit for payment of national insurance contributions in that year.

(b) Sickness Benefit

Prior to 1988 the contribution conditions for sickness benefit were the same as those applying to unemployment benefit except at class 2—self-employed—contributions counted for benefit purposes.

The contribution conditions which have applied since 1988 are that:

(1) in respect of any tax year, the earnings factor derived from payment of class 1 or 2 contributions is at least 25 times the lower earnings limit for payment of national insurance contributions in that year, and these contributions must be paid before the start of the claim: and

(2) in respect of both the tax years relevant to the claim, the earnings factor derived from class 1 contributions paid or credited or class 2 contributions paid is at least 50 times the lower earnings limit for payment of national insurance contributions in that year.

With the abolition of industrial injury benefit from April 1983, the contribution conditions are deemed to be satisfied if the person's incapacity for work was due to an accident at work when an employed earner, or a prescribed industrial disease due to the nature of their work as an employed earner.

Payment of benefit at reduced rates—Sickness and Unemployment Benefit

Prior to 1975 where a person did not fully satisfy the second contribution conditions, reduced rate benefit was payable if not less than 26 contributions of the appropriate class had been paid or credited in the relevant contribution year.

From 1975 where the earnings factor was 50 to 75 per cent. of the amount needed for the payment of standard rate benefit, half rate benefit was paid. Where the earnings factor was more than 75 per cent. but less than the full amount needed for the payment of standard rate benefit, three-quarter rate benefit was paid. Reduced rates of benefit ceased to apply in October 1986 but transitional provisions allowed payment of reduced rates to continue to October 1987 in certain cases.

(c) Retirement Pension

Prior to April 1975 the contribution conditions for standard rate retirement pension were that—

(1) not less than 156 flat rate contributions had been actually paid by the relevant person in respect of the period between that person's entry to insurance and the date on which he or she reached pensionable age, and

(2) the yearly average of flat rate contribution paid by or credited to that person was not less than 50. Where the yearly average was less than 50 but not less than 13 retirement pension was payable at a reduced rate.

The yearly average was calculated over the period from the beginning of the contribution year in which school leaving age was reached to the end of the last complete contribution year before that in which pensionable age was reached. This period was modified where the person concerned reached age 16 before 5 July 1948.

Since 1975 the contribution conditions for standard rate category A basic retirement pension have been—

(1) achievement of one qualifying year since 6 April 1975 derived from the actual payment of class 1, 2, or 3 national insurance contributions or payment of 50 flat rate contributions at any time before 6 April 1975

(2) achievement of qualifying years for approximately 90 per cent. of the years in the person's working life. A reduced rate of pension is payable where the number of qualifying years is less than but at least a quarter of the number required for standard rate pension.

A qualifying year is a tax year in which the earnings factor derived from national insurance contributions paid or credited is at least 52 times the lower earnings limit for that year. Between 6 April 1975 and 5 April 1978, the earnings factor needed for the year to be a qualifying year was 50 times the lower earnings limit for that year. Any national insurance contributions paid or credited before 6 April 1975 are converted into qualifying years by dividing the total number of contributions by 50 and rounding any fraction up to the next whole number.

A person's working life runs from the start of the tax year in which age 16 is reached until the tax year before the one in which pensionable age is reached. The working life can be modified where a person had reached age 16 before 5 July 1948.

Note:

The earnings factor is the amount of earnings on which class 1 national insurance contributions have been paid: class 2 and 3 national insurance contributions and class 1 and 3 contribution credits are treated as earnings at the weekly lower earnings limit for the relevant year.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current contribution conditions of the state earnings-related scheme; and if he will list the changes in these conditions since the inception of the scheme.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Entitlement to state earnings-related pension arises where the earnings factor[1] derived from national insurance contributions paid in respect of 1978–79 or any later tax year exceeds 52 times the lower earnings limit for payment of national insurance contributions in the final relevant year[2].

Note 1—the earnings factor is the amount of earnings on which class 1 national insurance contributions have been paid in a given tax year. Class 2 and 3 national insurance contributions are treated as earnings at the weekly lower earnings limit. Where the year in question is earlier than the final relevant year, the earnings factor is revalued in line with subsequent growth in national average earnings.

Note 2—the final relevant year is the last complete tax year before that in which state pension age is reached or, if earlier, death occurs.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many divorced or separated women received (a) a full and (b) a partial retirement pension on the record of their previous partners for each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what have been the savings in public expenditure resulting from changes to the state earnings-related pension scheme since 1979.

Mr. Arbuthnot: None.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish figures similar to those in table 2 of Cm 2714 on the Pensions Bill showing the estimated financial effect on the national insurance fund assuming a common retirement age of 63 years;

(2) if he will publish figures similar to those in table 1 of Cm 2714 on the Pensions Bill 1994 giving an estimate of the costs of national insurance benefits assuming a common retirement age of 63 years.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The tables published in the Government Actuary's report, Cm 2714, have been produced to support the financial effects of the proposals in the Pensions Bill. Several options for the equalisation of state pension age have been examined and estimates of their financial effects published in the consultation documents, "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", Cm 1723, and the White Paper, "Equality in State Pension Age", Cm 2420, copies of which are held in the Library. These are the most recent figures available.

Employers Panel

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the members of the DSS employers panel and the organisations they represent, indicating which members of the panel are representatives of small businesses.

Mr. Hague: The current members of the Department of Social Security's employers panel are:

Name	Organisation

Members marked with a star are from small businesses or small business representative organisations.

Habitual Residence Appeals

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many successful appeals have been made regarding habitual residence.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people by standard English region, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are currently in receipt of housing benefit as a consequence of being in receipt of income support.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information for Great Britain is set out in the table. I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for figures covering Northern Ireland.

Standard statistical region	Housing benefit recipients with income support as at August 1994
North (including Cumbria)	200,100

EDUCATION

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children were statemented in each year from 1992 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: In England, the number of pupils reported as receiving statements of special educational need for the first time in calendar years 1992 and 1993 was 34,037 and 38,292, respectively. Information for the calendar year 1994 is not yet available.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children were statemented in England as requiring special educational treatment in each year from 1965 to 1976 inclusive.

Mr. Forth: The number of pupils in England and Wales newly assessed during the calendar years 1965 to 1976 inclusive as needing special educational treatment was as follows:

Year	Number
1965	19,886
1966	20,981
1967	21,417
1968	20,833
1969	21,844
1970	21,771
1971	24,118
1972	24,254
1973	22,771
1974	21,624
1975	21,393
1976	22,985

It is not possible to disaggregate the data for England.

Pupils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the expected increase in the school population in September 1995 (a) nationally and (b) by individual local education authority.

Mr. Forth: Projections of the school population related to January of the academic year. The total school population in England is projected to increase by 116,000 full-time equivalents between January 1995 and January 1996. Projections at local education authority level are not available.

Mathematics

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what she is doing to improve the teaching of mathematics in primary schools.

Mr. Forth: The Government are committed to higher standards and higher quality teaching in mathematics. The most important force for improvement is the national curriculum, which has established demanding expectations for both teachers and pupils. Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools has confirmed that the national curriculum is rapidly helping to improve the standard of mathematics teaching in primary schools. The revised national curriculum for mathematics has increased emphasis on arithmetic skills, particularly in the primary years. For the first time, pupils' progress in relation to the national standards is being rigorously monitored through national assessments and tests. The schools inspectorate confirms that these assessments and tests are contributing to higher standards.

The Government have also been instrumental in establishing a number of 20-day training courses designed to improve primary school teachers' mathematical knowledge. The cost of sending teachers on these courses is supported by the Government with specific grant.

School Closures

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which local education authorities have school reorganisation or closure proposals under consideration by her Department; and how many places will be removed by each authority as a result of their proposals.

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows the local education authorities which have school reorganisation proposals published under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 currently with the Department. Not all such proposals involve the removal of school places. Where they do, the aggregate number of places that would be removed if the proposals were approved is shown in the table. Where there are no statutory objections, and the proposals are not called in by the Secretary of State, proposals in respect of county schools fall to be decided by the local education authority.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what response he is giving to the report on famine in Iraq sent to him by Mr. Riad-el-Taher about his recent visit to Baghdad.

The Prime Minister: The recent communication has been noted by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that an ad hoc tribunal should be set up by the United Nations Security Council to try those accused of the Lockerbie bombing; and what representations he has had in this regard.

The Prime Minister: No. It is clear from resolution 883 that the United Nations Security Council envisages trial only before the appropriate United Kingdom or United States court.

HEALTH

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she was informed of the West Midlands regional health authority's wish to divest itself of its management services division; what reasons were given; what was her response; what time scales for the privatisation were discussed or agreed between the authority and herself for the privatisation of the management services division; and what safeguards for staff affected by the privatisation of the management services division were discussed with her.

Mr. Sackville: The decision to proceed with the management buyout of the management services division, the time scale and the detailed provisions for the buy-out were matters for the West Midlands regional health authority. The proposal was in line with Government policy for streamlining regional structures as set out in the White Paper, "Working for Patients" and later reinforced by executive letter EL(MB)(89)59 issued in March 1989.

Antibiotics

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the measures being taken to reduce or control prescription of antibiotics by general practitioners.

Mr. Malone: General practitioners are encouraged to prescribe effectively including the most appropriate use of antibiotics. Doctors regularly receive information on prescribing matters through a wide range of medical publications funded by the Department and are further supported in rational prescribing by professional prescribing advisers.

Princess Margaret Hospital, Swindon

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current position of the private finance initiative proposal submitted by the Princess Margaret hospital in Swindon; and when a decision on this matter is expected.

Mr. Sackville: In November 1994, six shortlisted companies were issued with an information memorandum. Initial responses were received on 23 January 1995 from five companies and are currently being evaluated. Detailed proposals will be developed in the spring. A decision is expected in July 1995.

Asthma and Bronchial Complaints

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has undertaken into the connection between car exhaust fumes and the incidence of asthma among (a) adults and (b) children in the last three years.

Mr. Malone: Relevant research studies undertaken on correlations between atmospheric pollution and the incidence of asthma and respiratory illnesses, with funding through the Department of Health centrally commissioned programme, are:

Health Effects of the Nitrogen Dioxide Episode in London, December 1991—St. George's Hospital Medical School;

Modified National Study of Health and Growth, which includes the prevalence of asthma in children—United Medical and Dental Schools of Guy's and St. Thomas's; Middlesbrough Childhood Asthma study—University of Teeside.

Two further studies are now being commissioned:

Impact of Air Pollution and Temperature on GP Consultations—University College Medical School;

Personal Exposure to Air Pollutants and Severity of Hay Fever Symptoms in London Traffic Wardens—Imperial College of Science, Technology and Medicine.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available, the MRC spent £919,000 on research into asthma and a further £1,000,000 on research which may be relevant to the condition.

The Departments of Health and of the Environment are collaborating with the MRC to commission by competitive tender a programme of interrelated research projects covering 10 key areas identified in the Institute for Environment and Health report "Air Pollution and Respiratory Disease: UK Research Priorities". The IEH reviewed the knowledge gaps and priority research issues in the area of air pollution and respiratory disease with a special emphasis on asthma. A total of £5 million has been made available for research in this area from the three funders.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were treated for (a) asthma and (b) bronchial complaints in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: From "Morbidity Statistics from General Practice" it is estimated that during the year 1991–92 there were 2,049,000 patients treated for asthma, and 3,905,000 treated for bronchitis[1]. Figures are not available for the other years requested. For in-patients the number of finished consultant episodes, ordinary admissions and day cases, are shown in the table:

	Asthma	Bronchitis[1]
1992–93	96,659	33,131
1991–92	99,717	37,209
1990–91	93,277	30,334
1989–90	100,188	33,847
1988–89	113,928	34,364

Information on numbers of out-patients treated for asthma and bronchitis is not available centrally.

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Children's Homes

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the results of her inquiry into small children's homes; and if she will consider extending the provisions of the Children Act 1989 to such homes.

Mr. Bowis: I expect the report of the social services inspectorate study of small children's homes to be submitted to me within the next few months.

Provisions in the Children Act 1989, and in regulations made under that Act, already apply to such homes.

Radioactive Polonium 210

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in each family health services authority area were suffering from higher than expected levels of radioactive polonium 210 in their teeth in the latest available year; and what were the figures for (a) five years and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available. However, preliminary findings from a recent study funded by the Department reported elevated levels of polonium-210—a naturally occurring radionuclide—in the teeth of children living within 10 km of some motorways in the United Kingdom as reported in The Lancet on 4 February 1995. The study did not provide evidence that these levels are in any way sufficient to imply a risk to health. The Government are currently considering the options for further research in this area.

Complaints

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for health how many complaints were (a) made and (b) sustained against (i) fundholding general practitioners and (ii) other general practitioners by family health services authority for each year since 1991.

Mr. Malone: The available information is published annually in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library.

Pharmacists

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances non-qualified pharmacists are permitted to dispense prescriptions in (a) chemists' shops and (b) general practitioner practices.

Mr. Malone: The Medicines Act 1968 allows prescription-only medicines and medicines not on the general sales list—pharmacy only—dispensed in retail pharmacies to be supplied only by or under the supervision of a qualified pharmacist. General practitioner practice staff may dispense prescriptions where

(a) the practice is authorised to provide pharmaceutical services; and

(b) the doctor is satisfied that they are competent to do so.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner practices had (a) a dispensing pharmacy in each of the last five years and (b) a dispensing pharmacy on site.

Mr. Malone: The number of general practitioner practices authorised to provide pharmaceutical services in England in each of the last five years is:

	Number
1990	Not available
1991	1,192
1992	1,197
1993	1,202
1994[1]	1,215

[1] Provisional.

No information is available centrally about whether pharmacies are sited within the practice premises or elsewhere.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner fundholding practices had a dispensing pharmacy on site in each of the last four years.

Mr. Malone: At April 1994, 352 general practitioner fundholding practices were authorised to provide pharmaceutical services. Information is not available centrally on whether the dispensing facilities are sited on practice premises or elsewhere.

Correspondence

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to answer the question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield of 26 January, relating to the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: I have replied to the hon. Member today.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Houses, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council homes in the Bolton district council area are currently empty and available to meet housing needs; and what percentage this is of total stock.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest information held by my Department relates to dwellings vacant on 1 April 1994 when Bolton metropolitan district council reported a total of 120 council dwellings which were either vacant and available for letting immediately or after minor repairs; this represents 0.52 per cent. of its total stock. The data comes from its 1994 housing investment programme—HIP1—return, a copy of which is in the Library.

Abandoned Mines

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to monitor (a) mine water pollution and (b) methane emissions from abandoned mine workings in County Durham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority monitors the quality of water discharged both from pumping stations operated by the Coal Authority at recently abandoned mines, and from mines in parts of the Durham coalfield where mining ceased many years ago. I am not aware of any monitoring of methane emissions from abandoned mines.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all test bore holes sunk in (a) County Durham and (b) Northumberland for each year from 1990 to monitor mine water flows.

Mr. Atkins: Details of boreholes constructed by the National Rivers Authority in County Durham are listed in the table. No boreholes have been drilled in Northumberland.

Date constructed	Borehole Name
1993	Burnigill Jubilee Bridge
	Ox Close Brancepeth Hill
	Top Houghall
1994	Burningill deepened Washington
	Birtley Broom Park Red Barns
	Wellspring Farm Warden Law
	Plawsworth

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost of sinking the test bore hole at Warden Law, County Durham.

Mr. Atkins: The Warden Law borehole, drilled by the National Rivers Authority, cost £28,358.62.

Parks and Gardens

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of revenue support grant which is allowed for the upkeep of parks and gardens in the standard spending assessment.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Standard spending assessments are the Government's view of what local authorities need to spend to provide a standard level of service and form the basis of paying revenue support grant. Revenue support grant is not earmarked for any specific purpose. It is for local authorities themselves to chose how much of their resources to spend on the upkeep of parks and gardens.

Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer on 2 February, Official Report, column 762–63, how much was paid to each of the firms of consultants listed for work done for his Department in (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94; and if he will specify the nature of the work undertaken for each payment.

Sir Paul Beresford: The total amount paid to the consultants listed is shown in the table. To separate the amounts paid to each, including separation into financial years, would reveal the cost of some individual contracts and thus breach commercial confidentiality.

The nature of the work undertaken by each of the consultants employed in 1992–94 specifically in connection with the Department's market testing programme is as follows:

Consultant	Work undertaken
Amtec Consulting	Financial adviser
Andersen Consulting	Internal feasibility study
Capital Management Consultancy Ltd.	Project management support
Castle Management Consultants	Financial adviser
Civil Service College	Provision of intelligent customer advice
Coopers and Lybrand	Tender evaluation training; contract management seminar; in-house bid support
CSL Group	In-house bid support

Shreeveport Ltd.	In-house bid support
Smith and Williamson	In-house bid support
SPT (Simon Thorpe)	Preparation of specifications
Symonds Facilities Management plc	Project management support
Mr. J. Wormald	Consultancy support to internal review
Total payments: 1992–94 (as at end-December 1994)	£1.2 million

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by each urban development corporation on acquiring land and buildings since their inception; how much has been received by each for the sale of land and buildings; and what is the latest valuation of their land holdings.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 8 February 1995]: Expenditure and receipts in respect of the acquisition and sale of land and buildings for each urban development corporation from inception until 31 March 1994, are given in the table. The value of development assets, which comprise both land and buildings at the lower of cost or net realisable value, are given as at 31 March 1994. The expenditure figures include purchase of land for use on infrastructure projects, for open space and for environmental improvements. Such expenditure is part of the regeneration remit of UDSs, but is unlikely of itself to produce receipts. It is therefore misleading to make a comparison between expenditure and receipts.

	Expenditure	Receipts	Development assets

NORTHERN IRELAND

Heavy Fuel Oil Duty

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to compensate for the extra cost of electricity generation arising from increased heavy fuel oil excise duty.

Mr. Ancram: The most effective ways of keeping energy costs down is through the promotion of competition and the pursuit of efficiency in the production, transmission and use of electricity. The Government will continue to encourage both efficiency and competition.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his assessment of the effect on future electricity prices in Northern Ireland of a 50 per cent. increase in heavy fuel oil duty.

Mr. Ancram: I am informed by Northern Ireland Electricity plc that a 50 per cent. increase in excise duty on heavy fuel oil would increase electricity prices in Northern Ireland by about 1 per cent.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make representations to have the extra heavy fuel oil excise duty set aside or if he will make available some additional transitional relief until such time as over dependence on heavy fuel oil is replaced by natural gas.

Mr. Ancram: No. The decision to increase the level of excise duty on heavy fuel oil which was announced in the Chancellor's Budget statement in November is in line with the Government's commitment to deliver healthy public finances as quickly as possible and to keep electricity prices in check through the encouragement of competition and the pursuit of efficiency.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will consider increasing transitional relief to compensate for compliance with United Kingdom and EU policy on power station emissions and additional costs incurred through meeting alternative energy targets contained within the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Ancram: No. The transitional relief scheme was introduced to give industry time to adjust to the application of cost-reflective pricing following privatisation and it will have served that purpose by the time it ends on 31 March 1996.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the importance to the Northern Ireland economy of keeping electricity prices in Northern Ireland at levels attractive to incoming industry and commerce and competitive for existing industry with electricity prices in Great Britain.

Mr. Ancram: The price of electricity is one of a number of factors which is taken into account by incoming industry when considering Northern Ireland as a potential investment location. There is no evidence that potential inward investors choose between Northern Ireland and Great Britain solely on the basis of comparative electricity prices.

Contagious Epididymitis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the cases of contagious epididymitis in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: There have been no cases of contagious epididymitis in Northern Ireland.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people currently earn (a) less than £1.50 an hour, (b) between £1.50 and £2.00 an hour, (c) between £2.00 and £2.50 an hour, (d) between £2.50 and £3.00 an hour, (e) between £3.00 and £3.50 an hour and (f) between £3.50 and £4.00 an hour.

Mr. Ancram: Information on hourly earnings in Northern Ireland is available only from the new earning survey and relates to the proportion of employees within each earnings band. The latest available figures are for April 1994 and are as follows:

Percentage of employees earning:

	Percentage
Less than £1.50 per hour	0.1
£1.50—£2.00 per hour	0.2
£2.00—£2.50 per hour	1.1
£2.50—£3.00 per hour	2.8
£3.00—£3.50 per hour	5.9
£3.50—£4.00 per hour	7.5

Note:

The information provided relates to gross average hourly earnings, including overtime of full-time employees on adult rates. It may be unreliable for some earnings bands due to the small number of respondents.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commissioners

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the number of European Commissioners and the cost of their cabinets in (a) 1971, (b) 1981 and (c) 1991; and what is the estimated cost for 1995.

Mr. David Davis: There were nine members of the European Commission in 1971, 14 in 1981 and 17 in 1991. When Austria, Finland and Sweden joined the Union on 1 January this year, the number of Commissioners became 20. On the question of cost, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave him on 13 January, Official Report, column 213.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what was the absenteeism rate for the Natural Resources Institute in each year since 1991.

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to his reply 24 January 1995, c.103]: The chief executive of the Natural Resources Institute, Mr. Anthony Beattie, has now written providing details of staff sick leave.

Letter from Anthony Beattie to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 10 February 1995:

Further to my letter of 24 January about absenteeism rates in the Natural Resources Institute, the figures you have asked for are as follows:

	1991	1992	1993	1994
Days absence per staff year	6.49	6.56	6.28	6.20

The figures include all sickness absences whether certificated or uncertificated. There is no separate definition of absenteeism for which records are maintained. A year is taken to be 365 days and sickness absences spanning weekends and public holidays are included in the calculation.

I should also explain that a different set of data exists which is collated by the Civil Service Occupational Health Service but which is available only for the calendar years 1992 and 1993. These data exclude weekends and public holidays from the reckoning and are calculated on the basis of a year consisting of 225 working days. On this basis, NRI's record was:

	1992	1993
Working days absence per 225 working days	5.45	4.82

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he is giving to the report on famine in Iraq sent to him by Mr. Riad-el-Taher about his recent visit to Baghdad.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to his identical question today.

SCOTLAND

Cochlear Implants

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) at which hospitals in Scotland cochlear implants are available for young children;

(2) what restrictions apply to Crosshouse hospital carrying out further cochlear implants in the rest of the current financial year;

(3) when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie of 20 December relating to operations for cochlear implants;

(4) how many staff in Crosshouse hospital are skilled in conducting cochlear implants;

(5) if he will make a statement about the consequences for young deaf children of delaying cochlear implant operations;

(6) if he will make more funds available for cochlear implants in Scotland during the current financial year;

(7) how many children are on the waiting list for cochlear implants in Scotland;

(8) how many children have had cochlear implant operations postponed because of financial restrictions at Crosshouse hospital this year;

(9) how many cochlear implant operations have been carried out at Crosshouse hospital in each month of the current financial year; and how many operations are projected for the remaining months of this financial year;

(10) what proposals he has to increase the budget for cochlear implants at Crosshouse hospital in the next financial year; and what assessment he has made of the correlation between increases in funding and the number of operations performed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Paediatric cochlear implantation is at present centrally funded as a national specialist service and is provided at Crosshouse hospital, Kilmarnock which is part of the North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trust. Funding in 1994–95 has enabled five paediatric operations to be carried out. The service is provided by a multi-disciplinary team led by a consultant ear, nose and throat surgeon.

There are currently five children on the waiting list for cochlear implantation. No child on the waiting list has been given a date for operation in the current financial year which has subsequently been postponed. The waiting list is prioritised according to who needs treatment most urgently. A recent Medical Research Council evaluation study has indicated that, in general terms, cochlear implantation has favourable outcomes up to the age of seven years.

Provision of cochlear implantation services in Scotland is currently under review and future funding requirements will be identified following consideration of the MRC evaluation of cochlear implantation and the paediatric cochlear implantation needs assessment. Both are to be published shortly.

The following operations have been carried out in the current financial year. No further operations are expected to take place in the remainder of the year.

A reply to the hon. Member's letter of 20 December was issued on 26 January.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the expenditure proposed for 1994–95 and 1995–96 by Scottish Homes in the categories (a) headquarters administration in Edinburgh, (b) publicity and publications, (c) regional office costs, (d) seed corn funding for housing associations set up to purchase Scottish Homes housing stock, (e) other funds for housing associations set up to purchase Scottish Homes housing stock and (f) other expenditure not directly for the interest and repayment of loans for house building or the maintenance of housing stock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury on 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 69.

Smoking

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent on the adult and parental health education programme in relation to cigarette smoking over each of the past two years; and how much money will be spent in 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1995]: Health education on smoking at national level in Scotland is undertaken by the Health Education Board for Scotland. Of total expenditure by the board of £1.47 million on anti-smoking activity in 1993–94, £969,000 was spent on action focusing on parents and other adults. The corresponding figures for 1994–95 will amount to some £770,000 and £520,000 respectively. The board's operational plan for the years 1995–96 and 1996–97 will shortly be finalised and will maintain a continuing focus on smoking among adults. Smoking issues are also addressed in other work undertaken by the board, for example in relation to coronary heart disease.

LORD CHANCELLOR' S DEPARTMENT

Child Witnesses

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures are being taken to expedite cases involving child witnesses; and if he will outline any initiatives to ensure that delay is minimised.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In relation to criminal proceedings, section 53 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 allows for cases of a serious violent or sexual nature, where a child might be called as a witness, to be transferred directly to the Crown court, thereby minimising the delays in waiting for a case to come to trial. The replacement of all committal proceedings with transfer procedures, which is due to take place later this year, will ensure that this applies to all cases. Furthermore, the introduction of a national scheme of plea and directions hearings, which should be completed by the end of this year, will provide for closer judicial case management. Child liaison officers, whose responsibilities include ensuring, as far as possible, that delays in cases involving child witnesses are kept to a minimum, are now in place in all Crown court centres. In addition, fast tracking schemes, which set local time limits for each stage of the prosecution process, have now been established in a number of Crown court centres.

In relation to family proceedings, Dame Margaret Booth DBE had been commissioned by this Department to identify the causes of delay, and to suggest improvements to procedures to eradicate avoidable delay.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures are being taken to ensure members of the judiciary are trained in conduct towards child witnesses in cases of alleged abuse.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Judicial Studies Board is responsible for training the judiciary. The evidence of child witnesses is covered in courses for both Crown court judges and those who hear cases under the Children Act.

Legal Aid

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what powers he has in respect of restricting the legal aid in respect of an individual case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Neither the Lord Chancellor nor I may intervene in individual cases. Under the provisions of the Legal Aid Act 1988, responsibility for the grant of civil legal aid in individual cases, rests with the Legal Aid Board. Responsibility for the grant of criminal legal aid in individual cases rests with the relevant court.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what is the current total cost of legal aid support to the Maxwell brothers; and how much he estimates the total bill is likely to be at the conclusion of the court consideration of the case;

(2) if he will list all those who have received payment from legal aid funds for their activity in respect of the Maxwell brothers' case; how much in total each of them has been paid to date; if he will list their hourly fee, where appropriate; if he will summarise the nature of the activity they have undertaken; and if he will estimate what their likely total bill will be at the conclusion of the court case.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total amount of criminal legal aid paid to date to lawyers acting for all six defendants in R. v. Kevin Maxwell and Others is £4,028,008 inclusive of VAT. This amount includes final costs in the magistrates courts of—£829,377—as well as payments on account, as of 9 November 1994, in the Crown court of £3,198,631. All payments include VAT and disbursements, such as expert witness and accountancy fees, and other expenses necessarily incurred. I do not consider it would be appropriate while the case is continuing to give a further breakdown of those figures, nor do I consider it appropriate to speculate as to what the final costs might be.

TRANSPORT

Train Operating Companies

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received on whether train operating companies should have the status of public benefit bodies for the purposes of European legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The term "public benefit body" is not recognised.

Through Ticketing

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which train stations currently provide through-ticketing facilities within (a) Hampshire and (b) South West Trains.

Mr. Watts: Only those stations linked to the computer seat reservation system and equipped with APTIS machines have the capability of issuing a full range of through tickets. these stations are as follows:

(a) Hampshire

Brockenhurst

Southampton Central

Fareham

Portsmouth and Southsea

Portsmouth Harbour

Network SouthEast

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Franchising Director will publish proposals for passenger service requirements for the franchise of the south central division of Network SouthEast; and what will be the consultation procedures.

Mr. Watts: It is currently the Franchising Director's intention to publish his proposals for the passenger service requirement for network south central this summer. He will be undertaking a formal consultation on his proposals with affected local authorities at both county and district level and also with the relevant rail users consultative committee in accordance with paragraph 9 of the objectives instructions and guidance issued to the Franchising Director by the Secretary of State for Transport on 22 March 1994.

Traffic Congestion, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to investigate the proportion of traffic congestion in London which could be reduced by (a) improved co-ordination of road works, and (b) better supervision of construction sites, (c) more effective traffic signal operation and maintenance, (d) faster reaction to breakdowns and (e) other measures.

Mr. Norris: In 1993, the Transport Research Laboratory investigated the causes of traffic hold-ups in London using the "congestion file" maintained by the Metropolitan police. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of its report, "The frequency and importance of incidents which cause congestion in urban areas", TRL contractor report 342.

Licences

Mr.Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) heavy goods vehicles, (b) HGV trailers and (c) buses and coaches were licensed to operate on public roads in each year since 1991–92.

Mr. Norris: The following information is based on the number of vehicles licensed in United Kingdom in each class, as of the 30 September each year:

	Year	Number
Heavy goods vehicles (over 3,500 kgs gross weight)	1994	410,623
	1993	403,215
	1992	407,150
	1991	416,673
Trailer HGVs (HGVs pulling a drawbar trailer where a trailer supplement is payable)	1994	6,623
	1993	6,316
	1992	6,188
	1991	6,110
Buses and Coaches (more than 16 seats)	1994	67,181
	1993	65,349
	1992	65,252
	1991	63,783

Heathrow Airport (Security)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes in security standards and procedures have been made at Heathrow Airport; and what factors led to them.

Mr. Norris: The Department keeps under review all of its security requirements, including standards and procedures, but has not made any recent changes specific to Heathrow airport. A number of changes to improve the standard of aviation security have been introduced over the last year, affecting the majority of airports and airlines subject to the United Kingdom national aviation security programme, including Heathrow. These changes include the introduction of an air cargo security regime, accounting and authorising international hold baggage for carriage, and the continuing introduction of international hold baggage screening. These are examples of the Government's continuing commitment to aviation security and the ICAO eight-point plan.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral statement of 16 January, Official Report, column 550, on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill, if he will give the date, the parties and a summary of the judgment in the Court of Appeal decision referred to.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 9 February 1995]: The Court of Appeal judgment to which I referred was given on 30 June 1994 in the case of the Secretary of State for Transport v. Colonel Owen and Barbara Owen. The judgment required the Secretary of State to redetermine the discretionary purchase application made by Colonel Owen, whose property lies near the proposed Cirencester bypass. In the light of the judgment, the Department is required to take into account loss in value of property attributable to a proposed scheme when assessing whether the applicant's enjoyment of the property is seriously affected within the meaning of the statutory provision and therefore whether it falls to be considered for discretionary purchase.

Transec

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the cost of the Transec teams and related organisations over the past 10 years.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 February 1995]: The transport security division in my Department has existed in its current form since October 1991. Its running costs expenditure in 1992–93 was £2,114,000 and in 1993–94 was £3,736,000. Its expected outturn in 1994–95 is £4,116,000. All figures are expressed in cash terms. Comparable figures for earlier years could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the specific functions of those officers of Transec whose jobs will be cut following the reduction in costs announced by the Minister for Aviation and Shipping.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 February 1995]: More than half of the posts identified in the efficiency savings exercise are support or managerial. The remainder are inspectorial or investigatory.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total saving of the reduction in Transec expenditure announced by the Minister of Aviation and Shipping.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 February 1995]: The agreed running cost budget for the transport security division for 1995–96 represents a reduction of £655,000 compared with the outturn in 1993–94, the base year for the efficiency savings exercise in my Department. It also represents a saving of £961,000 on the forecast outturn for 1994–95. All figures are expressed in 1994–95 terms.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation there has been with (a) the BAA, (b) other airport operators, (c) port owners and occupiers, (d) airlines and (e) port users about the implications for them of the decision to reduce the expenditure on Transec; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 February 1995]: My right hon. Friend has responsibility within Government for transport security. My Department lays down relevant security requirements for each mode of transport after careful consideration and consultation with the industries and other parties as appropriate. It is the responsibility of the industries to implement the requirements, which include the provision of all security installations and staff. It would not be appropriate to consult those industries about changes in the way my Department discharges its responsibilities.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what ports or airports he (a) visited and (b) inspected in 1994.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 February 1995]: Since becoming Secretary of State for Transport in July 1994, my right hon. Friend has passed through several ports and airports as a passenger. In the course of his official duties he has visited Heathrow, London city airport, Manchester airport and the ports of Harwich, Felixstowe and Dover. He did not inspect any of them in the sense of monitoring their performance of legal requirements placed upon them.

Airport and Port Security

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the United Kingdom's treaty obligations on airport and port security and of the desirability of a revision of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990.

Mr. Norris: [holding answer 9 February 1995]: The United Kingdom's international obligations and legislation relating to transport security are kept under review as a matter of course. I am satisfied with the current position.

Motorail and Sleeper Services

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will instruct the Director of Rail Franchising to consult with rail users consultative committees prior to withdrawal of subsidy in respects of Motorail services;

(2) if he will instruct the Director of Rail Franchising to consult the rail users consultative committees prior to withdrawal of subsidy in respect of London-Fort William and cross-country sleeper services.

Mr. Watts [holding answers 7 February 1995]: Paragraph 9 of the objectives instructions and guidance issued to the Franchising Director by the Secretary of State on 22 March 1994 requires him to liaise with the central rail users consultative committee and the rail users consultative committees and to take into account their views on the pattern and quality of services to be provided through franchising. I understand that Opraf will consult with rail users consultative committees about the content of the ScotRail passenger service requirement prior to issuing an invitation to tender for the franchise.

For the present, timetable changes remain a matter for the British Railways Board, which I understand notifies the relevant rail users consultative committees of proposed changes so as to give them an opportunity to make representations.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Channel 5

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what provision he is making to allow Channel 5 bids from those who, if successful, would breach the current cross-media ownership rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Independent Television Commission invitation to apply for the Channel 5 licence made it clear that, when considering applications, it would apply the regulations in force at the time.

Cross-media Ownership

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to announce the results of his Department's review of cross-media ownership.

Mr. Dorrell: I will announce the Government's conclusions once we have completed our examination of the issue.

Departmental Funding

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) of 2 February, Official Report, columns 779–80, if he will give further details of the £283,000 cost incurred by his Department for the transfer of functions of the conservation unit to his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: The £283,000 transferred to my Department for the conservation unit is broken down as follows:

	£000
Salaries	99
Non-pay running costs	90
Accommodation	91
Other	3
Total	283

National Lottery

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage who appointed the head of the Arts Council lottery committee.

Mr. Dorrell: Appointments to the Arts Council of England are made by the Secretary of State for National Heritage. In appointing Mr. Peter Gummer, my predecessor asked him to take special responsibility for the Arts Council's activities as a national lottery distributor.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether any of the funds raised for good causes by the national lottery are being invested in gilt-edged securities prior to disbursement by the lottery distribution bodies..

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 February 1995]: The proceeds of the national lottery held in the national lottery distribution fund are being invested in a range of investments which include gilt-edged securities. At 1 February, the investment portfolio for the fund was as follows:

	£ million	Percentage
Treasury Bills	65	41
Local Authority Stocks and loans	62	39
Gilts	22	14
Ways and Means	9	6
Total	158

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 February 1995]: My Department was established in April 1992 and took on responsibility for funding its own consultancies in August 1992. For the two financial years for which figures are available, my Department's expenditure is as follows.

Year	Expenditure £	In 1994 prices £
1992–93	2,850,277	2,995,884
1993–94	6,003,555	6,123,666

My Department uses consultants for a wide variety of tasks, only a small proportion of which are aimed at achieving cost savings. No central record is held on overall savings and it would not be possible to isolate those consultancies and quantify the cost savings without incurring disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

VAT (Building Work)

Mr. Day: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the annual cost to the Exchequer if the United Kingdom were to adopt an 8 per cent. rate of VAT on the repair, maintenance and improvement of listed buildings.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Alterations to listed buildings are currently zero rated. An 8 per cent. rate of VAT would bring in an estimated £30 million. Repairs and maintenance of listed buildings are currently standard rated. Information on expenditure on repairs and maintenance of listed buildings are not readily available. Moving repairs and maintenance to 8 per cent. would involve some loss of revenue.

Alcohol

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals have been prosecuted for selling on alcohol bought on the continent for personal consumption since the lifting of restrictions governing the payment of duty.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: From the start of the single market on 1 January 1993 to 31 December 1994, 135 people have been prosecuted by Customs for single market offences involving either alcohol alone or in combination with other excise goods.

Excise Duties

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made on the EU's biennial review of excise duties.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The date for the first review was set for 31 December 1994 at the latest. However, no proposal has yet been delivered by the Commission.

Fundamental Expenditure Review

Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what instruction he gave to ensure the fundamental expenditure review has no detrimental effect on activities surrounding anti-drug smuggling.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The terms of reference I agreed for the fundamental expenditure review included the need to determine the scope for improved effectiveness and efficiency of all work areas, including anti-drug smuggling. The outcome is that by putting greater emphasis on quality results in terms of seizures and concentrating even more on drug-trafficking organisations, Customs and Excise is confident that its success rate will be enhanced, and it has set targets to reflect this.

EU Finances

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the total sums paid to each EU member state from EU sources, (b) the total sums paid to the EC by each member state, (c) the gross national product of each state and (d) the percentage of gross national product of each state derived from sums paid to it from EU funds in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 26 January 1995]: The information in respect of items (a) to (c) for the years 1984 to 1993 is set out in tables 1 to 3. Table 4 sets out the annual amount of Community payments member states received as a percentage of their gross national product.

Notes:
1. Miscellaneous expenditure by the European Commission covers payments not made to the Member States; the principal item being expenditure on aid to third countries.
2. With effect from 1988 payments to the Member States no longer included 10 per cent. collection costs in respect of Member States contributions of sugar and agricultural levies and customs duties. As from 1988 Member States retained 10 per cent. of their levies and duties contributions before making these contributions available to the community. After 1987, therefore, collection costs ceased to be accounted as payments to the community and were deducted, at source, from Member States resource payments.

Notes:
1. Figures for own resources are after account is taken of the UK's abatement and the bringing to account of surpluses and deficits in respect of Member States contributions in earlier years.
2. With effect from 1988, inclusive, Member States contributions exclude 10 per cent. collection costs in respect of their contributions of sugar and agricultural levies and customs duties—which they deduct from their contributions for levies and duties before making their contributions available to the community. Prior to 1988 Member States' made their sugar and agricultural levies and customs duties contributions available in full to the community. The 10 per cent. collection costs were paid from the expenditure side of the budget to Member States and thus scored as receipts from the community.
3. The revenue available to the community also includes relatively small amounts of miscellaneous revenue derived from such sources as the sale of publications, disposal of property etc.
4. Totals may not add up to the sum of the columns due to rounding.

DEFENCE

WE177 Free-fall Nuclear Bomb

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Soames: The annual operating cost of the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb is estimated to be £20 million.

Nuclear Forces

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the defence budget was spent on maintaining and operating all British nuclear forces in the last financial year.

Mr. Soames: Some 7.2 per cent. of the 1993–94 defence budget was spent on maintaining and operating British nuclear forces.

RAF Hospital, Wroughton

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Treasury rules prohibit the lease of the RAF hospital, Wroughton.

Mr. Soames: Treasury guidelines require that once land or property has been identified as surplus to defence requirements, it should be disposed of within three years. These guidelines further state that sale rather than lease should be the rule unless there are strong reasons to the contrary. Where outright sale is impractical, however, it would be our normal practice to consider a lease, among other options, pending a longer-term solution to the problem.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long he intends to lease the RAF hospital, Wroughton, to the Princess Margaret hospital, Swindon, after April 1996.

Mr. Soames: We are aware of the interest expressed by the Princess Margaret hospital Swindon—Swindon and Marlborough NHS trust—and have held preliminary discussions with it regarding its wish to make use of the Princess Alexandra RAF hospital, Wroughton, when it closes in March 1996. Formal negotiations have not yet begun, however, and it is too early to say what the outcome might be.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the possible future use of the land and buildings at the RAF hospital, Wroughton after April 1996.

Mr. Soames: Discussions are taking place with Swindon and Marlborough NHS trust regarding the continued use of Wroughton hospital for medical purposes. My Department is well aware of the sensitive nature of the site, which is an area of outstanding natural beauty. It is too early to consider alternative uses, but should that become necessary we would liaise closely with the local authority, in accordance with our normal practice.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) national health service patients were treated at RAF hospital, Wroughton, during the last five years and (b) beds were required at the RAF hospital, Wroughton by the Princess Margaret hospital, Swindon, during each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: The total numbers of NHS in-patient, and day-patient attendances at the Princess Alexandra's Royal Air Force hospital, Wroughton, in the years in question are as follows:

1989–90: 22,213

1990–91: 17,703

1991–92: 19,505

1992–93: 17,794

1993–94: 21,577

Figures for the number of beds at Wroughton required by the Princess Margaret hospital, Swindon, are not available for the entire period. In 1994 and 1995, however, some beds at the Princess Alexandra's hospital have been made available to the Swindon and Marlborough NHS Trust for a period of seven and a half and 12 weeks respectively.

Drag Hunting

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken to provide drag hunting by military personnel.

Mr. Soames: A small number of personnel participate in drag hunting, as one of a number of recognised sporting activities, during periods set aside for this purpose.

Low Flying

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the eight Royal Air Force Tornados flying at 500 ft above Barnoldswick and Earby at 6.15 pm on Monday 30 January came from.

Mr. Soames: Two formations of four Tornados from RAF Bruggen were authorised to fly in the general area in which the towns are located on 30 January at around the time in question. An investigation is under way to establish whether these aircraft flew over the towns at the height alleged. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member when the investigation is complete.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he takes to inform hon. Members of exercises by low-flying military aircraft.

Mr. Soames: When it is practical to do so, advance warning of major exercises is given to hon. Members whose constituents are likely to be affected. It would be impractical to provide prior notice of all low-level sorties since they are often determined at short notice to take account of variable factors such as weather conditions.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum height for low flying by military aircraft in the United Kingdom and Germany.

Mr. Soames: The normal minimum height for low flying by military fixed wing aircraft in the United Kingdom is 250 ft minimum separation distance, but a small amount of operational low flying down to 100 ft MSD is permitted in three specially designated tactical training areas located in the borders, northern Scotland and central Wales. Germany applies a general limit of 100 ft but allows some military flying below this height.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on low-flying military aircraft over urban areas.

Mr. Soames: Military aircrew are instructed to avoid flying low over major towns and conurbations, and to avoid all other populated areas wherever possible, whether they are listed for avoidance or not.

Falklands and Gulf Wars

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) of 19 January, Official Report, column 688, how the cash contributions from Governments were apportioned within his Department, and between his Department and other Government agencies and departments.

Mr. Soames: Apart from a £25,000,000 contribution by Japan, taken as an appropriation in aid of the defence budget in 1990–91, cash contributions were accounted for as consolidated fund extra receipts in the defence appropriation accounts, and thus offset the Government's increased expenditure arising from the conflict. Details of the Government's additional costs are listed in the minutes of evidence, pages 2 and 3, of the 55th report of the Committee of Public Accounts.

Contingent Liabilities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the agencies or projects triggering contingent liabilities under the Ordnance Factories and Military Services Act 1984 and shown in the Consolidated Fund accounts for the years 1984–85 to 1989–90.

Mr. Soames: The figures shown in section 4 of the supplementary statements to the consolidated fund and national loans fund accounts as the contingent liabilities under the Ordnance Factories and Military Services Act 1984 for the period 1985–86 to 1989–90 are estimates of the corporate risk incurred by International Military Services Ltd. for the years in question. The detailed make-up of these estimates is commercially confidential.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to "Public Bodies 1993" issued by the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science, pages 7 and 8 of which detail Ministry of Defence non-departmental public bodies. There are no plans at present to change the status of any of these bodies.

Trident

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current annual cost of maintaining the Trident system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We currently estimate that the average annual operating cost of Trident over its life will be about £200 million.

Land Mines

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of self-destruct mines as used by the British forces do not self destruct as specified by their manufacturers.

Mr. Freeman: None of the land mines currently in service with United Kingdom forces have self-destruct mechanisms.

However, the Army is due to be equipped later in the year with the multiple launch rocket system phase II, which will deploy anti-tank land mines; these will have self-destruct mechanisms. My Department is undertaking trials to ensure that the stringent specification is met.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it would cost to fit self-destructing and self-neutralising mechanisms retroactively on current United Kingdom anti-personnel mine stocks.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's policy is not to export these mines from MOD stocks. If required for use in war, they would be used only in accordance with the UN weaponry convention.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training a United Kingdom military field commander receives to enable him to judge accurately the short and long-term military and humanitarian costs and benefits of anti-personnel mine laying; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Training within the armed forces is a continuous process and the military and humanitarian costs and benefits of using military equipment, which includes anti-personnel mines, is included in the syllabus of a number of courses, which are attended by those appointed as field commanders. I will write to the hon. Member with fuller details of the nature of these courses.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what level of authority must be sought within the UK armed forces to permit mine laying by UK soldiers.

Mr. Soames: If required during an operation, the authority to lay mines will be sought, through the chain of command, from the operational commander.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much more a self-destructing or self-neutralising anti-personnel mine will cost than its dumb equivalent; and if he will give figures.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the purchase cost of self-destructing and self-neutralising mines are not held by my Department and therefore a cost comparison is not possible.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of state foe Defence what would be the financial cost to the Department of a total ban on the production, stockpiling, sale and use of anti-personnel mines.

Mr. Freeman: Since there is no such ban, we have made no assessment of what the financial consequences might be.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the precise principles and criteria which UK military commanders must use when complying with article 3, paragraph 3 of protocol II of the UN's inhumane weapons convention which prohibits the indiscriminate use of mines.

Mr. Soames: The UK would not use land mines indiscriminately. Minefields have to have a specific military purpose, and must be clearly marked using the correct NATO marking system. The location of mines is recorded to facilitate subsequent de-mining operations. The set rules and procedures that have to be followed are taught as part of the courses for Royal Engineers and any other soldiers who are responsible for mine laying and mine clearance.

Service Accommodation

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has the results of the audit work on official service residences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: In his written answer of 4 July 1994, Official Report, column 85, my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley), described the audit work that we had set in hand on official service residences following the discovery of significant overspends on the refurbishment of Haymes Garth, currently the residence of the Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief Personnel and Training Command. He undertook to make a full report at the conclusion of this work.

The external investigation of circumstances surrounding Haymes Garth was carried out by Ms Sheila Masters of KPMG Peat Marwick, building on earlier work by the Ministry's internal auditors. Her report establishes the sequence of events, identifies the failures of control which occurred, and makes recommendations for the future. The latest estimate of expenditure on Haymes Garth is £380,000. It is our intention to dispose of the property as soon as practicable, subject to the availability of suitable alternative accommodation for the AOCinC.

Internal auditors have, as my right hon. Friend indicated, also been conducting a wider examination of expenditure on official service residences, covering a selection of properties in each of the three services.

The general conclusion is that management of a majority of residences was generally satisfactory, but there were significant failures of control in some cases, including Haymes Garth. The Ministry's established procedures for the devolution of budgetary powers and responsibilities did not always operate as intended. The reports make it clear that this was partly due to lack of agreed standards for official service residences, which meant that too much was left to subjective judgements. There was also evidence that some staff have an incomplete understanding of the relevant procedures. Obligations to consult were sometimes ignored. This is not acceptable.

There are no findings of illegality or culpable impropriety, but failures of control imply individual failures in management and responsibility. The reports we now have, call into question the judgment of a number of individuals to a degree which may require action by the appropriate authorities. This is in hand.

Meanwhile, budget holders have been reminded that normal budgetary disciplines apply to expenditure of this kind, and that financial oversight at senior level should be maintained at all times. Steps to remedy the system defects which have come to light are being vigorously pursued. The effect will be to define most closely the standards of provision for residences and their furnishings and to ensure improved reporting of actual expenditure. Residences are provided to enable the occupant to do his job; provision should be limited to what is necessary for this purpose.

Beyond this, as I reported to the House on 18 October 1994, Official Report, columns 159-60, it was felt appropriate that the wider question of representational entertainment in the armed forces should be examined, and Sir Peter Cazalet agreed to carry out the investigation. As well as examining the requirement for senior officers to entertain, he is considering whether there are most cost-effective ways of doing so than the use of official residences and similar quarters, and in the light of that whether any properties can be sold. Future policy on the use of official service residences including Haymes Garth will be formed in the light of his recommendations.

I am placing a paper concerning the financial management of official service residences in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Scheme Leavers

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the number and proportion of trainees who six months after leaving were (a) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (b) in a full-time job with another employer, (c) employed in their own business, (d) in a part-time job, (e) in voluntary work, (f) on another Government training programme, (g) on a full-time education or training course, (h) unemployed and claiming benefit, (i) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (j) in a job club and (k) doing something else, as shown in the results of the youth training leavers survey for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, for the period April 1993 to March 1994, for all leavers and separately for male and female, for each ethnic group, and for those with a disability or health problem;

(2) what are the results of the training for work leavers survey for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, for the period between April 1993 and March 1994, for all leavers and separately for male and female, for each ethnic group, and for those with a disability or health problem, broken down to show the number and proportion of training for work leavers who (a) have been entered for a vocational qualification, (b) had obtained a vocational qualification, (c) had failed to obtain a vocational qualification and (d) were awaiting their results; what was the number and proportion of training for work leavers who six months after leaving were (i) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (ii) in a full-time job with another employer, (iii) employed in their own business, (iv) in a part-time job, (v) in voluntary work (vi) on another Government training programme, (vii) on a full-time education or training course, (viii) unemployed and claiming benefit, (ix) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (x) in a job club and (xi) doing something else; and what is the number and proportion of training for work leavers who had completed the training agreed in their initial action plan.

Mr. Paice: As this information is contained in a large number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what are the results from the training for work leavers survey for the period December 1992 to January 1994 for each training and enterprise council area in England and Wales and each local enterprise company area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of leavers who (a) had been entered for a vocational qualification, (b) had obtained a vocational qualification, (c) had failed to obtain a vocational qualification and (d) were awaiting their results; what was the number and proportion of training for work leavers who six months after leaving were (i) in a full-time job with their work experience employer, (ii) in a full-time job with another employer, (iii) employed in their own business, iv) in a part-time job, (v) in voluntary work, (vi) on another Government training programme, (vii) on a full-time education or training course, (viii) unemployed and claiming benefit, (ix) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (x) in a job club and (xi) doing something else; and what was the number and proportion of training for work leavers who had completed the training agreed in their initial action plan;

(2) what are the results of the youth training leavers survey for the period December 1992 to January 1994 for each training and enterprise council area in England and Wales and each local enterprise company area in Scotland broken down to show the number and proportion of youth training leavers who were (a) in full-time work with the same employer, (b) in full-time work with a different employer, (c) in part-time work, (d) on a full-time course at a college or training centre, (e) on another youth training scheme, (f) doing something else, (g) unemployed and (h) had obtained a vocation qualification; and what was (i) the number of questionnaires issued, (ii) the usable percentage response and (iii) the percentage of respondents who were early leavers.

Mr. Paice: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I placed in the Library on 13 January in answer to questions tabled by the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman).

Employment Service

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the internal working group was set up in Scotland to develop Employment Service services for Employment Service clients living in rural areas.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 10 February 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence on business of the Chief Executive, to reply to your question about when the internal working group was set up in Scotland.

The working group was established to address issues concerning the provision of Employment Service programmes and services in rural areas and to look at ways in which improvements could be made to assist our clients in these areas. The first meeting was held on 25 November 1994.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list by region those areas which have access to Employment Service freephone services in Scotland;

(2) if he will list by region the number of mobile jobcentres operating in Scotland;

(3) if he will list by region which press and radio are used to publicise Employment Service services in Scotland.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 10 February 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence on business of the Chief Executive, to reply to your questions about Scotland concerning the areas which have access to Employment Service (ES)

freephone services, the number of mobile Jobcentres, and press and radio used to publicise ES services.

The information you require is listed, by Regional and Island Council Authorities, in the following tables.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the timetable for linking (a) libraries, (b) community centres and (c) other focal points in rural communities to the Employment Service computer network;

(2) what system is in place to ensure that vacancy displays in post offices, libraries, community centres and other focal points in rural communities are regularly updated.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. G. Johnson to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 10 February 1995.

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence on business of the Chief Executive, to reply to your questions about the systems used to update vacancy displays in rural locations and the timetable for linking such locations to the Employment Service (ES) computer network.

The currency of vacancies in Jobcentres is one of the standards of performance outlined in the ES Jobseeker's Charter. Our aim is that when clients look at our job vacancy boards, they will find the vacancies up to date and available.

Where vacancies are displayed at locations other than Jobcentres such as libraries or community centres, this aim may be achieved by way of local agreements with the relevant organisations who, on our instruction, remove old vacancies and replace them with new ones. Alternatively, one of my officers will travel to visit the location to update the displays. In some cases, depending on the distances between the Jobcentre and the vacancy display, both activities will take place.

There are no plans to link these outside locations to our present computerised vacancy handling system, "Supervacs".

Jobsearch Plan

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will withdraw question 18 on page 10 from the draft jobsearch plan.

Miss Widdecombe: No. The draft jobsearch plan has been designed to enable jobseekers to set out information to help them prepare for the discussions with an employment adviser about their jobseeker's agreement. The jobsearch plan form will ask for details of availability for work, the sort of work being sought and how the jobseeker intends to find it. Questions relating to the level of pay being sought are relevant to these matters.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, in response to question 18 on page 10 of the draft jobsearch plan which requires the jobseeker to state the lowest wage that he or she is willing to work for, he would expect a person from an ethnic minority to state a lower wage rate than a white person.

Miss Widdecombe: No.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, in response to question 18 on page 10 of the draft jobsearch plan which requires the jobseeker to state the lowest wage that he or she is willing to work for, he would expect women to state a lower wage rate than men.

Miss Widdecombe: No.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the status of the jobsearch plan under the Jobseekers Bill; and what sanctions can be imposed upon claimants if they refuse to sign the jobsearch plan.

Miss Widdecombe: The jobsearch plan has no status under the Jobseekers Bill. It will be used to gather information to help draw up the jobseeker's agreement. No sanctions will be imposed for not signing the plan.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to introduce a minimum level for the lowest wage a person needs to declare under the draft jobsearch plan under the Jobseekers Bill.

Miss Widdecombe: None.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment at what interval the jobsearch plan will be renewed by an individual claimant under the Jobseekers Bill.

Miss Widdecombe: The jobsearch plan will be used to gather information to help the employment officer and jobseeker to draw up an initial jobseeker's agreement. A new jobsearch plan might in some cases be appropriate to help the employment officer and the jobseeker vary a jobseeker's agreement during a claim.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which questions contained within the jobsearch plan are at present contained in a signed document; and what is the sanction for failing to declare or making a false declaration.

Miss Widdecombe: Nearly all of the information which it is proposed should be gathered by the new jobsearch plan form is at present collected on forms which are signed by the claimant. The order and phrasing of some of the questions has been altered in the current draft of the plan. The section on efforts to find work, in particular, has been re-designed to help the jobseeker set out his jobsearch plans in more detail.

There will be no sanctions for failing to fill in a new jobsearch plan form. It is, however, an offence for a jobseeker to make a statement or representation he knows to be false and we propose to continue this under the jobseeker's allowance.

Regulated Economies

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her oral answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 7, if she will list the international evidence that more regulated economies are less successful in creating jobs.

Mr. Oppenheim: There is a growing body of work—much of it through international comparisons—on the effect of regulation on labour markets. This work was recently summarised in the OECD jobs study, "Evidence and Explanations Part II: The Adjustment Potential of the Labour Market", Chapter 6, pages 63–100. Among its conclusions are "the employment/population ratio . . . tends to be lower in countries with high levels of job security" measured by the strictness of statutory employment security provisions. The OECD jobs study drew heavily on recent work including:

D. Grubb and W. Wells, "Employment Regulation and Patterns of Work in EC Countries", OECD Economic Studies No. 21, winter 1993;

W. Wells, "Does the Structure of Employment Legislation Affect the Structure of Employment and Unemployment?", paper at United Kingdom EC Presidency Labour Market Conference, Glasgow, November 1992;

Other studies of the effects of labour market regulation include:

S. Bentolila and G. Bertola, "Firing Costs and Labour Demand: How Bad is Eurosclerosis?" Review of Economic Studies, 1990;

S. Bentolila and G. Saint-Paul, "The Macroeconomic Impact of Flexible Labour Contracts, with an Application to Spain", European Economic Review, 1990;

OECD Employment Outlook, 1993, chapter 3, section D;

OECD Employment Outlook, 1994, chapter 4, section D.

Wages

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in each English region and for Wales and Scotland earn (a) less than £1.50 an hour, (b) between £1.50 and £2.00 an hour, (c) between £2.00 and £2.50 an hour, (d) between £2.50 and £3.00 an hour, (e) between £3.00 and £3.50 an hour and (f) between £3.50 and £4.00 an hour.

Mr. Oppenheim: Estimated numbers of both full and part-time employees are given in the following table:

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Expenditure on all forms of advertising prior to 1987–88 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Expenditure on advertising for each year thereafter is shown in the table. In 1993–94, the way in which expenditure is recorded changed, so the figures for 1993–94 and 1994–95—to December—include all forms of publicity. The Lord Chancellor is responsible for three agencies: Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. As the hon. Member's question concerns specific operational matters, on which the chief executives are best placed to provide answers, I have accordingly asked the chief executives to reply direct.

Year	£
1987–88	6,990
1988–89	5,117
1989–90	6,745
1990–91	5,893
1991–92	24,324
1992–93	16,450
1993–94	78,541
1994–95[1]	80,096

[1] To December

Note:
1993–94 prices—adjusted by the GDP deflator published 29 November, 1994.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 10 February 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about advertising.

1. The Public Record has spent the following sums (at 1994 prices) on staff recruitment advertising:

1986–87: nil
1987–88: nil
1988–89: nil
1989–90: nil
1990–91: £28
1991–92: £20,666
1992–93: £10,326
1993–94: £77,392

2. In addition to the above figures, since 1991–92 the Office has spent approximately £1,500 per annum advertising its own products for sale.

3. Information for earlier years is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I am confident that any expenditure on advertising in the earlier years would have been occasional and very small.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 10 February 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning total expenditure by HM Land Registry on all forms of advertising for each year since 1979. I can provide the following information:

Year	Total advertising costs at 1994 Prices £
1979–80	59,340
1980–81	12,254
1981–82	14,329
1982–83	9,296
1983–84	5,795
1984–85	6,792
1985–86	11,609
1986–87	19,112
1987–88	47,020
1988–89	94,278
1989–90	45,719
1990–91	24,327
1991–92	6,932
1992–93	15,770
1993–94	16,558

The Registry major expenditure on advertising has been for staff recruitment, particularly to meet the property boom of the late 1980's; for advertising in connection with the registration of high value transactions (until 1980); and to give effect to a continuing statutory requirement concerning the replacement of Land and Charge Certificates.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr Malcolm Bruce, dated 10 February 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's response to your parliamentary question listed on 9 February 1995, regarding expenditure on all forms of advertising since 1979.

The Public Trust Office does not have a policy of advertising its services and there has been no expenditure on advertising since 1987/88.

The office is only obliged to keep expenditure accounts for six years and if any spending took place on advertising prior to 1987/88 this could only be ascertained if available at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Office for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

The Prime Minister: None.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cardiff Bay Opera House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the impact on funding from the millennium fund of the proposed Cardiff Bay opera house of (a) breaches in the rules of the competition organised by the Cardiff Bay opera house trust and (b) breaches of the planning permission of the local planning authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 January 1995]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place a copy in the Library of the House.

TREASURY

Privatisation

Mr. Booth : To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what executive agencies formerly in the civil service will soon be privatised.

Sir George Young: The Government have announced plans to transfer the following executive agencies to the private sector: the Transport Research Laboratory; the National Engineering Laboratory; the Laboratory of the Government Chemist; ADAS, in part; the Natural Resources Institute; and the Accreditation Services, part of the National Physical Laboratory.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is public expenditure per head in Wales in the current financial year; and what is the equivalent in England, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Aitken: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave to the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) on 2 February, Official Report, column 1199.

Expenditure Review

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the redundancy terms offered to staff in his Department following the Treasury's fundamental review of expenditure.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury's fundamental expenditure review is still continuing. At all but the most senior grades the precise staff levels required have not yet been finalised. If there is a surplus of staff at any level, it will be managed by means other than redundancy, where possible.

The financial terms in the event of redundancy are those set out in the civil service compensation scheme. This scheme—formerly section 10 of the principal civil service pension scheme—which applies throughout civil service, was laid before Parliament on 20 December 1994.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates the Treasury has for the annual costs to companies and members of the public of accounting for and paying capital gains tax.

Sir George Young: The Inland Revenue is not aware of any recent studies of capital gains tax compliance costs.

The deregulation task force chaired by Francis Maude is looking at capital gains tax as part of its efforts to reduce compliance costs for businesses. We shall consider carefully any recommendations the task force may make in due course.

European Monetary Institute

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, columns 63–64, about the European Monetary Institute, what period of time is intended to be covered by the institute's budgeted expenditure for which the total capital requirement is 615.6 million ecu.

Mr. Nelson: The capital resources will be used to generate an income necessary to cover the expenditure of the European Monetary Institute until its liquidation, in accordance with article 1091 of the EC treaty. The Council of the EMI intends to review the size of the resources three years after the establishment of the EMI, at the end of 1996.

Income Tax Evasion

Ms Lynne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money his Department estimates was lost through income tax evasion in each year from 1990 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: No reliable estimates are available.

Company Shares

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to amend the tax law regarding the buy-back of company shares.

Sir George Young: The current Finance Bill contains no proposals relating to the tax treatment of the purchase by a company of its own shares, but, as with a wide range of tax issues, the position is kept under review.

Clearing Banks (Charges)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the clearing banks to discuss charging policies and the need for openness with customers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: My colleagues and I meet the chairmen and other representatives of the clearing banks from time to time to discuss a wide range of issues. Bank charges for business customers were looked at in reviews of the financing of small firms published by the Bank of England in January 1994 and January 1995. Neither highlighted charges as a significant problem. For the retail sector, the code of banking practice, introduced by all the major banks, already encourages greater openness between banks and their customers. All the major banks have now introduced, or are introducing, pre-notification of charges.

Civil Servants

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the numbers of staff with science, engineering and technology qualifications employed in the civil service by grade in (a) 1979, (b) 1983, (c) 1987 and (d) 1993.

Sir George Young: This information is not held centrally. Below the open structure, there are civil servants employed in the professional and technology group and the science group. Details of the numbers and grades of these staff are available in table 4 of "Civil Service Statistics" for each of the years. Copies of "Civil Service Statistics" are available in the Library.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the Government's policy is on relocating civil service jobs to areas of high unemployment and low opportunities.

Sir George Young: Departments and agencies should review the location of their work with the intention of securing cost savings, and wider employment and economic development benefits, including consistency with Ministers' wider regional and inner-city area policies.

Departments considering relocation liaise closely with other Departments, the Government offices for the English regions, local authorities and the training and enterprise councils over their proposals for change.

Ecu

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what work the Government have undertaken to facilitate the use of the ecu.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Since 1988 the Government have issued ecu denominated debt. In addition to widening the options for management of the United Kingdom's reserves, this programme shows the importance the Government attach to providing further opportunities for the development of the private ecu markets in London.

Home Owners (Benefit Entitlement)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral answer of 2 February to the hon. Member for Warrington, North, (Mr. Hoyle) Official Report, column 1201, what advice he has received from the Council of Mortgage Lenders about the likely effect of the changes he proposed in the Budget to income support for home owners' mortgage interest payments on the number of repossessions.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 7 February 1995]: The Department of Social Security has on-going discussions with the Council of Mortgage Lenders and will continue to do so throughout the consultation process. The council has expressed concern about the possible impact of the proposals. The Government are listening carefully to its concerns but believe that the proposed changes will result in the development of comprehensive quality insurance which will provide better protection for all home owners against repossession, not just those who currently receive income support mortgage interest.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his office and its agencies for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office incurred no expenditure in respect of advertising over the years in question. I am not responsible for any agencies.

SCOTLAND

NHS Trusts

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what (a) guidance and (b) direction he has issued to NHS trusts in Scotland relating to local pay bargaining; and if he will place copies of these documents in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: NHS in Scotland employers are aware of the Government's policy. Responsibility for devising pay arrangements should be delegated wherever possible to those who are responsible for managing the delivery of services. NHS employers in Scotland are responsible for taking appropriate steps to develop and implement local pay.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Lang: The Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1994", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House, lists non-departmental public bodies, nationalised industries, public corporations and NHS bodies. None of the bodies listed as being sponsored by my Department has been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector. Non-departmental public bodies are subject to review every five years, at which time consideration is given inter alia to the possibility of privatisation. The position of the other bodies is also considered regularly.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why he has not yet provided the information about next steps agencies requested by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton in his question of 20 January.

Mr. Lang: I apologise for the delay in answering the right hon. Member's question, which was in fact answered on 8 February, Official Report, column 336.

Dundee Port Authority

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public investment in the form of Government and European grants has been given to Dundee port authority in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

No Government grants were paid to the authority for port-related developments over this period. Payments from the European regional development fund were:

Year	£
1985	104,957
1986	80,178
1987	Nil
1988	1,389,300
1989	874,200
1990	Nil
1991	353,905
1992	178,270
1993	47,491
1994	520,679
1995 (to date)	Nil
Total	3,548,980

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he or his officials have had with Dundee port authority in relation to proposals for privatising that authority.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

Dundee port authority's chairman has met my noble Friend Lord Goschen, and with his professional advisers has had a number of meetings with officials of the Department.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advertisements

Ms Corston: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions and in what circumstances in the last five years advertisements have been placed in newspapers or periodicals which have been described as being issued by, or on behalf of, Ministers in his Department rather than on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Heseltine: Within the framework of collective responsibility there is no practical distinction between publicity described as being issued by a single Minister or Her Majesty's Government.

Centrally produced DTI advertising does not refer to either Her Majesty's Government or an individual Minister, but generally includes the DTI logo and its descriptor.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of his proposals for the Insolvency Service on the rights of the employees of the service to transferred rights and conditions.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In the absence of any decision to contract out the work of official receivers, it is too early to consider the issue of Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981, the implications of which may not become clear until the nature of proposals in any bidding process could be assessed.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what adjustments to the spending plans for his Department he has made following his proposals for the Insolvency Service;

(2) what provision he has made for redundancy costs arising out of his proposals for the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the announcement my right hon. and noble Friend Earl Ferrers made on 10 October 1994, Official Report, column 94. No early retirement or severance provisions have been made by my Department, as the preparatory work on increasing private sector involvement in the work of the official receivers is still on-going, nor has my Department made any adjustments to its spending plans.

Insolvency Practitioners

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he proposes to take to remedy the criticism of insolvency practitioners made by the National Audit Office.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The reports of the National Audit Office and of the Public Accounts Committee contained recommendations that the Insolvency Service should seek to improve the quality and timeliness of reports submitted by insolvency practitioners concerning unfit conduct of directors in insolvent companies.

The Insolvency Service has issued revised guidelines to insolvency practitioners which emphasised the need for timeliness of reports and the adequacy of evidence to support allegations of unfit conduct. These guidelines are being reinforced by the newly constituted joint insolvency monitoring unit set up by the insolvency profession to raise standards of its members. In addition, the Insolvency Service has commenced a programme of visits to practitioners who have a poor record of reporting, backed by prosecution in extreme cases.

Steel Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the levels of steel imports into the United Kingdom for each three-month period since January 1993 from (a) the United States of America, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Korea and (e) Japan.

Mr. Needham: The information is in the following table:

United Kingdom imports of steel[1]

Shipbuilding

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to encourage United Kingdom shipbuilding yards to develop their capacity to produce floating oil and gas platforms.

Mr. Eggar: My Department established a working group on floating production systems last year and the group has made positive proposals to strengthen the competitiveness of UK yards and other suppliers in this sector. Its recommendations are being pursued with the industry and a report will be published shortly.

Oil Companies (Equipment Purchases)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to encourage United Kingdom oil companies to purchase equipment from United Kingdom producers.

Mr. Eggar: My Department helps oil companies in the UK and overseas to identify competitive UK suppliers and supports initiatives to help the suppliers improve their competitiveness.

Ferrybridge

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what allowance was made in the liabilities of PowerGen's accounts for the flue gas desulphurisation of Ferrybridge power station when the company was privatised; what is his estimate of that sum in 1995 prices; and how much has been spent on flue gas desulphurisation of Ferrybridge station.

Mr. Eggar: The expectation that investment in 4 GW of flue gas desulphurisation equipment at PowerGen's coal-fired plant would form part of its capital expenditure programme was taken into account at privatisation. The 1991 prospectus for the sale of PowerGen gave an estimated cost of £250 million for the fitting of flue gas desulphurisation equipment at Ratcliffe power station. PowerGen had applied for planning permission to fit flue gas desulphurisation equipment at Ferrybridge C. This permission has subsequently been granted. Information on expenditure on particular capital projects is a matter for the company.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is required to review the conditions of integrated pollution control authorisations granted to power stations and may impose new conditions to prevent or reduce emissions of pollutants subject to the application of BATNEEC—best available technique not entailing excessive cost.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has power to direct whether specific conditions should or should not be imposed.

Cars (Distribution)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has received on EU proposals to restrict the block exemptions governing the distribution of cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The European Commission has published a draft regulation—OJ 379/16—intended to replace Commission regulation 123/85. This regulation governs the selective and exclusive dealership agreements for motor vehicles, and is due to expire in June 1995.

My Department has consulted interested parties representing United Kingdom manufacturers, dealers, trade associations, consumer groups and legal bodies to obtain their views on the draft. It has received representations from, or held discussions with, some 40 companies and representative organisations.

N. M. Rothschild and Son Ltd.

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report columns 760–61, if the contract awarded to N. M. Rothschild was for a fixed fee; which tender was recommended to the then Secretary of State for Energy for acceptance by the interdepartmental group; and when the contact is expected to end.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 February 1995]: The contract was awarded on the basis of hourly rates. The then Secretary of State for Energy acted in accordance with the advice he received from officials. The contract will end once the privatisation of the British coal Corporation, including the non-mining activities, is completed.

Military Equipment Exports (Indonesia)

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list military equipment that has been refused export licences to Indonesia on the grounds that such equipment might be used for internal repression between 1 January 1991 and 31 December 1993 and between 31 December 1993 and 1 February 1994.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 7 February 1995]: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to reveal details of export licences or applications for licences unless the requirements of confidentiality are outweighed by the public interest.

In this instance, I believe that the public interest is served by disclosing the following information:

Three applications were made in the first period for licences to export military equipment which were ultimately refused.

The goods were night vision goggles, an HF transceiver station together with battery charger, cable and ancillaries, and a thermal imager with laser range finder and teleconverter lens.

No applications for licences made during the second period were refused.

Recent rejections have been riot guns and CS cartridges for the Indonesian Police and pump action shotguns for the prison service.

The potential for the use against the civilian population was one of the factors taken into account during the processing of the applications.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Witnesses (Disabilities)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions by the Crown Prosecution Service have been dropped within the last five years on the grounds that the principal witnesses or victims have a hearing difficulty or suffer from mental illness.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service maintains no central records regarding witnesses or victims of crime. The information is recorded on individual case files, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Waste Sites

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the domestic waste dump sites in Northern Ireland where environmental problems have arisen, indicating the type of problem which has arisen at each site.

Mr. Moss: At present, 28 landfill sites are authorised to receive domestic waste. Twenty-six are operated under district council control and two are operated by the private sector, but regulated by statutory authorities. Prior to 1980, landfill sites were used without proper design and building plans. Since then, authorised sites are engineered to deal with and contain leachate and gas emissions. Environmental problems associated with landfill sites can be litter, smell and bird invasion.

The degree to which any of these problems may be found at a particular site will depend upon a range of factors such as location, the engineering technology used in design and operation of the site and on-going site management.

Visual Disability

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to redefine the term blind so that a person who is unable to pass the vision test associated with the driving test should be regarded as being unable to do any work for which eyesight is essential.

Mr. Moss: No.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to abandoning the system of two categories of registrable visual disability.

Mr. Moss: The system of distinguishing between blindness and partial sight assists in service planning as the needs of blind and partially sighted people are not identical. Fewer people might be willing to register with social services departments if doing so meant they were required to accept the label "blind". We have no plans to change the present system.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to instruct Department of Health officials to issue new guidelines to approve consultant ophthalmologists to certify all persons with a visual acuity of 6/18, or less, as blind and registrable in that category with social services.

Mr. Moss: None.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the practice in other countries of having only one category of registrable visual disability.

Mr. Moss: None. The system in use throughout the United Kingdom has been established over many years enabling trends in causes of blindness and partial sight to be monitored. There are no plans to amend the system.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Sir John Wheeler: The public bodies for which the Secretary of State retains departmental responsibility are set out in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1994", copies of which are available in the Library. Since "Public Bodies 1994" was published, the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Agency was established.

None of these bodies has been identified as being suitable for placing in the private sector.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the termination payments made to chief executives and general and senior managers in each NHS trust since its inception, indicating the size and number of individual payments.

Mr. Moss: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Consideration is being given to the collection of data on termination payments in Northern Ireland.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is listed:

Year	Expenditure £ (in 1994 prices)
1979–80	1,146,986
1980–81	999,033
1981–82	1,159,163
1982–83	2,731,538
1983–84	4,821,516
1984–85	4,360,906
1985–86	6,004,314
1986–87	5,651,684
1987–88	5,719,217
1988–89	6,100,684
1989–90	6,393,354
1990–91	6,769,594
1991–92	7,953,941
1992–93	7,770,377
1993–94	6,046,557
1994–95	[1]5,241,690

[1] Consists of estimated expenditure or expenditure to date for Departments.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Advisory Board for the Research Councils

28. Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the final recommendations of the disbanded Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

Mr. David Hunt: The final recommendations were in December 1993 and consisted of advice on the then science budget. I have placed copies on the Library.

Government-funded Research

30. Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total spending reduction in Government-funded research which took place when near-market research was abandoned.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Over the period—1987–88 to 1991–92—there was a cash increase of 19 per cent. in total Government-funded R and D expenditure.

36. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by what method he is kept informed as to scientific developments and breakthroughs that warrant funding and other support from Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Many different methods.

Space Funding

37. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the Department of Trade and Industry on funding of space science.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I met my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for space last November, to discuss the funding of space science and our two Departments continue to work closely together.

There is continual contact between the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council, my Department and the British National Space Centre at an official level, through which we are currently looking in detail at the cost-effectiveness of the UK's participation in the European Space Agency's science programme.

I recognise fully that our space scientists have an excellent reputation and we will continue to support our best space science research.

Large Hadron Collider

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the letter from the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what discussions Her Majesty's Government are having with CERN partners on ways in which the original timetable for the large hadron collider and associated developments in particle physics can be adhered to.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The timetable of the large hadron collider project agreed by member states in December 1995 foresees full operation in 2008. This can be achieved within known existing resources. Completion before this date will require significant additional contributions from non-member states.

The CERN director general is taking the lead in discussing with potential partners the terms on which they might participate scientifically and financially. He has the full support of the UK and other CERN member states. We stand ready to give the director general every assistance to help these discussions reach a satisfactory conclusion. Any proposal for the participation of non-member states will be discussed by member states in the CERN council.

Market Testing

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will name the companies which have been successful in obtaining contracts to provide services for Government Departments as a result of the market-testing process; and if he will list them by Government department.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: For information on the contracts awarded by the Office of Public Service and Science, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 12 December 1994, Official Report, column 455. Other Ministers provided similar information on their Departments to the hon. Member for Darlington. Their answers were published in the Official Report between 12 December and 16 December. The Ministry of Defence provided a full list of contractors in an answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) Official Report, 30 January 1995, columns 546–48.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Somaliland

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he or international organisations have to restart mine clearing operations in Somaliland.

Mr. Baldry: We have no plans. We understand the UN has been unable to agree a programme for mine clearance work with the regional authorities, which include adequate systems for monitoring, reporting and accountability.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the ODA co-ordinator in Hargeisa has made of the priorities for British and European assistance to Somaliland.

Mr. Baldry: North-west Somalia's needs are extensive. Britain's priorities remain support for programmes to help re-establish basic health and education services and help for those displaced by the recent fighting. EU assistance includes support for the livestock sector; water and sanitation and income generation. We agree with the NGO liaison and support officer's judgment that these remain priority areas for assistance.

Wealth Distribution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the statistical impact made by his Department's programme in the relative distribution of wealth between the world's 20 richest and 20 poorest countries.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 9 February 1995]: Twenty-nine per cent. of the United Kingdom's total bilateral net official development assistance disbursements in 1992 went to the 20 countries listed as poorest in GNP per capita terms according to World bank information. The only countries with a higher percentage than the United Kingdom were Norway, Denmark and Finland, all of which had lower total disbursements to these countries in volume terms.

However, it is not possible to isolate the statistical effect of aid disbursements to these countries—let alone disbursements by a single donor—from other factors when examining their economic growth.

EMPLOYMENT

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to monitor the suitability of employment agencies offering domiciliary care provision; and how such agencies are monitored in terms of conduct and suitability.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Agencies Act 1973 and its associated regulations require all employment agencies to abide by specified minimum standards of conduct. Inspectors from the Department's Employment Agency standards offices investigate all complaints and other indications of breaches of the standards of conduct and undertake random checks.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money was owed by South Thames TEC to Southwark college (a) for work undertaken before 7 November 1994 and (b) for work undertaken after 7 November 1994.

Mr. Paice: I am as yet unable to assess the financial impact of the receivership of South Thames training and enterprise council on Southwark college. Money owed by South Thames TEC to Southwark college before 7 November 1994 is a matter for the receiver, who is still establishing the total amount involved. The Department has processed invoices from the college for 7 November 1994 to 1 January 1995 to the value of £133,209.55 and these will be paid to the college by the end of next week.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the financial impact of the receivership of South Thames TEC on Southwark college.

Mr. Paice: I am as yet unable to assess the financial impact of the receivership of South Thames training and enterprise council on Southwark college.

Jobseekers

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria will be used to assess an individual's skills, qualifications and experience for the purposes of entering into the jobseeker's agreement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The employment officer and the jobseeker will seek to draw up a jobseeker's agreement. The terms and conditions of the agreement have to be such that if the jobseeker complies with the agreement he will satisfy the conditions set out in regulations on availability and actively seeking work.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria will be used by the adjudication officer to determine what is reasonable for purposes of deciding whether a claimant for jobseeker's allowance considers the agreement as a condition of entitlement to be unreasonable.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1995]: Adjudication officers will be expected to have regard to the legislation and any relevant caselaw. They will be assisted by guidance issued by the chief adjudication officer.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what procedures will apply when the adjudicating officer charged with deciding whether the agreement as a condition of entitlement for jobseeker's allowance is reasonable, rules it (a) to be reasonable and (b) to be unreasonable.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 February 1995]: (a) If the adjudication officer determines that it is reasonable to expect the jobseeker to comply with the terms and conditions of a proposed agreement, the jobseeker can accept his determination or appeal to a social security appeals tribunal.

(b) If the adjudication officer determines that it is not reasonable he may give directions as to the terms and conditions on which the employment officer is to enter into an agreement with the jobseeker. If the jobseeker does not consider the adjudication officer's terms reasonable, he can appeal to another adjudication officer, and if he is still not content he can appeal to a social security appeals tribunal.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have died in prison from natural causes in the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Robert Litherland, dated 13 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many people have died in prison from natural causes in the past five years.

A total of 147 people have died from natural causes whilst in custody during the last five years.

1991: 20
1992: 32
1993: 31
1994: 27

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether decisions relating to the searching of category A prisoners and their visitors are policy or operational matters.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The power to search prisoners and their visitors is set out in the prison rules, which are made by the Secretary of State. Decisions relating to the rules themselves and changes to them are policy matters.

The actions which are taken to implement the rules, including the procedures for searching category A prisoners and their visitors, are operational matters, as are the day-to-day decisions to search individual prisoners or visitors.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what cuts to its budget have been proposed by the Prison Service; and what new equipment and materials have been cancelled.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Prison Service has not proposed any cuts to its budget and no new equipment and materials have been cancelled.

Data Centre, Bootle

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 50, for what reasons the transitional and restructuring costs in the contract between his Department and the Sema Group in respect of the privatisation of the data centre in Bootle remain in confidence now that the contract has been agreed; what proportion this element of the contract was of the total contract amount; if any part of the agreement prior to the contract being signed required such commercial secrecy; if permission of Sema is required to publish the figure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It is not the usual practice to publish commercially sensitive information about contracts particularly where that would involve the disclosure of details of the pricing arrangements or structure of competitive bids and this applies both before and after a contract is let. The purpose is to preserve the legitimate business interests of competing companies who may wish to bid for future contracts. This consideration applied to the contract between the Home Office and Sema Group plc and I continue to regard information about the proportion of the contract costs which relate to transitional and restructuring activities as commercially confidential. If it was considered appropriate to disclose commercially sensitive information from tender or contractual documents, I would regard it as necessary to discuss the matter in advance with the contractor concerned.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 50, how many people were employed at the data centre in Bootle prior to its privatisation; how many of those employees (a) have been and (b) will be made redundant as a result of the Sema Group's proposals; and if he will indicate the type of staff, and the number in each category, made redundant.

Mr. Howard: Following the award of a contract for the supply of Home Office administrative information technology services, staff in the undertaking were transferred to Sema Group plc under the terms of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981; this included 272 staff based on Merseyside.

Although subsequent redundancies by Sema Group are a matter for it, we understand from the company that, in order to make efficiency savings identified following an operational review of business requirements, it invited applications for voluntary redundancy in November 1994 from staff on Merseyside. As a result, 92 former Home Office staff on Merseyside have been accepted for voluntary redundancy under terms equivalent to those which would have applied if they had remained civil servants. I understand that all of these were formerly administrative grade civil servants in the grades administrative assistant to grade 7.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report. column 50, what is the expected percentage level of overspend or underspend for the estimated total payments from his Department for the Sema Group's transitional and restructuring costs against the amount allocated for these costs in the contract.

Mr. Howard: Payments to Sema Group plc to cover transitional and restructuring costs are expected to be at the level set out in the contract. Sema Group's bid contained an element for such costs, a proportion of which were estimated because they were dependent on the outcome of an operational review which they would conduct if awarded the contract. However, the contract specified a maximum to be paid by the Home Office on the basis that any costs over that amount would be met by Sema Group. It is expected that the level of payments from the Home Office to Sema Group will be at that maximum level, which was the level assumed in evaluating the bid.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Howard: The following non-departmental public bodies presently fall within my Department's responsibility:

Alcohol Education and Research Council
Commission for Racial Equality
Community Development Foundation
Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority
Fire Services Examinations Board
Gaming Board for Great Britain
Horserace Betting Levy Board
Horserace Totalisator Board
Office of the Data Protection Registrar
Police Complaints Authority
Police Promotions Examinations Board
National Lottery Charities Board
Advisory Board on Restricted Patients
Advisory Committee on Service Candidates
Advisory Council on Race Relations
Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs
Animal Procedures Committee
Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council
Firearms Consultative Committee
National Board for Crime Prevention
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales
Parole Board
Poisons Board
Police Negotiating Board
Criminal Injuries Compensation Board
Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeals Panel
Data Protection Tribunal
Horserace Betting Levy Appeals Tribunal for England and Wales
Interception of Communications Tribunal
Misuse of Drugs Advisory Body
Misuse of Drugs Professional Panel
Misuse of Drugs Tribunal
Police Arbitration Tribunal
Police Discipline Appeals Tribunal
Security Services Tribunal
Boards of Visitors to Penal Establishments

These NDPBs are subject to a rolling review every five years, the first stage of which includes an examination of prior options, including the scope for privatisation. At present, none has been identified for privatisation.

Police and Prison Services (Radio)

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of running the Home Office supply service for radio and high technology equipment to the police and prison services.

Mr. Howard: The police and prison services now purchase their radio and high technology equipment directly from suppliers. The Department, through the radio frequency and communications planning unit, undertakes frequency regulation and management functions and provides strategic advice and technical guidance on radio matters to the police, fire, prison and other Home Office Departments. The cost of this service is approximately £940,000 in 1994–95.

Parkhurst

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who advised him that the installation of geophones in the perimeter fence at Parkhurst would have to wait until building work was complete.

Mr. Howard: After the escapes from Parkhurst which took place on 3 January, I was informed by the Prison Service of the reasons why geophones had not been installed, as I explained to the House in my statement on 10 January, column 34.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Mr. Howard: Expenditure on television, radio press and poster advertising by my Department and its agencies, except the Forensic Science Service agency, for each year since 1979 is as follows:

1993–94 prices (using the GDP deflator)

1979–80	7,131,352
1980–81	3,422,914
1981–82	3,470,771
1982–83	3,456,974
1983–84	4,659,770
1984–85	5,243,644
1985–86	5,037,696

1993–94 prices using the GDP deflator

1986–87	7,395,028
1987–88	6,599,918
1988–89	7,107,320
1989–90	6,766,316
1990–91	6,524,067
1991–92	7,797,182
1992–93	7,569,370
1993–94	9,345,196

The projected spend for 1994–95 is £10,178,074.

The above figures do not include the marginal advertising spend for the Forensic Science Service since it became an agency in 1991. The agency does not have data to separate advertising spend from general publicity. Its systems will be modified to provide a breakdown from 1995–96.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the cost of policing the demonstrations against the export of live calves;

(2) if he will require commercial organisations to pay the full cost of policing their commercial operations.

Mr. Maclean: The policing of recent demonstrations against the export of live animals has arisen from the duty of the police to uphold the law and I should not expect charges to be made for this.

Information on the total costs of policing demonstrations against the export of live calves is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Drugs

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what proportion of prisoners were estimated to be drug users (a) when they entered prison, and (b) when they were released from prison in (i) womens' prisons and (ii) mens' prisons in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 13 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on how many and what proportion of prisoners were estimated to be drug-users on entering and upon release from prison for both male and female establishments for each of the past 15 years.

The information currently available on the prevalence of drug misuse among prisoners does not enable me to provide you with the information that you requested. However, the Prison Service will be introducing mandatory drug testing for prisoners. As part of the mandatory drug testing programme prisoners will be required to participate in random drug testing. This will provide statistical information on the extent of drug misuse in prison.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that monitoring shall be carried out of the number of accidents and fatalities resulting from the use of bathing beaches.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: No. But I would refer the hon. Member to the work of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents and, so far as concerns fatal accidents, to the reply which I gave to his question on 25 January, column 236.

Prevention of Terrorism Powers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-United Kingdom nationals in each year, to date, have been (a) excluded from the United Kingdom, (b) are currently excluded from the United Kingdom and (c) have had exclusion orders withdrawn under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 7 February 1995]: Only persons who are not British citizens may be excluded from the United Kingdom under the 1989 Act: 14 persons are currently so excluded. Figures for each year since 1989 are shown in the following table:

Persons excluded from the United Kingdom

	Orders in force on 1 January	New orders made during year	Orders renewed during year	Orders revoked/lapsed during year
1989	35	—	4	5
1990	30	4	2	12
1991	22	3	6	7
1992	18	1	4	1
1993	18	—	4	1
1994	17	1	5	3
1995[1]	15	—	—	1

Note:
[1] As at 7 February.

HEALTH

National Blood Authority

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the relationship between the National Blood Authority and the promotion of national prune week.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the National Blood Authority.

RAF Hospital, Wroughton

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department made to the Ministry of Defence regarding the implication for the NHS of the closure of RAF hospital, Wroughton.

Mr. Sackville: Regular discussions take place between officials of the Department of Health and the Ministry of Defence about plans for the future of military hospitals and their impact on the national health service, including RAF Wroughton. The timing and management of change at individual hospitals are discussed in joint machinery involving officials from my Department, NHS managers and Ministry of Defence officials.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on bovine somatotropin following recent research at Musgrave Park hospital on concentrations of insulin-like growth factor 1.

Mr. Sackville: All cows' milk contains IGF-1, an insulin-like growth factor. Administering artificially produced bovine somatatrophin to dairy cows results in marginally increased levels of IGF-1 in their milk.

I understand that doctors at the Musgrove Park hospital, Taunton, have been conducting research into possible links between BST and cancer.

Pregnancy

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number and rate of (a) conception, (b) full-term pregnancies and (c) terminations for each of the last 10 years for girls in the age group 12 to 15 years; and if she will indicate the levels of disaggregation for which figures are available currently.

Mr. Sackville: The information available for England as a whole is shown in the table. Corresponding information for regional health authorities is published in birth statistics series FM1—Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys—and that for district health authorities from 1986 onwards, with rates averaged over three-year periods, in the OPCS monitor, "Conceptions in England and Wales 1991: residents of regional and district health authority areas FM1 94/1", copies of which are in the Library.

Conception at ages under 16 England

Year	Number
1984	9,096
1985	8,829

Royal Liverpool Hospital

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the length of time currently taken to treat a patient arriving at the Royal Liverpool hospital seeking treatment in the accident and emergency department between their arrival and the time of treatment.

Mr. Sackville: District health authorities are responsible for setting and monitoring performance standards for accident and emergency services locally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Liverpool health authority, Mr. Donald Tod, for this information in respect of the Royal Liverpool hospital.

Paramedics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will fund the training of the paramedics required to meet her 1995 target.

Mr. Sackville: The funding arrangements for paramedic training are matters for individual ambulance services.

NHS Audits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who appoints external auditors for (a) health authorities and (b) NHS trusts.

Mr. Sackville: The Audit Commission.

Accident and Emergency Closures

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the impact of the closure of London accident and emergency facilities on emergency ambulance response times.

Mr. Sackville: We understand that, at the request of health authorities and others, the London ambulance service has looked at patient flows resulting from changing patterns of accident and emergency provision in London. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Martin Gorham, chief executive of the LAS.

Anaphylaxis

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the availability within the NHS of user-friendly adrenaline injection kits for the treatment of anaphylaxis.

Mr. Sackville: There are at least three presentations of self-injectable adrenaline preparations available, but only one of which is licensed for use under the Medicines Act 1968. Doctors can prescribe any product which they feel necessary for the treatment of their patients at national health service expense, providing it is not included in schedule 10 to the NHS (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992. However, doctors must take full responsibility for the patient's welfare when prescribing an unlicensed product. Arrangements are in place to enable these to be obtained.

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the adequacy of guidelines for the treatment of anaphylaxis in accident and emergency departments of NHS hospitals in England and Wales.

Mr. Sackville: We are not aware of any clinical guidelines on the treatment of anaphylaxis in accident and emergency departments. The development of such guidelines and their upkeep would be a matter for the medical profession. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the adequacy of equipment and training for the treatment of anaphylaxis for ambulance services in England and Wales.

Mr. Sackville: All national health service paramedics in England and Wales are trained in the emergency treatment of anaphylaxis, and I am informed that the equipment needed for such treatment is standard on all front-line ambulances.

Staff Loans

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a list of (a) trusts and (b) health authorities that have made loans to staff members in the latest year for which figures are available, indicating the sums involved.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Smoking

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what attempts were made, and what controls were in place to safeguard and judge the effectiveness of the 1994 no smoking campaign;

(2) what proposals she has to improve the (a) targeting and (b) monitoring of future Government no smoking campaigns; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: All health education campaigns on smoking are aimed at particular groups in line with "The Health of the Nation" targets on smoking and are evaluated in terms of their effectiveness in changing knowledge, attitudes and behaviour.

Mr. Alex Carlile : To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the sum spent last year on the no smoking campaign was disbursed.

Mr. Sackville: Resources for health education campaigns on smoking in 1993–94 and 1994–95 were allocated to programmes aimed at particular target groups as follows:

	1993–94 £000	1994–95 £000
Teenage smoking campaign	1,199	1,260
Smoking in pregnancy	446	480
Adult and parental smoking	6,611	7,552

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current estimated cost to the national health service of treating smoking-related diseases.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 13 January, column 257.

Mental Illness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of people registered as mentally ill in the community is assigned a key worker.

Mr. Bowis: Mentally ill people in the community are not required to register with health or social services authorities or with any other agency. All patients subject to the care programme approach should have an identified key worker, but we do not require information on numbers of such patients to be submitted to the Department.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) guidelines or (b) rules her Department sets to ensure that people released from long-stay mental hospitals are given (i) social security advice, (ii) housing advice and (iii) financial advice.

Mr. Bowis: The "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook" advises health and local authorities that under the care programme approach, a systematic assessment of the health and social care needs of the patient should be undertaken prior to discharge. The assessment will include the person's housing and financial needs.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many long-stay mental hospitals in (a) London, (b) Birmingham, and (c) Manchester are open; and how many have set closure plans.

Mr. Bowis: Information on all long-stay mental illness hospitals is not routinely collected. Details on the remaining large mental illness hospitals—with over 100 beds—including closure plans if any, were published in the mental health task force report, "Survey of English Mental Illness Hospitals, March 1993", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in (a) London, (b) Birmingham, and (c) Manchester are registered with health authorities as mentally ill in the community.

Mr. Bowis: Mentally ill people living in the community are not required to register with health authorities. National health service agencies will generally only hold details of those people in contact with specialist services and we do not require this information to be submitted to the Department.

NHS Beds

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new acute psychiatric beds in (a) London, (b) Birmingham, and (c) Manchester are due to become available in 1995.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 29, if she will provide a breakdown by region of the number of general practitioner fundholders who have overrun their budgets; and by what amount in each year since their inception.

Mr. Malone: Regional health authorities are responsible for the fundholding scheme in their areas. Information from regions is provided in the table. Final audited information for 1993–94 is not yet available.

Region	1991–92 Number of GP fundholders who overspent their budget	1991–92 Total overspend (£ million)	1992–93 Number of GP fundholders who overspent their budget	1992–93 Total overspend (£ million)

West Midlands	0	0.1	6	0.3
Mersey	1	0.0	3	0.0
North Western	5	0.2	17	1.0

Note: Figures have been rounded to the nearest £100,000.

Early Retirement

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which trusts and health authorities have given early retirement to chief executives or senior and general managers in each of the last three years, indicating the number and value of awards made.

Mr. Malone: The information is not available centrally.

Charging Policy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her policy with regard to local authorities charging for services provided under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Bowis: We are advised that local authorities do not have legal powers to charge for services provided under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account has been taken of local authorities' inability to charge for services provided under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in the special transitional allocation.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the assumption that 9 per cent. of expenditure on domiciliary care is recovered from charges excludes domiciliary and day care services provided under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Bowis: Section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983 has no bearing on the level of an individual authority's personal social services standard spending assessment. In the calculation of PSS SSAs for day and domiciliary services for people aged 65 and over and for services to people aged 18 to 64, no explicit account is taken of actual income from charges. The formulae for both elements implicitly assume that all local authorities recover costs at the same rate.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of operations for breast cancer in 1993–94 were performed in hospitals where (a) more than 150 such operations took place, (b) between 100 and 150 took place, (c) between 50 and 100 took place and (d) fewer than 50 took place.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent on breast cancer research in each year since 1990–91 broken down by (a) Government contribution and (b) the contribution of charities.

Mr. Sackville: Government expenditure on breast cancer research since 1990–91 is shown in table.

	£ million
1990–91	3.22
1991–92	2.12
1992–93	3.80
1993–94	3.72

Cancer charities' expenditure on breast cancer research is not available centrally.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by her Department and its agencies for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Mr. Sackville: Information for the years 1979–80 to 1984–85 is not available. Annual spend for the financial years 1985–86 to 1992–93 at 1993–94 prices is shown in the table:

Year	£ million
1985–86	4.732
1986–87	11.786
1987–88	9.119
1988–89	4.014
1989–90	8.956
1990–91	5.464

Year	£ million
1991–92	8.656
1992–93	5.637
1993–94	6.076
1994–95 (estimated)	4.090

Figures for 1985–86 to 1990–91 are for advertising publicity only. Figures for 1991–92 include the costs of Departmental and Agency recruitment advertising.

Consultants

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) clinical oncology consultants and (b) medical oncology consultants there are currently in England and Wales; and how many of each are funded by charities.

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table. Information on the funding of national health service consultant posts by charities is not available centrally.

Hospital medical consultants in selected specialties by number England and Wales as at 30 September 1993

Specialty	Number
Clinical oncology	237
Medical oncology	60

Local Authority Contracts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts have been awarded by local authority social services departments to the private sector in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

EDUCATION

Independent Schools (Surplus Butter)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many independent schools with charitable status benefit from the sale on favourable terms of surplus EC butter; and what is her estimate of the total value in 1994 of such sales at (a) the actual price charged and (b) the average retail price.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department does not collect this information.

Education Assets Board

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what was the date of appointment of each of the members of the Education Assets Board; and by whom each was appointed;

(2) what is the remuneration of the chairman, chief executive and members of the Education Assets Board.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is given in the table:

Education Assets Board

	First appointed	Reappointed
Chairman
Mr. R. Suddards CBE, DL Salary: £31,400	January 1994
Chief Executive
Mr. S. Hoare (ex-officio board member) Salary: £49,100	July 1990	August 1992
Board Members
Mr. B Arthur, CBE	July 1990	August 1992 February 1995
Mr. K. Bridge	July 1988	July 1990 August 1992
Ms K. Buckley	August 1992
Mr. H. Couch TD	July 1988	July 1990 August 1992 February 1995
Mr. M. Edwards CBE, QC	July 1988	January 1991 August 1992
Miss A. Lees	July 1988	July 1990 August 1992
Mr. P. Lewis	August 1992
Mrs. M. Ryding	November 1994
Mr. A. Solomons	July 1988	July 1990 August 1992 February 1995

Members receive expenses and a fee of £155 for attending Board meetings.

The Chairman and Board Members are appointed by the Secretary of State.

The Chief Executive is appointed by the Board subject to the approval of the Secretary of State.

Independent Schools

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list those independent schools registered with her Department which have charitable status.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are currently 1,312 independent schools in England registered with this Department which have informed us that they have charitable status. I have placed a list of these schools in the Library.

School Performance Tables

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she will make it her policy to include measures in school performance indices comparing numbers of pupils not achieving any GCSE grades from one year to the next;

(2) if she will list the criteria to be used in comparing school performance from one year to the next.

Mr. Forth: We shall be consulting soon on the arrangements for the 1995 school and college performance tables.

Mature Students Allowance

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate she has made of the savings which would arise from the abolition of the mature students' allowance.

Mr. Boswell: We estimate that savings will amount to £5 million, £20 million and £30 million in the 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 financial years respectively.

Grant-maintained Schools, Lancashire

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the grant-maintained schools in Lancashire, giving in each case their location and their parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out in the table:

Grant-maintained Schools	Parliamentary Constituency
Archbishop Temple School (Ex William Temple), St. Vincent's Road, Fulwood, Preston	Nigel Evans, Esq., MP, Ribble Valley
Bacup and Rawtenstall Grammar School Glen Road, Waterfoot, Rossendale	Ms Janet Anderson, MP, Rossendale and Darwen
Baines School, Highcross Road, Poulton-le-Fylde	Keith Mans, Esq., MP, Wyre
Clitheroe Royal Grammar School, York Street, Clitheroe	Nigel Evans, Esq., MP, Ribble Valley
Lancaster Girls Grammar School, Regent Street, Lancaster	Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman, MP, Lancaster
Lancaster Royal Grammar School, East Road, Lancaster	Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman, MP, Lancaster
Leyland St. Mary's RC GM School, Royal Avenue, Leyland, Preston	Robert Atkins, Esq., MP, South Ribble
Newton Bluecoat C of E GM Primary School, School Lane, Newton Kirkham, Preston	Michael Jack, Esq., MP, Fylde
Salesbury CE Primary School, Lovely Hall Lane, Salesbury, Blackburn	Nigel Evans, Esq., MP, Ribble Valley
St. Peter's CE Grant-Maintained School, Eaves Lane, Chorley	Den Dover, Esq., MP, Chorley
St. Wilfrid's CE High School, Shakespeare Streat, Blackburn	Jack Straw, Esq., MP, Blackburn

Schools, Shropshire

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the aggregate financial balances held by schools in Shropshire at the latest available date, and for the corresponding date in 1994 and 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: The figures are £4.574 million at 31 March 1994, the latest date for which the information is available: £5.339 million at 31 March 1993. These figures relate to primary and secondary schools which were covered at those dates by the local education authority's scheme for the local management of schools

Information relating to financial balances held by grant-maintained schools is held by the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to my right hon. Friend.

College Funding

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education to what extent the funding formula for colleges takes into account the extra needs of inner-city students.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council's funding methodology currently allows colleges to claim full reimbursement from the council for the provision of free tuition to unemployed people, people on low incomes, and those taking programmes of English for speakers of other languages, or adult basic education. In 1995–96, the funding methodology will also recognise the additional needs of students on low incomes who have child care responsibilities.

Bradford University (Bursaries)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 727, if he will place a copy of the survey together with replies, undertaken in 1994 in the Library.

Mr. Boswell: The survey undertaken in 1994 covered the academic year 1992–93. A copy of the letter to institutions seeking information about students on the courses supported through the Department's postgraduate scheme and tables summarising the responses have been placed in the Library.

William Morris Academy

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she has asked the Further Education Funding Council to consider bringing forward proposals to incorporate the William Morris Academy into the further education sector.

Mr. Boswell: Yes.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Mr. Forth: The expenditure figures for advertising, including press, television and radio, by the Department for the financial years since 1979 are provided in the table:

Year	Advertising £000	At 1993–94 prices £000
1979–80	91.6	224.9
1980–81	8.9	18.5
1981–82	86.9	164.4
1982–83	6.0	10.6
1983–84	9.6	16.2
1984–85	18.5	29.7
1985–86	14.8	22.5
1986–87	532.0	786.8
1987–88	280.0	393.2
1988–89	515.0	677.8
1989–90	249.8	307.3
1990–91	2,604.0	2,965.9
1991–92	3,037.9	3,255.5

Year	Advertising £000	At 1993–94 prices £000
1992–93	1,086.4	1,119.6
1993–94	1,442.2	1,442.2
1994–95	[1]150.0	147.1

Note:
[1] Estimate.

The Department's agencies are responsible for their own expenditure on advertising. Such information is not held centrally.

Southwark College

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement about the funding of Southwark college.

Mr. Boswell: Southwark college was guaranteed core funding by the Further Education Funding Council of £10.266 million for 1994–95. The college's bid for an additional £0.650 million was allocated in full, giving a total recurrent funding allocation for 1994–95 for £10.916 million.

ENVIRONMENT

Aquifers, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state, or investigate, the extent to which water in the aquifers of the London geological syncline could be used in greater volumes, either in the public water supply or other purposes; what is the current cost of obtaining potable water from this source; and what capital and revenue costs would be incurred in using sufficient water for these uses so as to stabilise the height of the local water table.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority has, at the request of the Department, improved the monitoring network of groundwater levels in the London area, and has worked closely with Thames Water Utilities Ltd. to investigate the potential of this resource to provide additional water for public supply. The TWUL is currently involved in several groundwater schemes in the London area including recharge and abstraction schemes in north London and south London and an exploratory scheme in central London.

In 1989, the Construction Industry Research and Information Association published a report "The Engineering Implications of rising groundwater levels in the deep aquifer beneath London", part-funded by the Department. Since that time, the TWUL has investigated 20 sites in central London. Of these, seven provided yields of sufficient quantity and quality to be of potential use for public supply. However, the development of this resource for public water supply is relatively expensive. I am informed that the TWUL is not likely to require it in the short or medium term because of the success of the north London recharge scheme, improved leakage control and the construction of the London ring main.

Capital and operational costs for public water supplies are a matter for the water undertakers, within the price limits determined by the Director General of Water Supplies.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds were awarded under objective 1 to Liverpool during the past 12 months: how many bids were entered for this money; how many were accepted; what is the total amount of money used from the allocation; what is the residue; and how the residue is to be used.

Sir Paul Beresford: The objective 1 programme covers the five boroughs of Merseyside, including Liverpool. The first round of applications seeking £243 million grant were submitted in August 1994. Many applications, for example for business support services or for training schemes, were not targeted at Liverpool alone and it is therefore not possible to say how much funding was bid for the borough. Approvals in principle for the first round of successful applications involving grant of £175 million were announced in November 1994. This includes £36 million of ESF for training projects, of which a significant amount will benefit Liverpool, and over £12 million of ERDF to projects based in Liverpool.

Over £550 million of European funding remains for the rest of the programme up to 1999. It will be used in accordance with the single programme document. A second round of applications is currently under consideration.

Imperial War Museum, Hartlepool

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to give Treasury authorisation for the commencement of building the new Imperial war museum in Hartlepool.

Sir Paul Beresford: A proposal to construct the Imperial war museum for the north in Hartlepool has been submitted by Teesside development corporation and is under consideration.

Social Housing

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures have been prepared by his Department to estimate the need for new social housing provision in England on a framework for the investment programme set out in the 1995–96 budget.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Banks) on 1 February, Official Report, columns 685-86.

Boreholes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what compensation will be available under the Environment Bill to those affected by damage caused by underground water abstractions from boreholes.

Mr. Atkins: The Environment Bill currently contains no provisions on this subject, although relevant amendments have been proposed in another place. Compensation for damage caused by water abstractions from boreholes is governed mainly by the common law and the provisions of chapter II of part II of the Water Resources Act 1991.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of local authority highways department road building on sites of special scientific interest;

(2) what studies he has undertaken to monitor the impact of road building on sites of importance to wildlife, other than sites of special scientific interest.

Sir Paul Beresford: Comprehensive information about the effect of road building or widening programmes might have on wildlife sites is not held centrally and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost. All relevant considerations are taken into account in the planning process before final decisions are made.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are taken to monitor water tables in sites of special scientific interest and other areas of environmental sensitivity, where developments of roads could result in drainage changes.

Sir Paul Beresford: If necessary, conditions may be attached to a planning permission if there is likely to be a significant effect on drainage that would affect the integrity of the SSSI.

Roads (Wildlife)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the effect of road development on (a) otter and (b) badger populations; and what record of road mortality is kept for these species.

Sir Paul Beresford: An assessment of the overall impact on these species and other wildlife is undertaken at the planning stage of road development and mitigating measures, for example fencing and tunnels, installed where appropriate and practicable. There are no records kept of species killed on roads, but it is estimated that some 47,000 badgers die each year from road accidents. This rate of loss is not considered to affect the conservation status of the species.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies have been undertaken to identify the impact of road noise on (a) wildlife breeding success and (b) breeding distribution.

Sir Paul Beresford: None. However, I am advised by English Nature that during 1995-96 work is likely to be commissioned to review indirect effects such as noise and lighting.

Black Smoke Emissions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for black smoke emissions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: Total national emissions of black smoke in 1992 were 457,000 tonnes.

Nitrous Oxide Emissions

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 200 highest records for nitrous oxide emissions in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: The table below lists the UK 1993 NOx emissions from existing and new large combustion plants.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list nitrogen oxide emission sources by tonne within the United Kingdom, for each year since 1980.

Mr. Atkins: The list below gives estimated emissions of nitrogen oxides, by source, for 1980–1992.

Estimated emissions of nitrogen oxides (NOx) by source category for 1980–1992

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in descending order of population those former county boroughs for which a recommendation of unitary status has not yet been made.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The following former county borough areas have not been recommended for unitary status by the Local Government Commission for England:

	Population
Northampton	187,244
Warrington	185,005
Blackpool	153,614
Blackburn	139,528
Canterbury	132,391
Preston	132,166
Oxford	131,967
Norwich	128,050
Chester	120,845
Ipswich	114,806
Exeter	105,087
Gloucester	104,805
Carlisle	102,878
Great Yarmouth	88,799
Worcester	87,638
Eastbourne	86,794
Lincoln	85,502
Barrow in Furness	73,299
Burton on Trent[1]	60,000

Population figures above are mid-1993 resident populations.
[1] The former county borough of Burton on Trent is currently subsumed within the district of East Staffordshire which has a total population of 98,300.

The Local Government Commission has recommended unitary status, within a larger unitary authority, for the areas of the former county boroughs of Brighton, Grimsby and Bath.

New Forest Heritage Area

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State of the Environment what are the current boundaries of the New forest heritage area in which national park planning policies apply; and what proposals there are to change these boundaries.

Mr. Atkins: The New forest heritage area includes all the surrounding countryside which both has strong visual and historic links with the forest and provides off-forest grazing land needed to sustain commoning. The boundary as currently delineated has no statutory designation but was adopted in 1985 by the New Forest district council and is reflected in local development plans.

The new planning regime will apply to the definition of the New forest heritage area as it emerges from the current process of preparing and adopting local plans.

Cleveland (Structural Change) Order 1994

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued to other Government Departments, regarding the meaning of article 12 of the Cleveland (Structural Change) Order; and if he will publish that guidance.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None.

Water Companies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of the current five-year investment projections for each of the water companies; and what was the variation from the stated figure at the time the K factors were announced.

Mr. Atkins: Capital expenditure for individual water companies for the period 1995–2000 is shown in Ofwat's "Future Charges for Water and Sewerage Services" published in July 1994. The extent to which actual expenditure varies from these projections will be known only when returns of actual expenditure are available from individual water companies. This is monitored on an annual basis by the director general.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Sir Paul Beresford: Advertising expenditure by my Department over the last five years was:

1989–90: £24,635,221
1990–91: nil
1991–92: £ 733,481
1992–93: £ 6,205,659
1993–94: £ 4,477,643

Expenditure by departmental agencies was nil with the exception of Ordnance Survey, which spent £24,378 in financial year 1990–91 and £213,736 in financial year 1991–92.

Figures are expressed at 1994 prices using the retail price index and are exclusive of VAT.

Information relating to the advertising spend alone for the financial years before 1989–90 cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Office of Water Services

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many staff are currently employed at present by the Office of Water Services; and what were the figures (a) 12 and (b) 24 months previously;

(2) on what terms Credit Lyonnais has been appointed as consultant adviser to the water industry regulator.

Mr. Atkins: These are matters for the Director General of Water Services.

Housing Bond Guarantee Schemes

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will approve and support the operation of housing bond guarantee schemes in 1995–96 and subsequently.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: If the hon. Member is referring to schemes under which local authorities provide rent deposits or equivalent indemnities to private sector landlords, the Government believe that they have a very useful role to play in helping people in housing need to secure accommodation. We are consulting the local authority associations about a general consent for local authorities to operate these schemes.

Water (Leaks)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the figure for leakage as a percentage of total treated water supply for each of the water companies for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: This information is to be found in Ofwat's "Report on the Cost of Water Delivered and Sewage Collected", for the years 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94. Copies of the reports are available in the Library.

National Forest Company

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an announcement about the composition of the board of the National Forest Company.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have invited the following people to serve on the board of the National Forest Company.

Chairman
Mr Rodney Swarbrick—(Lancashire farmer, former President of the Country Landowners Association, and currently a Countryside Commissioner)

Directors
Miss Bridget Bloom—(Journalist and Forestry Commissioner)
Mr. Duncan Jeffray—(Nature conservation expert and current Chairman of the Royal Society for Nature Conservation)
Mr. Derrick Penrose—(Former Chief Agent of the Chatsworth Estate)
Mr. Geoff Steeley—(Local authority and planning expert, and current Director of Planning, Hertfordshire County Council)
Mr. David Taylor—(Forestry consultant)
Mr. John Thompson—(Responsible for access and recreation for the Peak District National Park)
Mr. Rupert Wilkins—(Management consultant, local to the Forest area)
Miss Susan Bell—(Chief Executive of National Forest Company)

The National Forest Company will commence operations on 3 April this year.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take concerning the administrative expenses of the Energy Saving Trust.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State proposes to lay before Parliament an order designating the Energy Saving Trust under section 153 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This will provide a statutory basis, subject to parliamentary approval of an appropriate estimate, for the Government to contribute to the running costs of the trust.

In the Government's view, the trust has a key role in future as an effective catalyst for change in a policy area which is important for progress on our economic, climate change and sustainable development objectives. The trust has had a difficult and uncertain year. It now needs to review its plans. It can do that only with a measure of certainty over funding. The trust must maintain its independence, but it is important that it is able to develop new and innovative ideas at a time of major change in the gas and electricity industries.

I envisage contributing to the trust's administrative and salary costs if the trust can put forward satisfactory and cost-effective proposals to develop new initiatives to promote energy efficiency in the rapidly changing energy markets. Once the trust has drawn up proposals, my officials will discuss the plans with the trust and its other members. This will provide a basis for deciding on an appropriate contribution from Government, taking into account other contributions.

United Nations Environment Programme

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to ensure the success of the next meetings of the Commission for Sustainable Development and the governing council of the United Nations environment programme.

Mr. Gummer: On 10 and 11 February, the United Kingdom Government hosted a meeting to discuss the future role of these two organisations. It was attended by Environment Ministers from 13 countries, the European Environment Commissioner, the chief executive officer of the Global Environment Facility and the heads of the two organisations. The Indian Minister of Environment and Forests, Mr. Kamal Nath, and I jointly chaired the meeting.

The meeting achieved a welcome degree of consensus about the respective roles of the two organisations which I believe will pave the way for productive meetings of both organisations over the next few months.

Mr. Nath and I produced a note of the chairmen's conclusions at the end of the meeting. I have placed a copy of this note in the Library.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who represented the United Kingdom Government at the recent United Nations conference on trade and development meeting in Prague to discuss carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer Friday 10 February 1995]: The meeting took place on 12 to 14 January in Pruhonice near Prague and was attended by an official from my Department. The meeting was sponsored by the Czech Republic and its theme was "Economic Instruments for Sustainable Development". A new UNCTAD Paper entitled "Combining Global Warming: Possible Rules, Regulations and Administrative Arrangements for a Global Market in CO_2 Emission Entitlements" was introduced by one of its joint authors on the final morning. This paper is now being studied by my Department.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions preventive diplomacy has been successfully undertaken by the Government in Africa.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom has carried out diplomatic activity on many occasions in response to possible crises in Africa. It is seldom possible to assess the effectiveness of any particular action but recent examples where we have played a constructive role include Lesotho and Mozambique. One objective of the United Kingdom initiative on African peacekeeping is to strengthen institutional support for preventive diplomacy by African nations.

Somaliland

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he or international organisations have to stimulate peace and development in Somaliland.

Mr. Baldry: Peace and development in the north-west and throughout the country is dependent on the Somalis reaching agreement on national reconciliation. We are encouraging other countries in the region to assist and the United Nations is willing to continue political efforts if the Somalis wish. However, responsibility for the process lies with the Somalis themselves.

International agencies and NGOs continue to implement activities in the north-west where security permits, and we shall continue to support their work giving priority to those displaced by recent fighting.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he or international organisations have to increase the pressure on the rulers of Nigeria to return the country to civilian and democratic rule.

Mr. Baldry: Members of the European Union have agreed that the measures against the Nigerian military jointly imposed in 1993 should remain in force, in the absence of progress towards a return to civilian rule. Our policy towards Nigeria is under constant review.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he or international organisations are currently considering for an embargo on oil sales from Nigeria, and what is his policy on such an initiative.

Mr. Baldry: We are not aware of plans for any such initiative.

Indonesia

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he proposes to apply additional pressure on Indonesia to ratify the international covenant on civil and political rights.

Mr. Goodlad: We regularly encourage all countries to ratify the international covenant on civil and political rights and other United Nation human rights instruments. My right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs did so most recently at the UN Commission on Human Rights on 8 February.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations his Department has received from foreign Governments over future changes in size in the United Kingdom's nuclear arsenal.

Mr. David Davis: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not received specific representations from foreign Governments on this issue. However, many countries express their opinions on nuclear deterrence in a number of international fora.

Turkey

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Turkey during the last 12 months on the subject of the Kurds living within its boundaries.

Mr. David Davis: We have made representations at ministerial and official level to the Turkish Government many times during the last 12 months on the subject of their human rights performance overall and in particular the human rights abuses arising from the conflict in the south-east of the country between the Turkish military authorities and the Kurdish separatist movement: most recently when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs—together with his French, German and Italian colleagues—met the Foreign Minister Karayaclin in London on 2 February.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage the Government of Turkey to take steps (a) to safeguard the Christian community in south-east Turkey and (b) to halt its destruction of Christian villages.

Mr. David Davis: The Turkish Government are well aware that we take a close interest in the Christian communities in Turkey in the context of our wider concerns about human rights there. We take every opportunity to make known these concerns, which are shared by our western partners. Most recently my right honourable Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, and his French, German and Italian colleagues raised human rights with the Turkish Foreign Minister when they met him in London on 2 February.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues concerning Turkey's Christian minority he raised with the Turkish parliamentary delegation during its recent visit.

Mr. David Davis: My honourable Friend the Under-Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the issue of Turkey's overall human rights performance when he gave lunch to the Turkish parliamentary delegation on 1 February.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage the Government of Turkey to end its discrimination against Turkey's Armenian community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: The Turkish Government are well aware that we take a close interest in the minority communities in Turkey in the context of our wider concerns about human rights there. We take every opportunity to make known these concerns, which are shared by our western partners.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on whether the Sudanese Government will allow a visit by Amnesty International; and what representations he has made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Sudanese Government have refused to agree to a visit by Amnesty International. This disappointing decision follows the recent publication of a report by Amnesty International detailing human rights abuses in Sudan. We regularly raise our concerns about human rights abuses with the Sudanese authorities bilaterally as well as through the EU and UN. We shall continue to urge them to accept visits by international humanitarian organisations such as Amnesty.

Iran

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about Iran developing nuclear weapons and purchasing ballistic missiles; what information he has on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: The Government remain deeply concerned at reports that Iran is interested in developing nuclear weapons and in acquiring ballistic missiles. We discuss such reports regularly with our partners in the missile technology control regime and nuclear suppliers group. We remain firmly committed to strengthening international efforts to combat the proliferation of both nuclear weapons and ballistic missiles.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to Iran's nuclear power programme.

Mr. David Davis: Iran is a state party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency. All of Iran's nuclear facilities are under IAEA safeguards, and open to inspection. But we remain concerned at reports that Iran is seeking to develop nuclear weapons. Since March 1993, we have decided that, with two exceptions, licence applications for significant nuclear items destined for Iran should not be approved.

It is also our policy not to approve items for Iran where there is knowledge or reason to suspect that it would go to a military end-user or be used for military purposes.

Mr. Roy Ricks

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what employment, duties or services were carried out for his Department or its agencies by Mr. Roy Ricks and over which periods of time.

Mr. Goodlad: To my knowledge there has been none.

European Ombudsman

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the procedures involved in the appointment of the European ombudsman.

Mr. David Davis: The post of ombudsman is established by article 138 (e) of the treaty which states that the European Parliament shall appoint the ombudsman. The Council decision of 7 February 1994 approved the regulations and general conditions governing the performance of the ombudsman's duties. The procedure involved in the appointment is set out in rule 159 of the European Parliament's "Rules of Procedure". A copy of both the decision and the "Rules of Procedure" are in the House Library. The hon. Member should be aware, however, that the Rules Committee of the European Parliament is currently considering whether or not to amend this rule; the main change would be to allow the European Parliament's Petitions Committee to submit the names of up to five candidates to the EP plenary. The present rules allow for only one.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 86-87, what have been the obstacles to increasing the number for human rights monitors in Rwanda; and if these obstacles have now been removed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UN human rights monitors in Rwanda have been funded by voluntary contributions. Although the British contribution of £250,000 and four vehicles was made quickly in response to the appeal by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, the response of the international community as a whole has been disappointing. Some 80 UN monitors have now been deployed, but the High Commissioner continues to face funding difficulties.

The UN Centre for Human Rights, which is responsible for mounting the programme, has been hindered by lack of previous experience of managing such an operation.

The European Union is planning to deploy a team of human rights monitors shortly, to work with those from the UN.

Prisoners of War, Japan

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has achieved with the establishment of a fund for prisoners of war held captive by the Japanese in world war two; and if he will list the donations so far received from Japanese companies trading within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: We have concluded that in present circumstances the proposal for a non-governmental fund to help former prisoners of war and civilian internees is unlikely to succeed. We are therefore exploring with the Japanese Government other possible ways of addressing this issue.

Inhumane Weapons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether measures have been proposed by Her Majesty's Government to help verify and enforce an updated UN inhumane weapons convention; and what is his assessment of their effectiveness.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN inhumane weapons convention is to be reviewed in September this year. We have played a full and active part in preparations for the review conference and shall continue to work hard to secure a strengthened and more effective convention at the conference itself.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Mr. Goodlad: Total expenditure on promotional material and recruitment advertising in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Diplomatic Wing and Overseas Development Administration) since 1979 at 1993–94 prices was:

1979–80: 773,379
1980–81: 544,123
1981–82: 701,848
1982–83: 645,044
1983–84: 772,957
1984–85: 617,116
1985–86: 657,625
1986–87: 834,308
1987–88: 766,714
1988–89: 1,288,287
1989–90: 1,798,965
1990–91: 2,082,746
1991–92: 1,913,947
1992–93: 2,095,207
1993–94: 2,130,264

TRANSPORT

Drivers (Eyesight)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide figures for each of the last five years of the number of drivers (a) who have committed an offence by not complying with the eyesight requirements of the Road Traffic Act 1988 to report their disability to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, (b) who have reported themselves to the DVLA and who have been found to have visual defects rendering them unfit to hold a licence to drive and (c) who have been reported by the police as having visual defects rendering them unfit to hold a licence to drive.

Mr. Norris: The information is not available.

Interlogic Control Engineering

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will place in the Library a paper setting out the financial and commercial reasons underlying the proposal by British Rail's subsidiary, Interlogic Control Engineering, to close its York office; and what reasons he has received from Interlogic for adopting this proposal rather than closing one of its other offices or reducing the size of the work force at several locations;

(2) how much British Rail's subsidiary, Interlogic Control Engineering, estimates that it will cost (a) itself and (b) the Exchequer to make redundancy payments to the 169 staff at its York office.

Mr. Watts: The deployment of staff in Interlogic Control Engineering, the closure of the York office and associated redundancy payments are management matters for the British Railways Board. The cost of redundancy payments, which falls entirely to the British Railways Board, will depend upon individual circumstances. There are no direct costs to the Exchequer.

Rail Funding

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been applied for and how much granted under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974, over the last 12 months.

Mr. Watts: Two grant applications were approved at a total value of £2,911,720. Five other applications with an estimated total value of £7 million are still under consideration. No decisions have been taken on these applications.

Grant claims totalling £2,193,683 were paid in respect of four freight facilities grants awarded before February 1994.

Section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 has been replaced by section 139 of the Railways Act 1993.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been applied for and how much granted under section 137 of the Railways Act 1993.

Mr. Watts: The Department has received seven formal applications for track access grant. Five are under consideration, one has been withdrawn, and one has been rejected. Grant is payable only up to the level needed to tip the balance in favour of rail, and the precise amount of grant to be paid for each of these schemes is currently being considered.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Dr. Mawhinney: "Public Bodies 1994", copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House, lists bodies in existence at 1 April 1994 for which I am responsible. I also have responsibility for European Passenger Services Ltd. which was established as a Government-owned company on 9 May 1994.

BR has been restructured and its main constituent parts are being transferred to the private sector. The first passenger service franchise contracts are due to be awarded by the end of 1995. The maintenance depots of British Rail Maintenance Ltd. should be in private sector ownership very shortly. The three rolling stock leasing companies are set for trade sales during 1995. Trainload Freight has been restructured in preparation for sale later this year and good progress is being made with the transfer to the private sector of the remainder of the domestic freight businesses, Rail Express systems and BR's support systems.

Railtrack Group plc, the Government-owned company responsible for operating track and infrastructure, is to be privatised by stock market flotation within the lifetime of this Parliament.

EPS is due to be privatised during 1995–96 as part of the competition to construct and operate the channel tunnel rail link.

A public consultation was held in spring 1994 on the possible privatisation of National Air Traffic Services, currently part of the Civil Aviation Authority.

Link Road Offices

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost to date, and what is the annual cost, of the Link road offices in (a) Wanstead and (b) Leyton.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen dated 13 February 1995:

Mr. Steven Norris has asked me to write in response to your recent Parliamentary Question about the cost of the Link Road Offices.

Our records do not disaggregate the costs of the Wanstead and Leyton offices. However, since we did not take over the Leyton premises until early 1993, very little, if any, costs for this accrued before the 1993/94 financial year. All the figures include staff costs, but since staff are not allocated specifically to one office it is not possible to split their costs between the two.

The total costs of both offices are:

Financial year	Cost £
1992–93	174,976
1993–94	260,673
1994–95 to date	172,153
Total	607,802

Our estimate of future running costs is about £200,000 annually.

Coventry Airport

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to prosecute those involved with the export of calves from Coventry airport on board Air Algerie aircraft during November and December 1994 for operating without the permits required under the Air Navigation Order 1989.

Mr. Norris: The question of prosecution for breaches of article 88 of the Air Navigation Order 1989 will be decided when the current inquiry has been completed and the findings assessed.

Emergency Stop Signals (Trains)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that all British Rail trains can pick up an emergency stop signal from a control centre which does not have a blind spot; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The issue of train communication and radio black spots is being considered as part of the investigations of the accidents at Cowden, Kent and Kirkby Stephen, Cumbria.

Seat Belts

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to conclude his consultation on proposed seat belt legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We intend to go out to formal consultation shortly. We shall then consider the responses carefully before final decisions are taken.

Security

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what factors led to his decision to delete 35 posts from his Department's security division; and what work will cease to be done as a result.

Dr. Mawhinney: The reduction in posts in the transport security division is part of my Department's general drive for increased efficiency. In Transec's case the efficiency gains will be achieved through a combination of delayering, more efficient working and the completion of projects.

Over half the posts identified are support or managerial. The remainder are inspectorial or investigatory.

This change will make no difference to the implementation of security measures which, along with the provision of equipment and staff, is the responsibility of operators.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Mr. Norris: The total expenditure on above the line advertising by the Department and its agencies for each year since 1984 in 1994 prices is:

	RPI (1987 base)	Transport Spending (1994 prices)	DVLA Spending (1994 prices)
1984–85	90.1	5,118,798	0
1985–86	95.4	5,375,542	0
1986–87	98.3	[1]12,947,094	0
1987–88	102.4	[1]12,610,640	0
1988–89	108.4	3,504,481	0
1989–90	116.6	4,391,466	0
1990–91	129.3	3,130,790	563,386
1991–92	134.6	5,027,472	380,392
1992–93	139.4	5,990,156	692,593
1993–94	141.9	4,338,400	725,790
1994–95	145.0	n/a	n/a

n/a = Not yet available

All figures provided by COI and exclude VAT. Figures prior to 1984 not readily available.

Statutory and road scheme advertising figures before 1992 are not included because they were not centrally collated at the time.

Networker

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact on J. R. Manufacturing (Cardiff) Ltd. and other subcontractors of the decision by British Rail not to exercise its option to purchase 40 new Networker electric multiple units; and what estimate he has made of the number of jobs that will be lost as a result of this decision.

Mr. Watts: British Rail has asked ABB and GEC Asithom whether they wish to submit leasing proposals for further trains. Choice of subcontractors would be a commercial matter for the main supplier.

Disabled People (Sea-Fishing)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 201, if he will now make it his policy to collate and publish statistics on the number of people disabled as a result of accidents at work in the sea-fishing industry.

Mr. Norris: It is not feasible for this Department to collect information on disabilities resulting from injuries sustained at work in the sea-fishing industry. However, major and serious injuries are required to be reported to the Department's marine accident investigation branch under the Merchant Shipping (Accident Reporting and Investigation) Regulations 1994. The information is collated by MAIB for inclusion in its annual report.

Road Building

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which sites of special scientific interest will be affected by future proposals for road building.

Mr. Watts: Information on the effect of trunk road proposals on sites of special scientific interest is held by the Highways Agency and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member. Information about the effect of local authority road proposals on such sites is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 23 February 1995:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about those sites of special scientific interest (SSSI) that will be affected by future proposals for road building.

I enclose a list of the Trunk Road and Motorway schemes in England, for which preferred routes have been announced, that are likely to involve permanent or temporary landtake from a SSSI and a list of schemes that may have an impact on a SSSI but do not involve landtake. Schemes marked with an asterisk have been under construction in 1994/95. The remaining schemes are at varying stages of design.

You will, I hope, appreciate that the lists are therefore dynamic and will be subject to change as, and when, scheme designs are developed.

I hope this is helpful.

Schemes which may involve permanent or temporary landtake from SSSIs

Road scheme	SSSI
*A30 Indian Queens Bypass	Goss and Tregoss Moors

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 53, what assessment he has made of the time scale of the threat to the structural integrity of the Forth rail bridge.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 10 February 1995]: Railtrack continues to carry out detailed assessments of the Forth bridge. The structure is being inspected more thoroughly than ever before so as to ensure that attention can be concentrated on the areas which are in the most deserving condition. New shotblasting methods are currently being concentrated on the lattice tie-members of the bridge. Although relatively small components, these are of great importance to the bridge's structural integrity. Railtrack assessments confirm that the present maintenance and painting programme is fully adequate to protect the structural integrity of the bridge.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the classes of vehicle currently exempt from vehicle excise duty for which vehicle excise duty will become payable from 1 July; and if he will give the amount of vehicle excise duty that will be payable in each class.

Mr. Norris [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1995, c. 383]: The information requested is as follows:

Current exempt class	Proposed class	Proposed duty
Special vehicles
Road roller	road rollers	£135 (under 3.5 tonnes) £150 (over 3.5 tonnes)
Road construction
Street cleansing	PLG or HGV	£135—[1]£5,000
Street lighting
Vehicles used for short journeys between private land	[2]as appropriate	£15—[1]£5,000
Special concessionary
Electric	electric
Gritter	gritter	£35
Snowplough	snowplough

[1] No increase of more than £1,000 in first year of vehicle relicensing from 1 July 1995.
[2] Vehicles will license in appropriate new classes; the majority in special concessionary.

WALES

Out-of-town Shopping Centres

17. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to limit the growth of out-of-town shopping centres.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The need for attractive, vital and viable town centres, and their importance in the life of communities is emphasised in my right hon. Friend's published planning guidance, in the press release he issued last November and in his environmental agenda.

Local Government Staff

19. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local government staff are employed in Wales; what population they serve, and at what cost; what are the figures for (a) England an*(b)* Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Figures for local authority staffing are compiled by the Local Government Management Board. These show that in June 1994, there were 117,000 local government employees in Wales serving a population of almost 3 million and costing £2 billion. Comparable figures for England were 1,677,000 employees for a population of 48.5 million at a cost of £32.4 billion; and for Scotland, 255,000 employees for a population of over 5 million at a cost of £4.6 billion.

Rare Beef Breeds

20. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of Sate for Wales what measures he is taking to promote the export of rare Welsh beef breeds for human consumption and for breeding.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The development agencies provide financial support for Welsh Food Promotions Ltd. which has recently launched an initiative to promote Welsh beef, including Welsh Black beef.

Jobseekers Allowance Bill

21. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made on the future effects on Welsh jobs of the Jobseekers Allowance Bill.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The jobseeker's allowance will help unemployed people to obtain jobs.

Morriston Hospital, Swansea

22. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decision on the future of the cardiac unit at Morriston hospital, Swansea.

Mr. Richards: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Training and Enterprise Councils

23. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales that representations he has received on the resources allocated to training and enterprise councils in Wales for the current financial year.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend and I have received no recent representations on this matter. I met TEC chairmen on 11 January to discuss, in broad terms, the 1995–96 training and enterprise public expenditure package. Allocations to TECs have not yet been made for 1995–96; the Department will begin negotiations with TECs shortly.

Unemployment (Coal Mining Areas)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to lessen unemployment levels in former coal mining areas in south Wales.

Mr. Richards: We are using the full range of the Welsh Office's responsibilities, in conjunction with public bodies, development agencies and the private sector, to help to provide both job opportunities and skills training for the people of the former coal mining areas in south Wales. Most importantly, the Government are creating the framework for a healthy economy in which businesses create jobs.

Crewe-Holyhead Railway Line

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what priority he has given to the Crewe to Holyhead railway line as a link between member states of the European Union.

Mr. Richards: The Crewe to Holyhead line is included in the European Commission's proposals for trans-European transport networks.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to approve the necessary staff transfer order where there is a local agreement to the effect that all local government staff within a locally agreed area would transfer to a new authority following local government reorganisation.

Mr. Gwilyn Jones: That already is my policy.

I wrote to the Staff Commission for Wales on 20 January as follows:

"Once a group of authorities in a particular area has agreed which staff should be transferred to them, [the Secretary of State] would be prepared to give effect to the decision in the staff transfer order to be made under section 42 of the Local Government (Wales) Act 1994."

Flooding

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evaluation his Department has undertaken of the role of the National Rivers Authority in relation to serious flooding in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office maintains close contact with the National Rivers Authority over its handling of flooding defence and I am pleased to report that there has been no serious flooding of developed areas in Wales so far this winter, despite the unusually wet weather.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to earmark or ring-fence a sum to each district and borough council in Wales to enable it to discharge its obligations effectively under its permissive drainage powers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office funds local authorities through the annual local government revenue and capital settlements. It is for individual authorities to decide how to apportion those moneys between and within their various functions in accordance with their statutory obligations and their own priorities. However, the Welsh Office does make grant aid available under the Land Drainage Act 1991 specifically to assist district councils to undertake capital works under their permissive drainage powers.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Mr. Redwood: Advertising expenditure, expressed in 1994 prices, for my Department and its executive agency, Cadw, since 1979 is as follows:

Year	Welsh office £000[1]	Cadw £000[1]
1979–1980	146	—
1980–1981	128	—
1981–1982	184	—
1982–1983	170	—
1983–1984	178	—
1984–1985	103	—
1985–1986	46	—
1986–1987	109	—
1987–1988	317	—
1988–1989	227	—
1989–1990	495	—
1990–1991	317	—
1991–1992	366	58
1992–1993	434	71
1993–1994	275	126

Note:

1. Cadw was set up as an executive agency in April 1991.[1] At 1993–1994 prices, using the retail prices index.

Arts in Wales

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to meet officials of the Arts Council in Wales to discuss funding for the arts in Wales.

Mr. Richards: I am meeting the chairman of the Arts Council of Wales on 27 March to discuss the council's plans for 1995–96.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EU Spending

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will list (a) the spending on agriculture by the EU and (b) the national Government spending on agriculture by each member state (i) in the current year, (ii) in the previous year and (iii) five years ago.

Mr. Jack: Details of expenditure on agriculture by the EU, broken down by member state, are contained in annexe 2 of the annual financial reports on the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund, guarantee section, copies of which have been deposited in the Library of the House. The latest report available relates to 1993. Provisional figures for 1994 are set out in the table.

Details of United Kingdom expenditure on agriculture are contained in table 9.1 of the annual publication "Agriculture in the United Kingdom", copies of which are also deposited in the Library of the House. Comparable information for other member states is not readily available. Summary information on national aids to agriculture in other member states is available in the Commission's periodic surveys of state aids in the European Community. The latest of these covers 1986 to 1990 and is available in the Library of the House. This information is not, however, fully representative of national Government expenditure on agriculture—for example, it excludes aid for research but includes aid financed by parafiscal charges.

Expenditure on CAP support from the EC budget by member state

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Jack: The bodies are listed in "Public Bodies 1994" which has recently been placed in the Library of the House. None of these has been identified as currently suitable for placing in the private sector.

Flooding

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has carried out into the effect of the removal of hedges and trees on the propensity of land to flood; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Research is being funded by MAFF into the hydrological effects of urban growth and the run-off response of river catchments, which are major factors influencing storm water run-off and therefore the propensity of land to flood. The removal of hedges and trees, taken on its own, is unlikely to have a significant effect on flood flows and this is therefore not seen as a priority area of research.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will include the option of negotiating to leave the common fisheries policy and developing a policy for fisheries management based on the premise that each member state can reclaim the sovereignty of its waters as part of his policy group review of the common fisheries policy;

(2) what are the terms of reference of his policy group reviewing the common fisheries policy; what evidence it will take from the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The arrangements for the group to review the common fisheries policy are currently under consideration and an announcement will be made in due course.

Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he has not yet provided the information about the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce requested from him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton in his question about next step agencies on 20 January.

Mr. Waldegrave: The intervention board is an independent Government Department established under the European Communities Act 1972 responsible to all four Agriculture Ministers. Although it is an executive agency, it is not a next steps agency in my Department, and did not therefore come within the terms of the right. hon. Member's question. It has not, however, acquired its own buildings, its staff numbers have declined since it became an agency; it publishes no periodical journals; has no executive cars; its logo pre-dates agency status and was internally designed at no cost; it has no corporate clothing, although it provides protective clothing to specialist staff when their duties require it, and it has always had its own corporate stationery. This was redesigned in August 1993 at a cost of under £500.

Lead Contamination

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has undertaken to identify risks to human health resulting from lead contamination from petrol entering the human food chain; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: MAFF routinely monitors the dietary intakes of lead by the United Kingdom population. The average intake is very low and in 1991 had further decreased to about half that found in 1988. The results of specific studies on the effect of lead fall-out from the atmosphere on the food chain, which would include lead from petrol, were reported in 1989 in "Food Surveillance Paper" No. 27 published by HMSO.

Rules and Regulations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the rules and regulations in his Department which have been withdrawn in the last 12 months, or which his Department plans to withdraw in the next 12 months; and what impact this will have on his Department's manpower.

Mr. Waldergrave [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The following rules and regulations were revoked by my Department over the last 12 months. Many, however, were replaced by new, but wherever possible less burdensome, legislation. The Department is continuing to identify rules and regulations for withdrawal. Those for withdrawal in the next 12 months will be announced as and when consultations are completed. The manpower implications will be taken into account in the Department's central manpower plans which will be published in the Department's annual report in March:

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support (Mortgages)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had with the Council of Mortgage Lenders regarding changes in income support for mortgage interest; what views he received from the council; what plans he has to review his decision; and what further plans he has to meet the Council of Mortgage Lenders for further discussions of his proposals.

Mr. Roger Evans: We have on-going discussions with the Council of Mortgage Lenders and will continue to do so throughout the consultation process. The council has expressed concern about the possible impact of the proposals. We are listening carefully to its concerns but believe that these proposals will result in the development of comprehensive quality insurance and will provide better protection for all home owners, not just those who currently get help from income support mortgage interest.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from charities for the homeless regarding his proposals for changes in income support for mortgage interest.

Mr. Roger Evans: We have received one representation from a charity for the homeless. We hope that all interested parties will take the opportunity to make representations to the Social Security Advisory Committee during its consultation on these proposals.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently on invalidity benefit in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales, (c) each Welsh county and (d) each Welsh constituency; in each case, what percentage of the population this represents; what were the figures in (i) 1979, (ii) 1983 and (iii) 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: No information is available in respect of the Welsh counties and constituencies.

Information for Great Britain, and Wales is in the table. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is responsible for Social Security statistics in Northern Ireland.

The number of Invalidity Benefit recipients in Great Britain and Wales at a particular time, and the percentage of the population they represent

	Number of recipients	Percentage of population
Great Britain:
1979	610,000	1.7
1983	737,000	2.0

Notes:

(a) Full rate category BL and category A/B(L) pension is equal to approximately 60 per cent. of the full rate of category B pension.

(b) Excluding pensions paid at a reduced rate on the basis of age at widowhood and pensions based on a combination of the woman's own contributions and those of her late husband.

(c) Figures include a small number of pensions paid to persons overseas.

(d) Figures not available.

(e) Category A/B(L) retirement pension based on a combination of the woman's own contributions and those of her husband was introduced with effect from 6 April 1979.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people claimed the retirement pension who have incomes from work in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is estimated that, on average, 630,000 people in the United Kingdom receiving state retirement pension also have income from earnings.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Security (1) what assessment he has made of the causes for 9 per cent. of people over retirement age failing to qualify for a national insurance retirement pension; if he will break down the main failures in a claimant's contributory record, signifying the significant changes over time; and if he will divide these data according to whether the non-pensioner claimants are men or women;

(2) how many pensioners drew a reduced retirement pension because of an inadequate insurance record for each of the last 30 years; if he will divide these data by gender; if he will give the totals as a percentage of all those drawing a retirement pension; and if he will list the main causes of the inadequate contributions records.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information is in the table.

As stated at footnote 5 to my answer of 7 February, Official Report, columns 202-204, the "People without RP" at column 6 of tables 1A and 1B includes people receiving invalidity benefit and widows' benefit in place of retirement pension. The information for 1993 is that there are 314,000 men aged 65 or over and 630,000 women aged 60 or over who do not receive a retirement pension. Of these, around 229,000 men are in receipt of invalidity benefit or sickness benefit while around 101,000 women are receiving invalidity benefit, sickness benefit or widows benefit. In addition, married women aged over 60, with a husband aged less than 65, or who has not yet claimed retirement pension, would be entitled to a retirement pension only if they satisfied the contribution conditions in their own right.

The main causes of inadequate contribution records are:

non-liability due to:

earnings, if any, being below the threshold for payment of contributions periods spent outside UK

full time education

exercise by a married women or a widow of the right to pay contributions at a reduced rate giving no pension entitlement

In the case of the self-employed, a small earnings exception from payment of contributions.

Notes:

(a) Paid to widows on the basis of the late husbands' contributions—excludes pensions paid at a reduced rate on the basis of age at widowhood.

(b) Full rate Category B(L) and A/B(L) paid to married women is equal to approximately 60 per cent. of the full Category B pension.

(c) Category A/B(L) is based on a combination of the woman's own contributions and those of her husband was introduced with effect from 6 April 1979.

(d) Figures include a small number of pensions paid to persons overseas.

(e) Figures not available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent assessment he has made of the age profile of those pensioners eligible for, but not claiming, income support or housing benefit.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Reliable information on the age profile of pensioners eligible for, but not claiming, income support or housing benefit is not available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown of the 1993 data showing the age profile of retirement pensioners drawing (a) income support, (b) income support and housing benefit and (c) housing benefit only.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The available information is in the table.

	Retirement Pension cases with Income Support[1]	Retirement Pension cases with Income Support and Housing Benefit[2]	Housing Benefit and Retirement Pension[3]
All cases	1,386	712	952
60–64	62	39	46
65–69	154	95	189
70–74	216	124	294
75–79	283	161	218
80 and over	671	293	206

Notes:

1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

[1] Includes all income support claimants in receipt of a state retirement pension, whether or not receiving housing benefit.

[2] Represents only those recipients in column 1 also in receipt of housing benefit.

[3] Includes all housing benefit claimants in receipt of a state retirement pension but not in receipt of income support.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reduced earnings allowance claims are outstanding for the benefits offices of Phoenix house, Dunn house, Houghton-le-Spring and South Shields.

Mr. Hague: Information is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons the £2,500 threshold limit for the compensation recovery unit has not been adjusted to take account of inflation; and what plans he has to increase the threshold.

Mr. Roger Evans: Frequent adjustments to the limit could create a disproportionate administrative burden and raise costs. Consequently, we have no immediate plans to increase it.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of successful claims for statutory sick pay for each year since the scheme's inception; and if he will classify the data according to the rate of benefit paid.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. For the available information, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 7 February, Official Report, columns 203-10. Further information is in the table.

Estimated proportion of GB labour force eligible for standard rate SSP compared with proportion eligible for higher rate SSP 1987–88 to 1993–94

	1987–88	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Average weekly earnings cut off lower rate: standard rate	£76.50	£79.50	£84	£125	£185	£190	£195
Proportion eligible for lower rate	0.1	0.1	0.1	0.2	0.4	0.4	0.3
Proportion eligible for higher rate	0.9	0.9	0.9	0.8	0.6	0.6	0.7

Notes:
1. Information is not available for years prior to 1987.
2. Proportions have been rounded.
3. Proportions apply to GB employees as a whole eligible for SSP on earnings grounds only, not to SSP recipients.
4. To apply the proportions to actual SSP recipients would require the assumption of a constant distribution of sickness across earnings bands.
5. Most SSP recipients receive occupational sick pay in addition to SSP when they are sick. In many cases this brings the total payment received up to full pay.

Source:
Government Actuary's Department estimates.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to continue collecting data on the number of claims for statutory sick pay.

Mr. Hague: We have recently received a report of a joint DSS—employers' working group, which has considered changes and improvements to the administration of the statutory sick pay scheme, including the amount of mandatory records which employers are required to keep for SSP purposes. We are currently considering the group's report, but no changes will be made without consultation with both sides of industry.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people annually gain national insurance credits; and what estimate he has made of the cost of these credits if taxpayers contributed the sums which such individuals would have paid into the national insurance scheme from their own employer's contributions if they were on (a) two thirds and (b) average earnings.

Mr. Arbuthnot: In 1992–93, the most recent year for which information is available, some 4.5 million people were awarded an average of 47 national insurance contribution credits. If these individuals were receiving earnings and paid employees' national insurance contributions at current rates, those on two thirds of average earnings would have paid £932.48 and those on average earnings would have paid £1,505.88 in contributions.

Notes:

(a) Calculations based on weekly male average earnings of £366—new earnings survey April 1994.

(b) Calculations assume that contributions were paid at the not contracted out rate of 2 per cent. + 10 per cent.

National Insurance

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many exemptions from class 2 national insurance contributions from self-employed people have been granted on grounds of low earnings in each of the last five years.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The administration of national insurance is a matter for Mr. George Bertram, the acting chief executive of the Contributions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from George Bertram to Mr. John Home Robertson, dated 13 February 1995:

As Acting Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the National Insurance scheme. I have been asked to reply to your question asking how many exemptions from Class 2 National Insurance contributions from self-employed people have been granted on grounds of low earnings in each of the last five years.

Small Earnings Exceptions have been granted as follows:

1989–90: 93,300
1990–91: 80,400
1991–92: 82,900
1992–93: 99,800
1993–94: 73,100

A sample statistical interrogation of the National Insurance Recording System was used to extrapolate these figures.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Mr. Hague: The Department of Social Security did not exist independently prior to August 1988.

Advertising costs in 1994 prices on behalf of the Department and including its agencies for each of the following years is as follows:

Year	£
1989–90	8,532,000
1990–91	5,298,000
1991–92	6,333,000
1992–93	4,748,000
1993–94	4,824,000

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the unemployed have failed to qualify for the unemployment benefit due to them exhausting their right to 12 months' benefit in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of trends in the proportion of the unemployed who failed to qualify for national insurance unemployment benefit; if he will list the main reasons for the failure for claimants to have a full contributory record; what significant changes over time he has identified in the causes for failure to gain full contribution records; and if he will divide these data into information about men and women claimants.

Mr. Roger Evans: Statistics covering the reasons why men and women fail to qualify for unemployment benefit due to a lack of national insurance contributions are not kept. The main reasons for an insufficient contribution record in the relevant tax years include: non-payment of class 1 contributions due to long-term unemployment and/or sickness; self-employment; and periods spent outside the labour market.

Family Credit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 428, if he will list by benefit office areas and by region how much family credit, expressed in both cash terms and as a percentage of total expenditure on family credit, has been given to families with (a) one child, (b) two children, (c) three children, (d) four children and (e) five or more children, breaking the information down into occupational groupings.

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 6 February 1995]: The precise information is not available. Information on a pro rata basis for each of the five years given in my answer of 27 January to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman), Official Report, column 428, has been placed in the Library. Information by benefit office and for larger families is not reliable at this level of disaggregation. The tables, therefore, show spending by region and combine spending on families with three or more children.

DEFENCE

Defence Sales

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contributions his Department made to the Export Credits Guarantee Department in respect of credit arrangements for defence sales in each year since 1981.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1986–87, the Ministry of Defence has made contributions to the Export Credits Guarantee Department to provide interest rate support for the Jordan defence package. These contributions, which have been reported in the Defence appropriation accounts each year, are as follows.

Year	Expenditure £000
1986–87	894
1987–88	972
1988–89	1,118
1989–90	993
1990–91	1,058
1991–92	1,356
1992–93	1,054
1993–94	852

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what legal powers he used to set up the International Military Services Ltd. export finance house; when the finance house was set up; and what external legal advice from which source he received before it was being set up.

Mr. Freeman: International Military Services Ltd. set up its export finance house, with MOD agreement, in 1985. This business initiative was judged to fall within the financial guidelines laid down for the company by the Ministry. No external legal advice on the scheme was considered necessary.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the total liabilities and assets of International Military Services Ltd. at the time it ceased trading activity; and what they are now.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the company's annual reports and accounts filed at Companies House.

Royal Marines

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has (a) to purchase and (b) to review the purchase of additional armoured vehicles for the Royal Marines; and at what date an order is likely to be placed.

Mr. Freeman: Options for procuring armoured vehicles for the Royal Marines in the United Kingdom landing force are currently under review.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 105, who authorised the passes made over Her Majesty's prison, Stocken.

Mr. Soames: The passes made over the prison on 27 September 1994 were made at the request of Her Majesty's Prison Service, and were authorised by the Officer Commanding RAF Cottesmore.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of maintaining British armed forces on the Falkland Islands in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 6 February, Official Report, columns 37–39.

Regimental Silver

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of purchasing and restoring regimental silver in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: Army regimental silver is maintained by the relevant regiment or corps using money from mess funds or other non-public funds. In the case of the Navy, it is referred to as "naval silver" and the cost of maintenance is borne by a registered charity through donations, and hire charges levied on ships and establishments for the loan of items. In common with the Army, Royal Air Force silver is purchased and restored using mess funds and other non-public funds. In the light of this, I can confirm that there is no cost to the public purse for the purchase or restoration of regimental silver, naval silver or silver belonging to the Royal Air Force.

Eurofighter 2000

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 744, if he will list the production costs of the Eurofighter 2000 for each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: No production costs have been incurred.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 744, whether his Department has agreed fixed price contracts for the Eurofighter 2000 project.

Mr. Freeman: The existing main development contracts for Eurofighter 2000 are not generally on a fixed price basis. As part of the reorientation of the project agreed by the Defence Ministers of the partner nations in December 1992, revised fixed price contracts are being negotiated with industry; these contracts are due to be placed shortly. It is the intention of the partner nations to agree with industry fixed or firm price contracts for the production investment and production phases of the project.

Expenditure (Germany)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of his Department's current defence expenditure arises from the United Kingdom's military presence and responsibilities in Germany.

Mr. Soames: The planned costs for 1994–95 of the two primary budgets in Germany, United Kingdom Support Command (Germany) and RAFSTC 2 Group Germany, are identified in table 1.3 of "UK Defence Statistics" 1994 edition as £1,233,800,000 and £262,100,000 respectively, representing 6.57 per cent. of the Defence budget.

Vehicle Blinde Modulaire Programme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much the British contribution to the Franco-German vehicule blinde modulaire programme is expected to be (a) as a percentage of the total projected programme cost and (b) in financial terms;

(2) what is his Department's policy towards the Franco-German vehicule blinde modulaire programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government are considering whether the Franco-German vehicule blinde modulaire/ gepanzerte transport-kraftfahrzeuge programme offers the basis for trilateral collaboration in meeting our future requirement for armoured utility vehicles. No decisions have been made.

European Communications Satellite

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards the new generation European communications satellite; and how much the British contribution will be (a) as a percentage of the total projected programme cost and (b) in financial terms.

Mr. Freeman: Feasibility studies are currently under way to examine how the United Kingdom's military satellite communications requirement, after 2000, could be met. Various collaborative options are being examined as part of these studies. No decision on the way forward is expected to be made before 1996.

Phoenix Unmanned Aerial Vehicle

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning the Phoenix UAV; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Phoenix project is currently under review.

French-British Co-operation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many procurement programmes are currently being developed through co-operation between his Department and the French Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the "Statement of Defence Estimates (SDE) 1994", table 8, which lists collaborative projects involving the United Kingdom.

Increases in the cost of developing and producing modern high technology equipment, coupled with budgetary constraints make armaments co-operation with other nations a vital component in meeting our future defence needs. We shall therefore pursue co-operation where this makes military and economic sense and we would expect France to be an important partner.

Farnborough Airfield

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 160, what financial commitment his Department will make for Farnborough airfield after it becomes surplus to requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My Department will make available sufficient funds to meet its commitments at Farnborough airfield between now and the end of the century.

WE177 Bomb

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning the WE177 bomb; and in what year they will be withdrawn from service.

Mr. Soames: We envisage that the WE177 will continue to contribute to our sub-strategic nuclear capability for a number of years.

Dockyard Consultants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those external consultants who have been hired to assist on the privatisation of the dockyards at Rosyth and Devonport, (b) the specific functions that they were asked to perform and (c) the latest total cost of the consultants.

Mr. Freeman: For the names and functions of the consultants advising on the proposed privatisation of Devonport dockyard and Rosyth dockyard, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) on 5 December 1994, Official Report, column 110. As to the costs involved, for the period between 18 October 1993 and 31 October 1994 I refer the hon. Member to the second answer I gave to the hon. Member for Devonport on 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 621; payments made or outstanding for the period from 1 November 1994 to 31 January 1995 totalled £700,000.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

ENVIRONMENT

World Wide Web

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available on departmental pages established by his Department on the Government's world wide web server, "www.open.gov.uk" (a) the Audit Commission's reports entitled "Paying the Piper" and "Calling the Tune" and (b) other reports of the Audit Commission.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No. Distribution of Audit Commission reports is a matter for the commission.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the (a) population, (b) number of employees, (c) number of employees per 1,000 population and (d) political party in control in each local authority; and if he will post the answer on his Department's pages on the Government's world wide web server, "www.open.gov.uk.".

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have today placed the information requested in the Library of the House. No firm decision has yet been taken by the Department on the use of the Internet.

County Hall

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the current policy of the London residuary body towards the ownership and development of County hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Under the Local Government Act 1985, the London residuary body has a duty to dispose of surplus property for the best price reasonably obtainable; pursuant to this duty the LRB exchanged contracts on 14 October 1994 with Frogmore Estates plc in association with Galliard Homes for the sale of the remainder of the County hall site, and the sale is due to be completed by 29 March 1995.

Construction Industry Board

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made in the establishment of a construction industry board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend, my noble Friend the Minister of State and I met with representatives of the construction industry and their clients on 7 February and agreed to set up a new construction industry board. The board will take forward the reform proposals in Sir Michael Latham's report "Constructing the Team". The board will be chaired by Sir Michael Latham and will include representatives from the construction industry and its clients.

Dog Fouling

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Luton, South (Sir G. Bright) of 14 December, Official Report, column 664, when he proposes to give powers to local authorities to tackle dog fouling; how the designated areas will be determined; and when he expects to bring forward the necessary legislative proposals to effect these changes.

Mr. Atkins: The Dogs (Fouling of Land) Bill, which was introduced by the hon. Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson) and received its Second Reading on 10 February, would give local authorities the necessary powers. The Bill proposes that local authorities may designate land which is open to the air and to which the public have access.

Ministerial Discussions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with his counterpart in Norway, and what plans he has for discussions on the damage done to the environment by the lack of fully operated coal desulphurisation plant at power stations.

Mr. Atkins: The Secretary of State has had no recent bilateral discussions with his Norwegian counterpart on sulphur emissions from UK power stations. The UK is, however, on target to meet fully its commitments to reduce sulphur emissions under the EC large combustion plants directive. Both the United Kingdom and Norwegian Governments signed last year the UNECE protocol on further reductions in sulphur emissions.

Civil Servants

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy on allowing departmental civil servants to work for, or be seconded to, local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Department strongly encourages interchange with local government. Since 1993, 12 DOE staff have been on secondment to local authorities, and 18 local government staff have had secondments to DOE.

Westminster City Council

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines have been issued to local authorities since the district auditor's interim report on Westminster city council's designated sales policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Files of general correspondence are normally destroyed after a five-year period, and we have been unable to locate the response to which the hon. Member refers.

Private Hostels

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what standards his Department requires of private hostels used by persons on social security benefits.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Private hostels will usually fall within the definition of a house in multiple occupation contained in part XI of the Housing Act 1985. Under these provisions, local authorities have extensive powers to ensure that houses in multiple occupation are fit for the number of occupants. The Department's circular 12/92 sets out guidance to local authorities on the standards of fitness they might wish to impose in such cases.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new initiatives he is taking to encourage the construction of affordable housing.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government continue to promote efficiency, value for money and use of private finance in the provision of affordable housing. In this way we aim to ensure that the maximum benefit is derived from the public resources available.

Emissions

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what studies he has conducted into which substances are emitted when secondary liquid fuel is burned;

(2) what monitoring has taken place of the emissions from the Rugby Cement works at Barrington.

Mr. Atkins: Studies have been made on the emissions to air for particulate matter, oxides of nitrogen, sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, hydrochloric acid, hydrofluoric acid, oxygen, total organic carbon, dioxins, and heavy metals. The dioxins and heavy metal content of solid waste discharges and the chlorine, heavy metals, sulphur and PCB content of secondary liquid fuels has also been studied.

Rugby cement works at Barrington has monitored all the above parameters.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines his Department gives to local authorities with regard to the use of moneys in the housing revenue account.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The items of expenditure and income falling within the Housing Revenue Account are defined in schedule 4 to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, also issues an annual determination setting out the sums to be debited and credited to the account under items 8 of parts I and II of schedule 4. The Department will shortly be issuing a circular providing further guidance on local authority expenditure and income which should be accounted for in the housing revenue account.

Local Government Finance, Shropshire

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the aggregate financial balances, excluding schools, held by Shropshire at the latest available date and for the corresponding date in 1994 and 1993.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer Monday 13 February 1994]: The latest available estimates of the level of reserves, excluding schools is as follows. These estimates are subject to amendments as authorities finalise their accounts. Compatible data on the use of balances in 1994–95 which would be needed to derive an estimate of the level of reserves as a date later than 1 April 1994 are not yet available.

Estimated Level of Reserves: Shropshire[1]

Date	£
1st April 1993[2]	8,002,000
1st April 1994[3]	-557,000

Notes:

[1] These reserves include those which may not be available to the Council for general use.

[2] Source: Level of reserves (outturn) at 1st April 1993 (RS return for 1993–94).

Local Government, North Yorkshire

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the population of the proposed north riding of Yorkshire is from areas that, prior to local government reorganisation in 1974, were in the administrative areas of the (a) north riding, (b) west riding and (c) east riding of Yorkshire.

Mr. Robert B Jones [holding answer Monday 13 February 1995]: We no longer propose to create a county of the north riding of Yorkshire.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those who made representations to him requesting that the name of North Yorkshire county council should be changed.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer Monday 13 February 1995]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has concluded that the county's name should not be changed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies House (Sickness)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to institute an occupational health assessment of the sickness at Companies House.

Mr. Heseltine: As this is an operational matter for Companies House executive agency, I have asked David Durham, the chief executive, to respond directly to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 14 February 1995:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question about assessment of sickness at Companies House. The President has informed you that I have been asked to reply as Chief Executive of the Agency as this is an operational matter for Companies House.

Measurement of sickness absence poses a number of statistical problems, and comparisons between different kinds of organisation should be treated with caution, particularly if there are wide differences in, for example, the proportion of part time staff. The figures for the Department as a whole published in the recent Parliamentary Answer given to Mr. David Chidgey MP (Question 187) use a standard, civil service wide definition. We do not use this definition for management purposes at Companies House (CH) because we find it produces anomalous results when applied to part time staff.

CH employs an unusually large number of part time staff (333, or 29 per cent. of our workforce). We count absence for management control purposes in line with normal practice in the private sector. This takes account of the very different working patterns that may occur in production environments such as that predominating at CH. Under this definition, CH has had a sickness absence rate for 1994–95 which for 9 month period to the end of December stood at 4.8 per cent. We understand that this is comparable to that achieved by other similar organisations.

In the light of this, I do not believe that any special assessment of sickness absence is necessary.

Nuclear Levy

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to (a) end, (b) raise and (c) extend the nuclear levy.

Mr. Eggar: The future of the fossil fuel levy is being considered as part of the review of nuclear power currently being undertaken by the Government and I cannot pre-judge the outcome.

Opencast Mining Sites

Mr. Hood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek to amend the Coal Industry Act 1994 to give local planning authorities the power to protect the local communities from the liability of restoration of opencast mining sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have no proposals to amend the existing provisions of the Act in respect of the responsibilities of planning authorities.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his changes in the INsolvency Service affect the powers (a) to prosecute for fraud, (b) to disqualify directors and (c) to prosecute in situations of bankruptcy; and if he will make a statement on the rights of private contractors to initiate prosecution and disqualifications.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No decision to contract out the functions of official receivers has been taken. When considering that decision, Ministers will take into account such factors as value for money and enabling official receivers to concentrate resources on their investigative role. The latter would improve the Insolvency Service's ability to take disqualification proceedings against directors.

The power to prosecute in personal bankruptcies and in cases of fraud in company liquidations rests with the investigations division of the Department of Trade and Industry and this situation will not be affected by any decision to contract out official receivers' functions.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the present size of the Insolvency Service employment (a) in total and (b) in each region and nation; and if he will estimate the effects on such employment of his proposals to change the status of the service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Figures for the Insolvency Service staff in post as at 1 January 1995, in total and broken down by offices, are as follows.

[1] OGD loanees includes short term appointees and staff on loan from other Government Departments and the private sector.

Consultations have been engaged by the service to consider the implications of any decisions to contract out but at this stage it is too early to say what impact such a decision would have on levels of staffing.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cases have been dealt with and how many staff employed by the Insolvency Service in each year since 1988; and if he will express these figures in index form with 1988 as the base.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The figures for the number of cases dealt with by the Insolvency Service each year since 1988, together with the number of staff employed in the same period, are as follows:

New Cases

Companies House

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the full cost of the consultancy work carried out by SRU Ltd. on (a) the privatisation of Companies House and (b) the contracting out of work carried out in Companies House.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The fee paid to SRU Ltd. in connection with the review of Companies House is £189,000.

Euratom Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the facilities operated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority have had sanctions imposed for infringement of article 83 of the Euratom treaty since 1988; if he will specify the infringements that occurred; and what has been done in each case to rectify the situation.

Mr. Eggar: Sanctions have been imposed on the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority under article 83 of the Euratom Treaty on only one occasion. That was at the least severe level—a "warning"—on 4 March 1992 concerning a facility at Dounreay. I refer the hon. Member to the European Communities Commission decision C(92) 476 final—OJ L88 of 3 April 1992—a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. To rectify the situation, modifications were made to the plant and to management procedures, and improvements were made to the accounting and records systems.

Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, of 26 January, Official Report, column 335, on the imports and exports of uranium, what factors led to the figures for certain years being classed as commercial in confidence.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the then Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Energy to the hon. Member for Newcastle Upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins), on 7 February 1995, Official Report, column 142.

Saddlery

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the prospects of the saddlery trade; and what measures he proposes to promote this industry in rural areas.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has initiated discussions with representatives of the industry about its prospects and the issues which influence its competitiveness both in the United Kingdom and overseas.

If the right hon. Member has particular concerns in this context I would be pleased to consider them.

Auction Houses

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions apply in France to British auction houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: In France, all auctioneering or individual sales of works of art must be undertaken by "commissaries priseurs", who are personally appointed by the state and restricted in number. As a result, British auction houses are not able to operate in France as corporate entities or to levy commission at rates comparable to those levied in the United Kingdom. The Government will continue to press the European Commission and the French authorities to secure the removal of this barrier to trade.

Lloyd's

Mr. John Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the extent to which the solvency rate for Lloyd's of London for each year since 1987 took account of statistics made available to his Department with particular reference to non-marine all other business.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Lloyd's statutory solvency requirements, which are aimed at ensuring that there are sufficient funds to pay policyholders' valid claims, do not include a solvency rate.

Lloyd's is subject to two solvency requirements, the first determined in accordance with section 84 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982, requires the members of Lloyd's taken together to maintain a margin of solvency as prescribed by the Act and relevant regulations. Since 1987, the margin of solvency—the extent to which the value of the declared assets of the members taken together exceeds the required minimum—has varied between 11.5 and 2.25 the required minimum, and for the year ended December 1993 was three times the required minimum. For this test, the required minimum is calculated—in conformity with domestic and European law applying to all insurers—by reference to premium received or claims notified. The "settlement statistics" made available to the Department about particular classes of business—of which the non-marine all other is one—do not have a direct impact on this margin of solvency.

The settlement statistics are however one of the elements used to determine the basis for calculating the liabilities considered in the second solvency requirement. In accordance with section 83 of the Act, the value of each underwriter's assets must meet his/her liabilities—the liabilities, for general business, within which the non-marine all other category falls being calculated on a basis approved by the Secretary of State. Where appropriate, an underwriter's assets may be supported by the central fund and other assets held centrally by the society. For these purposes a name's liability on each syndicate is his/her share of the syndicate's liabilities, which in turn is the greater of

(i) the product of the syndicate's premium income and a percentage approved by the Secretary of State, and

(ii) the reserves regarded as necessary by the underwriting agent, and confirmed by syndicates' auditors.

In deciding which percentages to approve, the Secretary of State has regard to all available relevant information, of which the settlement statistics are an important part. Since the percentages determine the minimum reserves applicable to all syndicates, and are not averages to be applied to the totality of business, and the settlement statistics are in respect of the aggregate of business in a particular audit class, the percentages are not directly dependent upon the settlement statistics. It would be inappropriate to impose a level of percentages based upon the average of all syndicates, as that would cause some to be materially over-reserved. It is accordingly expected that a number of syndicates' liabilities will be determined on the basis (ii) above. Thus the achievement of this solvency requirement—which has been met every year since 1987, and every year prior to that—is not directly dependent on the settlement statistics.

Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the British companies which were given licences to attend the Eurohied and Intertech exhibitions held in Baghdad in November.

Mr. Needham: It has been the practice of successive administrations not to disclose such information unless the public interest outweighs the requirements of confidentiality.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 760, on what occasions Ministers or officials in his Department have met any representatives of the Iraqi British interests group, and for what purposes, since sanctions began.

Mr. Needham: Although Ministers and officials may for a variety of reasons have met representatives of the companies involved in the Iraq British interests group, there have been no meetings with the Iraq British interests group's organisers since its formation.

TRANSPORT

Crash Tests

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the potential annual casualty reduction in respect of deaths and injuries which would arise from the implementation of the proposed European Union crash test legislation in relation to (a) frontal impacts (i) stage 1 angled barrier and (ii) stage 2 offset deformable barrier and (b) side impacts (iii) with ground clearance of 260 mm and (iv) with ground clearance of 300 mm.

Mr. Norris: Estimates made by the Department and the Transport Research Laboratory are as follows:

(i) There is insufficient research to make a precise estimate but the overall effect on the numbers of casualties is likely to be small.

(ii) Up to 65,000 deaths and serious injuries per annum in the European Union—for which some 10 per cent. in the UK.

(iii) This has not been estimated. Any reduction in the height of the lower edge of the barrier below 300 mm makes the test less effective at reducing casualties in side impact accidents.

(iv) Up to 25,000 deaths and serious injuries per annum in the European Union—of which some 10 per cent. in the UK.

Public Transport

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new initiatives he has to promote the use of public transport.

Mr. Norris: We announced on 15 December the allocation of £79 million in 1995–96 for 37 local authority transport packages covering bus priority measures and park and ride schemes. In 1995–96 the package approach to local transport investment becomes the norm, particularly in urban areas. In addition, I have reconstituted the bus working group with representatives from the Confederation of Passenger Transport, local authority associations and the National Federation of Bus Users, to see what further measures can be taken to improve bus services within the deregulated framework.

Road Construction

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment is made of the risk of sediment from soil disturbance entering water courses prior to commencing road construction.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 14 February 1995:

The Minister for Roads and Railways has passed to me your request on what assessments are made of the risk of sediment from soil disturbance entering watercourses, prior to commencing road construction. This is an operational matter for which the Highways Agency is responsible.

All schemed in the National Road Programme are subject to Environmental Assessment at key stages in their development. The Assessment permits consideration of the likely environmental effects and allows Statutory Bodies like the National Rivers Authority (who are responsible for maintaining and conserving water quality) to comment on our proposals.

There are a number of ways in which a road scheme may affect watercourses. The Environmental Assessment will record the existing quality of these watercourses and the areas which are vulnerable to change. The assessment and subsequent mitigation will be discussed with the National Rivers Authority throughout the development of a road scheme. Prior to any contract for road construction being awarded, the Highways Agency would include the National Rivers Authority specific requirements in the contract documents to safeguard any watercourses.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the tonnage of road stone which will be required in the next 10 years of projected road building.

Mr. Watts: I regret this information is not available because it depends on the statutory progress of individual schemes in the current programme and on the availability of funds to take them forward. Furthermore, as scheme design evolves so their detailed requirements are refined.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what priority is given to environmental impact studies within the decision-making process for the development of new roads.

Mr. Watts: Environmental assessment has formed part of the Department's procedures for road schemes for many years. Trunk road proposals are the Government's responsibility and we give full weight to environmental aspects alongside economic, engineering and safety considerations in the decision-making process. Assessment takes place throughout the development of a trunk road scheme and informs the decision-making process at all stages. The current requirements are laid down in volume 11 of the design manual for roads and bridges. The final stage of the assessment is in accordance with directive 85/337/EEC. A formal environmental statement is published, where the scheme is likely to have a significant environmental effect, with the draft orders. This statement, together with representations about it, must be formally considered by the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport in reaching their decision on whether or not to go ahead with the scheme. Schemes promoted by local highway authorities require planning permission and are also, where they are likely to have a significant effect on the environment, subject to formal environmental assessment in accordance with the directive. The planning authority must have regard to all material considerations including, where required, the environmental information.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, if his inquiry into breaches of the Air Navigation Order of flights containing calves from Coventry airport in November and December 1994 deals specifically with the airline involved.

Mr. Norris: The purpose of the current inquiry is to seek to determine whether there have been any breaches of the Air Navigation Order. The inquiry will consider all relevant matters including the actions of the airlines involved in the operation of the flights.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the road worthiness of lorries used to export animals through the port of Shoreham.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Elliot Morley, dated 13 February 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding the roadworthiness of lorries used to export animals through the port of Shoreham.

Lorries used for all forms of transport have an annual statutory roadworthiness examination and are also subject to roadside checks conducted by the Vehicle Inspectorate regardless of the nature of the transport operation.

In the financial year 1993/94 the Vehicle Inspectorate conducted a total of 672,780 annual checks on motor vehicles and trailers, and 120,335 roadworthiness spot check inspections (with a further 13,931 special checks on lorry lights and exhaust emissions). We do not have details on inspection of vehicles specifically used for the transportation of animals.

If you have any further queries about the Inspectorate's enforcement activities, please contact me at the above address.

Rail Privatisation

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what fee his Department paid for services relating to rail privatisation to (a) Hambros, (b) Price Waterhouse, (c) Ernst and Young, (d) KPMG, (e) SG Warburgs, (f) Samuel Montagu, (g) Shandwick, (h) Linklaters and Paines, (i) Freshfields and (j) Greshams.

Mr. Watts: Information about fees paid by the Department to individual contractors is commercially confidential. Total payments to date to these contractors amount to £17.1 million.

Hong Kong

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

Dr. Mawhinney: None at present.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Parsonages

Mr. Redmond: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners (1) if he will list, for each year of the last 10 years, and by location new parsonages that the Church Commissioners have (a) had built and (b) bought, and the relative costs involved;

(2) for each of the last 10 years, and by location, the parsonages that the Commissioners have sold; and what revenue has been raised from the sale of each.

Mr. Alison: The initiative for the sale, purchase and construction of parsonages rests with the diocesan parsonages boards although each transaction requires the consent of the Church Commissioners. Over the 10 year period 1985-1994, 563 parsonages have been built, 550 purchased and 1,486 sold. The following table gives details including location by diocese and sums raised or expended.

PRIME MINISTER

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what action Her Majesty's Government have taken in relation to Lockerbie and Libyan sanctions since the Adjournment debate on 1 February.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has written to two hon. Members on matters which arose during the Adjournment debate on 1 February. Discussions about Lockerbie and UTA 772 with our closest partners have continued. The Government's policy towards Libya is kept under constant consideration, but it is only the Libyan Government who can bring about the lifting of sanctions by complying in full with the relevant Security Council resolutions.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 14 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Steen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the statutory instruments which each Government Department has sponsored in the last 12 months; and what statutory instruments each Department proposes to introduce during the current year.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Internet

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee if he will make a statement on the current progress and the likely timetable to when hon. Members on the parliamentary data and video network will be able to have House of Commons e-mail addresses accessible to their constituents and the general public through the Internet.

Mr. Waller: The Information Committee has recommended, subject to endorsement by the Finance and Services Committee of the necessary expenditure, that connection to the Internet should be made available, as an experiment, to those Members who are users of the parliamentary data and video network and who request it. It is hoped that connection to the Internet will be possible by May of this year. The experiment will be assessed in due course.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Contagious Agalactia

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of contagious agalactia have occurred in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: There have been no cases of contagious agalactia in Northern Ireland.

Rape and Child Abuse

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the provision in the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 1994, in respect of the removal of a defendant's right to anonymity prior to conviction and sentencing in cases of alleged rape and alleged child abuse.

Sir John Wheeler: Following publication of the proposal for a draft order in 1993, two representations were received expressing concern that the removal of a defendant's right to anonymity in a rape case might lead to the identification of the complainant. One of them also expressed concern that a defendant in a rape case whose name had been published might be subject to harassment. The right to anonymity had not extended at any time to defendants in other types of cases, including child abuse.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what redress is open to defendants for detrimental publicity in cases of alleged rape and alleged child abuse where the defendant's right to anonymity is removed but where the defendant is not proved guilty of an offence.

Sir John Wheeler: The law does not make specific provisions in this matter. A defendant acquitted of a charge in proceedings which may be freely reported must decide for himself whether to seek redress under criminal or civil law if he believes publicity of the case was detrimental to him.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to protect teachers from false accusations of rape and child abuse.

Sir John Wheeler: None. It is impossible to protect any person from having a false accusation laid against them.

TREASURY

Inland Revenue

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of Inland Revenue collection staff employed in each year since 1979, broken down to show those employed in ensuring the collection of (a) PAYE, (b) capital gains tax, (c) corporation tax, (d) schedule D tax and (e) national insurance contributions.

Sir George Young: Excluding staff employed on central administration, the table sets out the total numbers of Inland Revenue staff engaged on the collection of tax within the Department's accounts offices, local office network, and the enforcement officers for each year since 1978–79 and how many were working in the areas of (a) PAYE, (b) capital gains tax, (c) corporation tax and (d) schedule D tax. Under (a) the figures include staff used in collecting PAYE from employers and a relatively small number of schedule E tax assessments. As resource usage on national insurance contribution work is incidental to mainstream tax collection, it is not separately recorded.

Year	Total	PAYE	Capital gains tax	Corporation tax	Schedule D tax
1978–79	11,041	4,473	135	560	5,873
1979–80	10,648	4,215	148	584	5,701
1980–81	10,222	3,953	143	597	5,529
1981–82	10,124	3,842	126	409	5,747
1982–83	10,221	4,042	116	390	5,673
1983–84	10,171	4,094	113	394	5,570
1984–85	9,339	4,016	92	557	4,674
1985–86	8,443	3,196	92	559	4,596
1986–87	7,989	2,902	85	530	4,472
1987–88	7,795	2,902	105	538	4,250
1988–89	7,866	2,931	121	571	4,243
1989–90	7,879	2,974	92	570	4,243
1990–91	7,846	2,808	79	549	4,410
1991–92	8,187	3,209	70	532	4,376
1992–93	8,410	3,119	69	492	4,730
1993–94	8,173	2,945	68	465	4,695

The number of staff employed on collection and enforcement work has decreased since 1979. The greater proportion of the reduction arose through automation but other decreases resulted from administrative and efficiency measures and the transfer of work to other parts of the Department. Conversely, extra work loads attracted staff increases but the net overall reduction in permanent staff is around 2,860.

Monetary Union

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions United Kingdom Ministers or officials have had concerning technical aspects of introducing notes and coins for the single European currency, with (a) the expert group reporting to Commissioner Christopherson and (b) other bodies; what representation the United Kingdom has on this group; and when it is anticipated that technical aspects of monetary union will be settled to enable the change over to a single currency to take place.

Mr. Nelson: United Kingdom ministers and officials have had no discussions concerning technical aspects of introducing notes and coins for a single currency with the expert group on the changeover to the single currency. This is an independent group and neither the United Kingdom nor the other member states are formally represented. The group is likely to seek opinions from relevant United Kingdom bodies.

Article 109f(3) of the EC treaty provides that the European Monetary Institute shall supervise the technical preparation of ecu bank notes. The EMI has set up a group of national central bank experts to undertake a detailed study, the EMI working group on printing and issuing a European banknote.

A working group of mint directors from EU member states has been formed to address the technical implications of single European coinage, with the aim of providing advice to the European Commission on the options available.

Technical preparations which would be necessary for monetary union are at a very early stage, and it is not yet possible to give a date for their completion.

The UK opt-out under the Maastricht treaty means that no decision to proceed to monetary union would be made without the agreement of Parliament.

Fraud

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of fraud have been reported in (a) Government Departments and (b) non-departmental public bodies; and what has been their value in each of the last five years.

Sir George Young: The data are submitted by Departments in line with the requirements of 37.1.4 of Government accounting and cover frauds and suspected frauds committed by departmental and agency staff, including cases where staff have colluded with outsiders. The data include NDPB staff frauds where these have been reported by Departments. However, complete data on frauds in NDPBs are not held centrally.

The values are not a completely accurate indicator of actual losses resulting from fraud since in some cases the amounts involved are estimates, and in others, some or all of the sums have been recovered.

The number and value of fraud cases within Departments, agencies and NDPBs reported to the Treasury in the last five years are:

Year	Number of cases	Total value £
1989–90	221	1,496,700
1990–91	196	2,302,900
1991–92	287	1,536,900
1992–93	302	2,108,900
1993–94	352	1,688,500

Bank Notes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current value of (a) £5, (b) £10, (c) £20 and (d) £50 notes in circulation; and what is the estimated current face value of forged notes.

Mr. Nelson: The total value of Bank of England banknotes in circulation is published weekly in the bank return. The value of individual denominations was, at Wednesday 25 January 1995, £1,069 million for the £5; £5,362 million for the £10; £7,677 million for the £20; and £2,869 million for the £50.

The Bank of England, in common with most note-issuing authorities, does not publish details of the counterfeit notes it receives. However, despite an increase in counterfeiting over the last few years, counterfeit notes detected still represent only a small fraction of 1 per cent. of the total notes in circulation

Bus Fuel Duty

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the difference between the bus fuel duty rebate which has been paid and what would have been paid had the rebate not been frozen for each year from November 30 1993 to date.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Information for the financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95 is as follows.

	1993–94	1994–95
Cost of rebate	220	[1]225
Estimated cost without freeze in rebate announced 30 November 1993	227	257

[1]Indicates forecast outturn.

Business Statistics Service

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what assessment he has made of the implications for confidentiality and impartiality in a contracted out statutory collection of business statistics service under the Contracting Out (Statistics of Trade) Order 1995.

Mr. Nelson: The order referred to exists in draft form only and has not been laid before Parliament. An independent assessment into the attitudes of business to the contracting out of statistical inquiry work was made in October 1993, and the results of the study were placed in the Library. Should an appropriate contracting out order laid under section 77 (2) of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 be approved by Parliament, any subsequent market testing or contracting out of statistical inquiry work would take the results of this research into account.

Reinvestment Relief

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if investment in those companies listed under stock exchange rule 4.2 are eligible for reinvestment relief.

Mr. George Young: Yes. Capital gains tax reinvestment relief is available for investment in shares in qualifying unquoted trading companies. Companies listed under stock exchange rule 4.2 are unquoted companies for this purpose.

Hong Kong

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

Public Works Loan Board

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the quotas for lending to local authorities by the Public Works Loan Board.

Mr. Nelson: The Public Works Loan Commissioners have issued a circular today notifying local authorities that there will be no change in the formula for calculating quotas for 1995–96.

Copies of the circular have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Expenditure Review

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement about the likely effect on staff numbers in his Department of the fundamental review of expenditure;

(2) what savings to his Department's budget in the next three financial years he expects as a result of the Treasury's fundamental expenditure review.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 February 1995]: The FER report identified savings of 25 posts at grade 5 and above—round 25 per cent. of the total. The saving in direct staff costs attributable to this will amount to about £1.8 million in a full year. The implications of the FER for the number of staff employed by the Treasury in these and other grades and for other expenditure for next year and beyond is being considered in the work currently in hand and to set budgets for 1995–96.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Link Projects

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a full list of all 500 LINK research and development projects supported by Government to date, indicating the annual Government contribution for each of the last five years.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I have today placed in the Library a full list of the 571–343 active and 228 completed LINK projects supported by the Government since the start of the LINK initiative in 1986, together with details of Government expenditure on LINK for the last five years.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Office and its agencies for each year since its establishment, in 1994 prices.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Expenditure on all forms of advertising by the Office of Public Service and Science, including its agencies, for each year since 1992–93, when the office was established, was as follows:

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £	[1]1994–95 £
OPSS	695,400	1259,200	477,500

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Library Service

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to respond to the report commissioned by his Department from the consultants ASLIB on the public library service.

Mr. Sproat: I expect to receive the final report from the review consultants within the next month. I intend then to make a statement on the report as soon as possible thereafter.

Sports Council

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to announce the results of his Department's consultation on proposals to restructure the Sports Council.

Mr. Sproat: I am currently considering responses to the consultation on the Government's proposals set out in my 8 July statement. To assist me in this, I have asked the Great Britain Sports Council to provide me with its own view of how its current functions and staffing might be realigned to take account of those proposals. I shall be taking final policy decisions in the light of my analysis and this further work, which will be completed shortly.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) when the decision was taken to remove the words "sport for all" from the Sports Council's letterhead;

(2) what consultations he has had with the Sports Council about the removal of the words "sport for all" from the Sports Council's letterhead;

(3) how many sheets of letterheads were discarded by the Sports Council following the recent removal of the words "sport for all" from the design;

(4) what costs have been incurred in the alteration of the Sports Council's letterhead by the removal of the words "sport for all".

Mr. Sproat: The Sports Council decided to remove "sport for all" in redesigning its letterhead on the appointment of its new chairman and vice-chairman. This was a matter for the Sports Council and therefore Ministers and officials were neither consulted nor informed. I am advised by the Sports Council that because of the level of stocks held at any one time, the costs were negligible.

Children's Play (Funding)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made on the present arrangements for funding children's play.

Mr. Sproat: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle under Lyme (Mrs. Golding) on 16 January, Official Report, columns 300-01.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Languages, EEC

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many working languages were used in the EEC (a) in 1970, (b) in 1980, (c) in 1990 and (d) at the latest date for which figures are available; what is the estimated cost of translation services in 1995; and what was the cost in each of the previous years.

Mr. David Davis: The European Community had four official and working languages in 1970, six in 1980, nine in 1990 and has had 11 since the accession of Austria, Finland and Sweden in January this year. There is no separate line in the EC budget covering the cost of translation services. Estimates could therefore be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Copenhagen Summit

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what priority Her Majesty's Government attach to the United Nations social summit to be held in March in Copenhagen; and who will represent Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are committed to achieving a successful summit and have participated actively in the preparations. Our principle priority is to improve the focus of the international debate around the issues of development.

A final decision on attendance at the summit will be taken near the date.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 19, which of the functions of the EU monitors in Bosnia duplicate similar functions performed by UNPROFOR and UNHCR; and if he will make it his policy to avoid such duplication and to ensure that EU funds are used more efficiently in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are satisfied that there exists no duplication of effort between UNPROFOR's and UNHCR's roles and that of the EU monitoring mission.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those resolutions on nuclear arms control, nuclear disarmament, nuclear testing and nuclear materials production freeze voted upon at the most recent session of the United Nations General Assembly, indicating the vote taken on each resolution, how the United Kingdom voted, and the reasons in each case for the way the United Kingdom voted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information he has requested shortly.

Piracy

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the numbers and locations of acts of piracy committed against British shipping worldwide since 1987; and what action his Department has taken in response to these (a) unilaterally, (b) bilaterally and (c) multilaterally.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information will take some time to compile. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Work Permits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the eligibility of United Kingdom citizens to apply for work permits into the United States of America.

Mr. Baldry: British citizens are eligible to apply to the United States immigration authorities for a United States work permit. Applications are generally based on a specific offer of employment from a United States employer.

Colombia

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support the appointment of a special rapporteur in Colombia by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

Mr. David Davis: President Samper has pledged to give human rights the highest priority. He has discussed them constructively with UN human rights bodies, foreign Governments and NGOs. We do not believe the appointment of a special rapporteur is needed.

Islamic Fundamentalism

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has raised the issue of Islamic fundamentalism at NATO meetings.

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Potential threats to security and stability in the Mediterranean region are discussed from time to time in NATO meetings. These threats include acts of violence carried out by extremist groups, some but not all of which act under the guise of fundamentalist movements.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the possible threat from Islamic fundamentalism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 13 February 1995]: We do not consider Islam, or Islamic revival, to be a threat. However a number of countries in the middle east face problems of violent extremism under the guise of Islamic movements. These are clearly a threat to the stability of the region.

Security Co-operation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy concerning the establishment of military links between NATO and (a) north African and (b) middle eastern countries; what consideration his Department has given to the establishment of wider security co-operation with these countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 13 February 1995]: NATO has no plans to establish military links with either north African or middle eastern countries. The Mediterranean initiative announced by the NATO Secretary-General on 7 February is political in nature and reflects the alliance's wish to contribute to the strengthening of regional stability, to foster better understanding of mutual concerns, and to correct any misunderstandings of the NATO's purpose that could lead to perceptions of a threat. It also seeks to complement OSCE and WEU dialogues with certain countries in the region.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the oral answer by the Leader of the House of 2 February, Official Report, column 1231, and Madam Speaker's statement of 2 February, Official Report, column 1231, what considerations underlay his decision to hold a press conference on the issue of exported live animals for slaughter rather than make a statement to the House.

Mr. Waldergrave: I believed that it was extremely important to inject into the wider public debate a point which I hope is reasonably well understood in the House—since the Government have made it clear both to hon. Members and in another place namely that, legally, it is not open to the United Kingdom to introduce a unilateral ban on exports of live animals. My statement to the press on 1 February merely confirmed that position. A letter sent to all Members of the House earlier that day set out the legal position in detail, as did answers given on 2 February to parliamentary questions from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) and my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale), Official Report, columns 846–47. I believe that misunderstanding on this point fuels some of the frustration of many of those demonstrating against the trade and diverts attention from the necessity of securing improvements in European law.

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the legal arguments put forward by Compassion in World Farming rebutting his contention that it would be illegal for the United Kingdom to impose a ban on the export from the United Kingdom of live animals for slaughter.

Mrs. Browning: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 2 February to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) and my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale), Official Report, columns 846–47, about the legality under Community law of measures banning or restricting calf exports. Similar considerations would apply to a ban on the export of live animals for slaughter.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 851, what information he now has on how many of the exporters of livestock currently using Brightlingsea have convictions and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: I have nothing to add to that reply.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle over six months of age were loaded on the MV Caroline at Brightlingsea on 1 February; where they came from; what was their destination; where they were lairaged prior to transportation; what were the nationalities of the haulage firms prior to lairage and after lairage; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 13 February 1995]: A total of 32 heifers and bullocks from premises in County Meath, Republic of Ireland were loaded on the MV Caroline on that day. According to the health documents and journey plan accompanying the animals their destination was premises in Vitre, France and they were to be rested, fed and watered at premises in Northampton and Nieuwpoort, Belgium. The animals were transported by a British haulage firm.

Contagious Epididymitis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the cases of contagious epididymitis in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning: No cases of contagious epididymitis have been recorded since it was made notifiable on 1 January 1993. Official records are not available before that date.

Contagious Agalactia

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of contagious agalactia have occurred in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning: No cases of contagious agalactia have been recorded in England since it was made notifiable on 1 January 1993. Official records are not available before January 1993.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in each of the last five years, the amount of compensation paid out to farmers whose animals have been slaughtered as BSE carriers.

Mrs. Browning: Compensation is paid when animals suspected to be affected with BSE are compulsory slaughtered. Details of compensation paid in the last five years are as follows:

Year	Compensation £
1990	9,030,752
1991	15,741,463
1992	28,205,613
1993	36,290,273
1994	22,546,902

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many slaughterhouses have closed and what killing capacity by species has been taken out of commission in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning: Our records indicate the numbers of licensed red meat slaughterhouses in England in each year since 1984 were:

1984: 861
1985: 852
1986: 815
1987: 793
1988: 782
1989: 689
1990: 643
1991: 593
1992: 455
1993: 434
1994: 424

The Department does not hold figures on the total capacity of slaughterhouses.

Sheep Pox

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of sheep pox have been reported in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning: No cases of sheep pox have been recorded in England since 1985.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made as to which Ministry work currently carried out under various memoranda of understanding will be transferred to a privatised ADAS.

Mr. Waldegrave: No decisions have yet been taken on the extent of the work which might be transferred to the private sector.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest available figures for the number of sheep farmers authorised under the certification scheme to purchase organophosphorous dip products in Wales, Scotland and each of his Department's regions in England; and what, in each case, was the total estimated number of sheep farmers.

Mrs. Browning: The certification scheme is run by the National Proficiency Tests Council. There are 90,000 registered sheep farmers in the United Kingdom. The number of farmers who have applied for certification in each NPTC region by 10 February 1995 is set out in the following table. The information is not available by MAFF regions.

By 10 February, 11,151 sheep farmers had enrolled for certification. A total of 4,746 certificates had also been issued by that date. None of this data are available on a corresponding regional basis.

The decision on whether or not to apply for certification is a matter for the individual sheep farmer, bearing in mind their judgment on the possible need to purchase OP sheep dips for the treatment of sheep in the coming year.

Applications for sheep dipping certificates received by 10 February 1995

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether payments under the 1995 hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme will all be made within the payments timetable set out in his Department's latest commitment to service document.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 1995 HLCA scheme opened for applications on 15 November 1994. The Council regulation which extended the agri-monetary system on which HLCA rates are dependent was not published in the Official Journal until 31 December 1994. The statutory instrument allowing payments to be made was laid in the House on 19 January 1995. Most claimants should receive their payments within three months of receipt of their claim as provided for in the Ministry's regional service standard "Commitment to Service". However, some of the claims submitted early in the claim period are unlikely to be processed in time to meet the target. We will keep any delays to a minimum.

Guide Dogs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to seek exemption for the Guide Dogs for the Blind Association and guide dog owners from the Restrictions on the Administration of Veterinary Medicinal Products Regulations 1994, SI 2987, in order to allow veterinary surgeons to prescribe generic alternatives to specialist veterinary prescriptions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 10 February 1995]: None. It is in the interests of animals to treat them with medicines which have been fully assessed for safety, quality and efficacy in the species concerned. The regulations encourage good practice in both areas by reinforcing the code of practice introduced by the British Veterinary Association in 1991. The provisions have therefore established good veterinary practice in the United Kingdom, but which now have statutory backing. Where no authorised product exists for a particular condition in a particular species the veterinary surgeon is able to exercise his or her clinical judgment to consider alternatives in accordance with the regulations.

Departmental Employees

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many employees for which his Department is responsible were women (a) in 1991, (b) in 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994; and of these, how many were (i) at grade 7 level, (ii) at grade 3 level, (iii) at executive officer level, (iv) at administrative officer level and (v) at administrative assistant level.

Mr. Jack [pursuant to his reply, 25 January 1995, c. 214–16]: The information given for 1994 was incorrect, the correct information is as follows:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ernest Saunders

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for granting Ernest Saunders parole in 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Mr. Saunders was released on licence in 1991, when he become eligible for parole, following a recommendation to that effect from the Parole Board, an independent body.

Data Protection Directive

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give an undertaking that he or his representative will vote against the draft data protection directive in the relevant forthcoming Council of Ministers' meeting unless it has been amended to reflect the criticisms made of it by the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth), in European Standing Committee B.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The draft directive in its original form was unacceptable to the United Kingdom. By the time of the Standing Committee debate on 7 December 1994, a number of improvements had been made, for example in relation to the use of data for research and statistical purposes and for health administration. However, a number of concerns remained. Intensive negotiations continued until political agreement was reached on the directive at the Foreign Affairs Council on 6 February. By then, significant progress had been made towards meeting UK concerns. In particular there is now more flexibility in applying the directive to existing records held in paper filing systems; a safeguard for the effective supervision of City financial institutions; and freedom to continue political canvassing. The UK indicated that it would be abstaining when the matter is put to a formal vote, probably later this month. The decision to abstain was conditional upon the improvements which have been secured.

Disclosure Requirements

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a duty on courts not to reveal the identity and addresses of people who allow the police to use their property for surveillance purposes.

Mr. Maclean: I am looking into this point as part of my consideration of the issues raised by the current disclosure requirements generally.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the application by Cleethorpes borough council for a closed circuit television installation under the CCTV challenge competition 1994–95.

Mr. Maclean: The bid from Cleethorpes borough council for funding for its proposed CCTV installation is at present under consideration, along with the other bids received. The winners will be announced in early March.

Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the amendments made to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Three amendments have been made:

1. The definition of protected animal in section 1(1) has been extended to include any invertebrate of the species Octopus vulgaris from the stage of its development when it becomes capable of independent feeding. The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act (Amendment) Order 1993: SI 1993/2103.

2. Any bird of the species Coturnix coturnix—quail—has been added to schedule 2—animals to be obtained only from designated breeding or supplying establishments. The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act (Amendment) Order 1993: SI 1993/2103.

3. Section 10(3) has been extended to exclude the use—except in exceptional circumstances— of species of animals listed in appendix I of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Fauna and Flora. The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act (Amendment) Regulations 1993: SI 1993/2102

Crime Statistics

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish details of recorded crimes for each year since 1992 in (a) supermarket car parks, (b) out of town shopping centres and (c) town centre shopping malls; and if he will indicate the percentage involving (i) assaults on women, (ii) assaults on men, (iii) car crime and (iv) other crimes.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Police National Computer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the conversion of the national collection of criminal records into digital form for entry on the police national computer; and what steps he is taking to ensure that technical staff who have access to the computer do not have criminal connections.

Mr. Maclean: The contract for the back record conversion of criminal records, for eventual entry on the police national computer, was awarded to PCL Group Ltd. on 5 July 1994. Work began in October and is expected to take 18 months. It is being carried out, under conditions of the strictest security, in three locations in the United Kingdom.

PCL Group operators do not have direct access to the police national computer but key portions of records on to magnetic tape from electronic images supplied by the national identification service at New Scotland Yard. The procedures for conversion make it impossible for workers to associate a subject's name with details of his or her convictions, since the different sections of each criminal record are separately streamed and only reassembled at New Scotland Yard on return of the magnetic tapes. After quality control has taken place, the converted data will be passed, again on tape, to Home Office civil servants at the Hendon Data Centre for entry on the police national computer.

All the workers keying in records have been subject to a criminal record check, as have all Home Office staff involved in this work.

Police Forces (Budgets)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the budget adjustment made by his Department in respect of each police force for 1995–96.

Mr. Maclean: The setting of budgets is a matter for police authorities. Grant allocations to police authorities for 1995–96 were announced in the reply given on 30 January to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence), Official Report, column 516.

Methcathinone

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to add methcathinone to the prohibited substances list.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Methcathinone is a synthetic stimulant. The World Health Organisation has recently recommended that it should be brought under the controls of the United Nations convention on psychotropic substances, 1971. The UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs will shortly be considering the recommendation.

The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, which has a duty to keep under review drug misuse in the United Kingdom, is to consider whether to recommend bringing methcathinone under the controls of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Mr. and Mrs. Walker, Toxteth

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Liverpool police force has agreed compensation to be paid out to Mr. and Mrs. Walker of Toxteth following a raid on their house by mistake; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This is a matter for the chief constable of Merseyside police. I am told, though, that a claim has been received and is being assessed.

Special Constabulary

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations govern members of the special constabulary; and who negotiates members of the special constabulary's conditions of service.

Mr. Maclean: The main regulations which apply to members of the special constabulary are as follows:

The Special Constables Regulations 1965
The Special Constables (Amendment) Regulations 1968
The Special Constables (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1992
The Special Constables (Amendment) Regulations 1992
The Special Constables (Pensions) Regulations 1971 (revoked by SI 1973/431, except in relation to pensions awarded before 1 April 1972)
The Special Constables (Pensions) Regulations 1973
The Special Constables (Pensions) Regulations 1980
The Special Constables (Injury Benefit) Regulations 1987

By virtue of section 34(1) of the Police Act 1964, the Secretary of State may make regulations as to the government, administration and conditions of service of special constables. As a matter of practice, the Department consults representatives of the police staff associations, the special constabulary, and other interested parties before laying any such regulations.

Police Officers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of police officers per 100,000 population each year since 1979 for (a) the Metropolitan police, (b) Hampshire, (c) Manchester and (d) Essex.

Mr. Maclean: Information on ratios of police officers to population levels are contained in the appendices to the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, copies of which are in the Library.

Life Prisoners

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile), on 16 January, Official Report, column 333, if he will list the nature of offence for which they were convicted and the date of their sentence in respect of each of the 15 individuals serving mandatory and discretionary life sentences who have been informed that previous Ministers set a whole life tariff in their case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All 15 prisoners were convicted of murder. The convictions were in May 1966, July 1976, November 1978, November 1983, September 1984, October 1986 (two), December 1986, July 1987, February 1988, November 1988, February 1990, July 1991, September 1991, and October 1991.

Police Officers (Severance Arrangements)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce voluntary and compulsory severance arrangements for police officers.

Mr. Howard: The Metropolitan police service is running a limited voluntary retirement scheme which will come to an end of 31 March 1995. This was introduced to assist the force to restructure its middle management. All other Home Departments' forces expect to be able to carry out any such restructuring without voluntary or compulsory severance arrangements. The Government do not therefore intend to introduce legislative provision for such arrangements.

Prison Escapes

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 810, for what reason information on escapes from Greater London prisons is not available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 14 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question, pursuant to his Answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 810, for what reason information on escapes from Greater London prisons is not available.

Information about escapes has only been recorded centrally since 20 June 1988. Before this date, all relevant information was held at establishments, or regional offices, for inclusion in the Annual Report on the work of the Prison Department.

The data for 1979 is contained in the Prison Department Annual Report for 1979. It details only escapes from specific establishments for male adult and young prisoners. It does not record the establishment from which borstal trainees or detention centre trainees escaped. The same Report details one escaper from Brixton prison and three escapers from Latchmere House remand centre within the Greater London area.

The Prison Department Annual Report for 1984–85 records three escapers from Ashford remand centre and one escaper from Latchmere House remand centre. It does not record the establishment from which young offenders or females escaped.

The Prison Department Annual Report for 1985–86 records four escapers from Ashford remand centre, five escapers from Brixton prison, four escapers from Pentonville prison and one escaper from Wormwood Scrubs prison. There are no details of the prisons from which the young offenders or females escaped.

During the year ending 31 March 1994 there were eleven escapers from establishments within the Greater London area, namely:

Six escapers from Downview prison

Three escapers from Feltham young offenders institution

One escaper from Highdown prison

One escaper from Pentonville prison

These figures do not include those prisoners who escaped from escort from Greater London prisons.

Tiger Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what tiger products were seized by the Metropolitan police in their raids on Chinese medicine shops in London on 7 February.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner that several hundred items were seized in raids on four premises in central London on 7 February. These included articles believed to be tiger bones, and medicinal powder and pill products believed to contain ingredients derived from tigers and other endangered species.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what tiger products were seized in raids on Chinese medicine shops on 7 February outside the metropolitan area.

Mr. Maclean: The Greater Manchester police and the West Midlands police seized hundreds of products in raids at eight premises on 7 February. These included articles believed to be tiger bone and products derived from tigers and other endangered species.

EDUCATION

Spending

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will give the total amount spent or to be spent (a) in cash terms and (b) in 1995 prices on education in (i) 1978–79, (ii) 1994–95 and (iii) 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table includes expenditure by central Government and English local authorities in 1978–79 and 1994–95. The 1994–95 figures are based on estimated outturn. Figures for local authority budgeted expenditure on education in 1995–96 are not yet available. Central Government's own expenditure for 1995–96 will total some £10,949 million. Figures include expenditure on mandatory student awards in Wales and for 1978–79 expenditure on universities in Great Britain, but otherwise are for England only.

	£ million
	1978–79	1994–95
Cash	7,459	28,262
Real terms[1]	21,801	28,262

[1] Cash figures adjusted to 1994–95 levels using November 1994 GDP deflator.

Budget Deficits

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information she has as to budget deficits in Wycombe West school, Buckinghamshire; Langham secondary school, Haringey; King David's school, Manchester; Southridge first school, North Tyneside; and Bramingham JMI school, Bedfordshire; and under what provisions of their respective local authorities' schemes for local management of schools such deficits have been authorised.

Mr. Robin Squire: At 31 March 1994, the budget deficits at the schools as recorded on the outturn statements produced by the respective local education authorities were as follows:

Wycombe West school	114,000
Langham secondary school	143,667
Kind David high school	344,344
Southridge first school	68,585
Bramingham JMI school	47,000

I shall write to the hon. Member with the other information which has been requested; a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

Education Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what formula is used to calculate education standard spending assessments per pupil.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is contained in the "Local Government Finance Report (England) 1995–96," a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The SSA system does not set out to provide the same sum of money per pupil, but to provide funding for a common standard of service across the country.

Class Sizes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will amend the parents charter on maximum pupil numbers per class.

Mr. Robin Squire: No.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the research carried out by her Department into the effect of class sizes on pupil progress and attainment levels.

Mr. Forth: As I said in reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Ms Church) on 24 January, Official Report, column 166, the Department has not undertaken such research itself, but monitors work generally in this field.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will state by school the classroom sizes in schools designated as seriously below standard in the report from Her Majesty's inspector of schools for 1993–94 on standards in schools.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Schools, Hampshire

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education by what sum the Government's contribution to the Hampshire local education authority has changed for the years 1994–95 and 1995–96; and what information he has concerning the cash balances held by schools in Hampshire.

Mr. Robin Squire: Allowing for the reform of inter-authority recoupment, Hampshire's education standard spending assessment for 1995–96 will rise by £2.3 million over the comparable 1994–95 figure.

For the financial year ending in March 1994, the outturn statement prepared by the county council for that year under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988 showed that total balances held by schools in Hampshire were £25.542 million.

Aggregated Schools Budget

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if she will list the proportion of the ASB retained by the local education authorities of the metropolitan cities for each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement;

(2) how much each metropolitan city retained on the non-schools section of their aggregated schools budget for 1995–96; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The aggregated schools budget represents, by definition, that part of a local education authority's general schools budget which is distributed to the schools themselves.

Information on the percentage of the general schools budget, and the potential schools budget; retained centrally by each local education authority for 1994–95 and previous years is contained in the answer which I gave on 17 October 1994 to the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) Official Report, columns 27–36. No corresponding information in relation to 1995–96 is yet available.

Surplus Places

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest figure for surplus places for each local education authority of the metropolitan cities; and what representations she has received from Sheffield local education authority on its proposed reduction.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on Friday 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 410–14. Sheffield is implementing approved reorganisation proposals which have reduced the primary figure and will reduce the secondary figure by July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school places surplus to requirements currently exist in (i) Ealing, (ii) other London boroughs and (iii) the remaining local education authorities of the country; what costs are involved in each case; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on Friday 9 December 1994, Official Report, columns 410–14. The average premises-related cost of maintaining a surplus place is estimated to be £182 a year for a primary school and £303 a year for a secondary school at 1995–96 prices. The actual cost and scope for realising savings from removal of surplus places in practice will depend on local circumstances.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will arrange an early meeting with local education authorities.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend meets local authority associations and officials from local education authorities in the normal course of business.

Teachers

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will estimate the total loss of jobs among teachers and school support staffs which is currently expected in 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the arrangements for local management, decisions about school staffing levels are made by school governors on the basis of a variety of local factors. No central estimate is made.

School Closures

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many proposals for school closure and reorganisation and from which local education authority have been awaiting a decision from her for (a) up to three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six to nine months, (d) nine to 12 months and (e) more than 12 months.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table lists proposals under consideration by the Department as at 10 February 1995 for the closure, alteration or establishment of county and voluntary schools and the length of time the proposals have been under consideration. Following the publication of proposals, there is a statutory two-month period during which objections may be submitted. Where objections are submitted to the LEA there is a further one-month period within which the objections must be forwarded to the Secretary of State.

St. Philip's College, Birmingham

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she will announce her response to the recommendations of the Further Education Funding Council for England concerning St. Philip's Roman Catholic sixth form college, Birmingham; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Following the publication of the FEFC's report on the college and its recommendations last November, I have received a number of representations from the trustees, from present and former governors and others connected with the college. After considering these most carefully, I am satisfied that there was mismanagement of the college.

The recommendation from the Further Education Funding Council was that I should remove and replace all the members of the governing body in order, the Council advised, to provide a fresh start and a complete break from the past. However, the hon. Member will be aware that it is possible that the college will close at the end of the 1995–96 academic year. This is a matter in which the relevant legislation gives me no say. In the current circumstances, I have decided that it would not be expedient for me to replace the remaining governors. A number of governors have already resigned. Those who remain have all been in post for a very short time and are now, I believe, doing their best to ensure good governance of the college and, in particular, to secure that the education of the students remains the first priority.

The funding council also made recommendations concerning amending the instrument of government and the provision of a statutory procedure to govern the closure of designated colleges in the further education sector. We shall be considering these recommendations in consultation with those concerned with St. Philip's and other designated colleges.

I am very grateful to the funding council for investigating the circumstances at the college and for the action it is taking to disseminate the lessons to be learnt. A copy of the official response to the funding council is being placed in the Library. It is clear that these difficulties are not typical of the further education sector as a whole. It is using its new freedoms responsibly, and has already made impressive progress. I hope that I shall not be required to exercise my powers again, but I shall not hesitate to do so if I consider it warranted.

Derby Tertiary College

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she will announce her response to the recommendations of the Further Education Funding Council for England concerning Derby tertiary college, Wilmorton; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Following the publication of the FEFC's report on the college and its recommendations last November, I have received a number of representations from present and former governors and others connected with the college. After considering these most carefully, I am satisfied that mismanagement took place for which the governing body bears a collective responsibility.

I intend therefore to exercise my power under section 57 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 to remove the remaining members of the governing body. I am excluding two governors from this action, whom I judge were not responsible for the mismanagement that took place. I intend to appoint seven new governors both as replacements and in order to restore a quorum to the governing body. I hope that all those connected with the college can now put these events behind them and work together in the interests of its students.

I am very grateful to the Further Education Funding Council for investigating the circumstances at the college and for the action it is taking to disseminate the lessons to be learnt from this episode. A copy of the official response to the funding council is being placed in the Library. It is clear that these difficulties are not typical of the further education sector as a whole. It is using its new freedoms responsibly and has already made impressive progress. I hope that I shall not be required to exercise my powers again, but I shall not hesitate to do so if it warranted.

Office for Standards in Education

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) full-time employees and (b) part-time employees were in Ofsted for each of the years since it commenced operation.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many full-time medical advisers are employed by the Benefits Agency at Arden house, Newcastle;

(2) how many cases have been handled by Dr. Roger Bowmer and Dr. Sheila Hunter at Arden house, Newcastle medical centre for (a) all categories and (b) PD4 cases;

(3) what is the civil service salary grade payable to full-time medical advisers employed by the Benefits Agency medical section.

Mr. Hague: The administration of the Benefits Agency medical services is a matter for Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Bill Etherington, dated 13 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the number of Medical Advisers employed by the Benefits Agency at Arden House, Newcastle; the Civil Service salary grade payable to full time Medical Advisers employed by the Benefits Agency Services (BAMS); the number of cases handled by Dr. Roger Bowmer and Dr. Sheila Hunter for all categories and for PD D4.

In the BAMS at Arden House, Newcastle there are ten full-time Medical Advisers.

The salary scale payable to full time Medical Advisers in BAMS in the North East is between £28,213 (minimum) and £41,039 (maximum).

Information is not available relating specifically to the number of PD D4 cases handled by Dr. Bowmer and Dr. Hunter. However I have provided information relating to all categories at Annex A. Records relating to the number of cases handled are collated over differing periods.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many reduced earnings allowance awards for PD4 were made in each year since 1989 (a) nationally, (b) at Dunn house, (c) at Phoenix house and (d) at South Shields;

(2) what is the average time taken to process a PD4 claim (a) at the disability benefit centre, Arden house and (b) nationally;

(3) what was the total number of reduced earnings allowance awards in each year since 1989 (a) nationally, (b) at Dunn house, Sunderland, (c) at Phoenix house, Sunderland, (d) in South Shields and (e) in Houghton-le-Spring.

Mr. Hague: The administration of reduced earnings allowance is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Bill Etherington, dated 13 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about awards of reduced earnings allowance since 1989 both nationally and at various Benefits Agency offices.

Information is not available in respect of new awards of reduced earnings allowance from 1989; the collection of such data did not begin until October 1991. In addition, information is not available separately for Dunn House and Pheonix House in Sunderland and for South Shields and Houghton-le-Spring. Those offices comprise the Benefits Agency's Wearside District and data is collated at District level. The information that is available is attached at Annex A.

Information in respect of the number of reduced earnings allowance awards for PD4 is also collated at District level and the collection of such data did not commence until June 1992. I have provided at Annex B the information that is available relating to Wearside District and national figures.

Information is not available in respect of the average time taken to process a PD4 claim at the Newcastle Disability Benefits Centre (DBC). The Benefits Agency Medical Services do not hold information separately for PD D4 or other prescribed diseases. However statistics are held for clearance times of all Industrial Injury Disablement Benefit claims which includes prescribed diseases. The average national clearance time for the year ending 31 January 1995 was 32.6 days. The average clearance time in Newcastle DBC was 29.6 days.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many sufferers from asbestos-related diseases have had to pay back benefits to the compensation recovery unit during the current financial year; and what were the sums of money that were clawed back;

(2) what is the largest sum of money that has ever been clawed back by the compensation recovery unit; and what was the type of sickness, accident or illness involved in this case;

(3) what is the distribution by size of the amounts of money clawed back by the compensation recovery unit.

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 13 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the number of sufferers from asbestos related diseases who have had to pay back benefits to the Compensation Recovery Unit (CRU); the largest sum of money recovered by the CRU and the distribution by size of the amounts recovered.

The CRU's computer system records cases involving victims of asbestosis rather then asbestos related diseases. In the period 1 April 1994 to 31 January 1995 there were 121 recoveries made in relation to asbestosis totalling £893,937.82. The individual amounts are shown on the attached schedule at Annex A.

The full range of information you requested in respect of a breakdown or recoveries by size is not available. This is because data prior to April 1994 is no longer held on the computer system and to obtain such information n would be at a disproportionate cost. However, the information that is available from 1 April 1994 to 31 December 1994, has been provided at Annex B.

The largest amount recovered to date is £84,630.01. This was from an award for a back/spinal injury.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make an estimate of how many individuals (a) receive means-tested benefits, (b) receive means-tested benefits and pay income tax, (c) receive means-tested benefits and pay national insurance contributions; how many individuals would cease to be eligible for means-tested benefits if they no longer paid income tax or national insurance contributions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: It is estimated that 8.53 million people were in receipt of an income-related benefit at May 1993, the latest date for which figures are available for all benefits.

An adjustment has been made to take account of the fact that individuals may be in receipt of more than one income-related benefit at the same time. Such adjustment does, however, not produce reliable estimates of the number who also pay tax and national insurance contributions or whose eligibility would cease if no tax or national insurance contributions were paid. The table therefore provides this information separately for each income-related benefit.

Invalidity Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many male claimants of invalidity benefit have had working wives in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information is in the table.

National Insurance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women have opted for the reduced national insurance liability in each year since 1965.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Reliable figures prior to 1978 are not available. The married woman's option was abolished from April 1977 but women who had the right to pay reduced-rate contributions at this time were allowed to continue to do so provided that certain conditions were satisfied. The numbers of women who paid reduced national insurance contributions in each year since 1978 are as follows:

Year	Number (thousands)
1978–79	1,917
1979–80	1,875

Fraud

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money his Department estimates was lost through social security fraud in each year from 1990 to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The following table details the estimated value of fraud losses prevented by Benefits Agency investigators in the four financial years since 1990–91:

Year	Savings (£million)
1990–91	341
1991–92	427
1992–93	558
1993–94	654

Although the full extent of social security fraud is not known, we are examining ways of producing a reliable estimate of the sum which might be involved.

Benefits

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost of benefits paid in each year since 1990–91 to the unemployed in (a) all benefits, (b) unemployment benefit (c) income support, (d) housing benefit and (e) council tax and other benefits; what are the average costs of benefits for persons unemployed; and what is the corresponding information for people unemployed for more than (i) one year and (ii) two years.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the tables.

Information relating to the proportioning of housing benefit, council tax benefit and community charge benefit according to the length of time that people are unemployed is not kept.

Unemployment

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, how many people are claiming income support who are actively seeking work; and if such persons are included in the official unemployment figures.

Mr. Roger Evans: As at 11 August 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 1.89 million people claiming income support who were both available for and actively seeking work. They were included in the claimant unemployment count.

Invalidity Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole have appealed to a social security appeal tribunal concerning a decision that they are fit for work, or work within limits; what percentage of these people were successful; and if he will give the figures for those who were represented and those who were not with the corresponding success rates.

Mr. Hague: Figures are available only on appeals against all decisions on invalidity benefit and for Scotland as a whole. Information on the last available full year is as follows.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what action he is taking in respect of the payment of housing benefit to prisoners; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the provision of housing benefit to the tenant of Mr. and Mrs. Shelston of 123 Southland Park road, in the light of previous representations from the hon. Member for South Hams.

Mr. Roger Evans: We are consulting the Social Security Advisory Committee and local authority associations about proposals for restricting the payment of housing benefit to prisoners to 13 weeks, and their reports are expected shortly. Subject to their views and the approval of Parliament, we intend to bring the amended regulations into effect from 1 April 1995.

Housing benefit is available in the normal way to the tenant of Mr. and Mrs. Shelston although, for reasons of confidentiality, no details can be provided.

Incapacity Allowance

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are expected to be in receipt of incapacity allowance for the years ending April 1996, 1997 and 1998; and how many of those will be (a) single, (b) claimants with partners and (c) claimants with dependant children.

Mr. Hague [holding answer Friday 27 January 1995]: The information is not available in the format requested. The available information is in the table.

Estimated number of claimants in receipt of incapacity benefit thousand

	1996	1997	1998
Total	1,800	1,685	1,635
Total with adult dependency increase	410	345	300
Total with child dependency increase	120	115	115

Notes:

1. Estimates are provisional and as such will be subject to revision at a later stage.
2. Figures rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Figures take account of the estimated effect of the new medical test.

Pensions Bill

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, on the basis of information in Cm. 2714 on the Pensions Bill, he will estimate the percentage of women retiring in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2010–11, (c) 2020–21, (d) 2030–31 and (e) 2040–41 who will retire with entitlement to a full basic pension (i) under the existing scheme and (ii) after proposed changes in the Pensions Bill.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Government Actuary advises that there is little difference between proportions of women who will receive a full basic pension under the current scheme and with the new state pension age. By 2025, almost all women, on reaching age 65, will retire with a basic pension in their own right: the average entitlement being over 90 per cent. Approximate, rounded, percentages of those who will retire with a full basic pension, based on estimates of the projected average level of pension, are contained in the table.

Year	Percentage of women retiring in year with full basic pension percentage
2000–01	25
2010–11	50
2020–21	65
2030–31	65
2040–41	65

WALES

Dental Services, Gwynedd

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how may dental practices in Gwynedd were represented at the meetings between Welsh Office officials and dentists in Gwynedd; how many of these indicated that they would be prepared to recommence taking patients on the NHS if the Government were to make policy changes; and what were the policy changes requested.

Mr. Richards: The information is not available in the form requested.

Following the publication of the Green Paper "Improving NHS Dentistry", Welsh Office officials held a series of consultation meetings in each of the eight counties in Wales. Some 30 dentists attended the meeting in Gwynedd.

The purpose of the meeting was to seek dentist views' on the contents of the Green Paper. The intention of individual dentists was not addressed.

Pre-school Playgroup Association

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amounts of cash he has given to the Pre-school Playgroup Association Wales for each of the last five years.

Mr. Richards: Wales PPA has received funding from the "Support for Child and Family Services" grant scheme and the details are as follows:

	1990–91 £	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £
Core costs	143,657	143,657	158,023	161,970	164,400
Equipment	—	4,032.50	—	—	—
Children Act training	—	5,700	6,950	—	—
Powys development officer	—	4,778	3,756	3,850	2,260
Review	—	—	13,400	—	—
Total	143,657	158,167.50	182,129	165,820	166,660

In addition to the above, a grant of £92,269 was awarded in respect of a joint Wales PPA/MYM venture, for the development of a special needs training pack.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes further to help Pre-school Playgroup Association Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Along with other voluntary organisation and bodies, Wales PPA has applied to the Welsh Office for funding in 1995–96 under the "Support for Child and Family Services" grant scheme. The applications are currently under consideration and an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Sheep Diseases

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of contagious agalactia have occurred in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No cases of contagious agalactia have occurred in Wales since 1 January 1993. This disease became notifiable only on that date and official records prior to that were not collected.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of sheep pox have been reported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No cases of sheep pox have occurred in Wales since 1985.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times he has attended the Council of Ministers meetings in Brussels since he took office; what were the dates of the visits; and what were the subjects discussed.

Mr. Redwood: I have not yet attended a meeting of the Council of the European Community as Secretary of State for Wales. I was a regular attender as a UK Minister at the Department of Trade and Industry.

Flooding

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have found themselves with no recourse to compensation following serious flooding incidents in Wales over the past 18 months; and what evaluation there has been of the permissive drainage powers of district and borough councils.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on numbers of people who have found themselves with no recourse to compensation is not held by the Welsh Office. The permissive drainage powers of district councils were reviewed when the National Rivers Authority was created by the Water Act 1989 and no reason was found to change existing arrangements.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average wage of workers in Wales in each year since 1989.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees in Wales from 1989 to 1994 is set out in table X5 of part A of the "New Earnings Survey", published annually by the Employment Department.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations his Department has made to the European Commission on the subject of the export of live animals from Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food conducts negotiations and discussions on behalf of the United Kingdom Agriculture Departments on the issue of live animals exports, and the Welsh Office is in regular contact with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about this subject. The United Kingdom continues to press the EC to resolve the issue quickly, and has asked the French presidency to place welfare discussions amongst its priorities. The question of welfare standards during transport was raised by the UK at the Agriculture Council on 23 January 1995 and the Commission and the presidency have agreed to search for an early solution to the matter.

Fishermen

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time fishermen there were in Wales in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The latest available information is published in table 2.6 of "UK Sea Fisheries Statistics 1993", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. No separate information is available on the number of full-time fishermen in Wales.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what accumulated balances are currently held by each of the grant-maintained schools in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The accumulate balances, shown in the latest audited accounts for each grant maintained school, are as follows:

Bryn Elian, Clwyd	77,480
Derwen, Clwyd	30,054
Eirias, Clwyd	214,357
Emrys ap Iwan, Clwyd	111,062
Maelor, Clwyd	34,670
Pen-y-Bryn, Clwyd	1,546
Brynmawr, Gwent	6,918
Cwmcarn, Gwent	18,510
Our Lady and St. Michaels, Gwent	272
St. Albans, Gwent	35,095
Caergeiliog, Gwynedd	36,729
Llanerfyl, Powys	30,213
St. Cyres, South Glamorgan	100,993
Stanwell, South Glamorgan	118,129
Bishop Vaughan West Glamorgan	69,542

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the termination payments made to chief executives and general and senior managers in each NHS trust since its inception, indicating the size and number of individual payments.

Mr. Richards [holding answer 13 February 1995]: This information is not available for payments made before 1 April 1994. NHS trusts have notified the Department of the following termination payments to chief executives and general and senior managers this financial year.

	Number of payments	Amount £
Carmarthen and District NHS Trust	2	37,883
Glan Clwyd NHS Trust	1	20,718
Clwydian Community Care	1	45,000

Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on matters relating to education in the last four months.

Mr. Richards [holding answer 13 February 1995]: I have received many representations on a wide range of education matters over the last four months.

DEFENCE

Defence Cost Study

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions he has taken regarding defence cost study number 10.

Mr. Soames: Proposals recommending the rationalisation of naval stores depots were announced on 14 July 1994 and set out in detail in a consultative document promulgated on 19 August 1994. Representations were made by trade unions, a number of local authorities and Members of Parliament. The most detailed and careful consideration was given to all of the representations received on these proposals. Having reviewed all of this work, I am satisfied that the basis for the rationalisation of naval stores depots in order to provide an improved and more cost-effective system of stock distribution to the Royal Navy is sound.

I have therefore decided to proceed with the rationalisation under which depots at Eaglescliffe, Wrangaton and Exeter will close by April 1997, part of the latter site will be retained at least in the short term to support naval engineering tasks, pending further study. Naval stores depots at Devonport and Rosyth will be reduced, in the same time frame, although new waterfront storage facilities at the former will be provided to improve local support arrangements for the vessels base ported there. Naval stores facilities at Portsmouth will be enhanced by April 1997 to provide a central storage and distribution facility for a major part of the naval stores inventory. Facilities at Faslane will also be improved to meet the requirements of logistic support to the Fleet in Scotland.

These measures will result in significant savings of some £174 million over 10 years and some £24 million a year thereafter. Regrettably, there will also be significant reductions in civilian posts at the depots affected; approximately 1,170 posts will no longer be required. It is anticipated that many of these will need to involve redundancy. However, my Department will make every effort to keep redundancies to a minimum and will ensure that anyone made redundant will be offered a comprehensive resettlement package and assistance with training. We will of course continue to consult staff and the trades unions about the detailed implementation of this programme. In addition, by liaising with other Government Departments, local authorities and training and enterprise councils, my Department will do everything it can to assist in finding alternative employment.

Colombian Military Students

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will stop the training of Colombian military students until political killings in Colombia have ceased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: British military personnel have been providing training to the Colombian authorities to help counter the illicit production and trafficking of drugs since 1989. Although details of the assistance provided are confidential between the two Governments, I can assure the hon. Member that the training is dedicated to the fight against drugs.

Submarines (Fishing Vessels)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what signals are communicated to a Royal Navy submarine or a submarine belonging to a NATO power when that vessel is perceived to be posing a danger to fishing vessels.

Mr. Soames: The conduct of dived Royal Navy submarines, and of dived foreign submarines in United Kingdom waters, is governed by the code of practice, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Compliance with the code, together with the "SUBFACTS" system of providing information about dived submarine movements, and a number of other safety measures agreed after extensive consultation with the fishing industry, ensures that dived submarines and fishing vessels are able to co-exist safely.

In addition, we have recently agreed with the fishing industry that, when a submarine is exercising with a number of warships, one of the surface vessels participating in the exercise would, in addition to its exercise role, be designated the fishing vessel safety vessel. This vessel would have responsibility for confirming the position of any fishing vessel in the vicinity.

Eurofighter 2000

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what topics were discussed at the meeting on 6 February in Munich of representatives of the nations participating in the Eurofighter 2000 project.

Mr. Freeman: As part of our regular programme of contacts with our Eurofighter 2000 partners, I met my counterparts from the other nations in Munich on 6 February to review progress in the reorientation of the project as agreed by the four Defence Ministers in December 1992, and to discuss a number of matters relating to planning for future phases.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the date for the commencement of the production phase of the Eurofighter 2000; and if he will make a statement on the future of the project.

Mr. Freeman: On current plans, we expect to reach decisions on entering the production phase of the project by the end of this year.

We remain committed to the development of the Eurofighter 2000 which will provide the cornerstone of the RAF's future air combat capability.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary Refits

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is this policy concerning the placing of contracts for Royal Fleet Auxiliary refits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: RFA refits are part of the unallocated ship refit programme, contracts for which are placed following competition. I am pleased to confirm our intention that RFA ships remain in the unallocated programme.

HMS Andromeda

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the value for money achieved by the sale of HMS Andromeda.

Mr. Freeman: HMS Andromeda has not yet been sold. Once the decision has been taken to dispose of a ship, the sale price we would aim to achieve would not be below the value of recoverable and re-usable on-board stores and equipment plus the scrap value of the remainder of the ship.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the efficiency with which HMS Andromeda was refitted.

Mr. Freeman: The refit was carried out under the normal price negotiation, contract oversight and post-costing mechanisms for commercial refitting. These were reviewed following completion of the refit and were found to be well within accepted limits for commercial refitting.

Air House, Rheindahlen

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on maintenance, furniture, fittings and refurbishment at the official service residence, Air house, at Rheindahlen, Germany, for each year since 1985; which officers lived in the residence from 1985; who authorised the expenditure; and when the property was sold and for how much.

Mr. Soames: Air house, Rheindahlen was the property of the Federal German Government and was returned to them on 30 June 1993. The occupants since 1985 were as follows:

Occupants	Year
Air Marshal Sir David Parry-Evans	1985–87
Air Marshal Sir Anthony Skingsley	1987–89
Air Marshal Roger Palin	1989–91
Air Marshal Sir Andrew Wilson	1991–93

Details of expenditure on the residence from 1991 are contained in annex C to my Department's paper on official services residences which is in the Library of the House.

Figures for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Since the reorganisation of the MOD budgetary system in 1991, ultimate responsibility for expenditure within each top level budget has rested with the relevant budget holder, who in this case was the Air Officer Commanding in Chief Germany. A significant portion of the expenditure shown reflected decisions on security made earlier.

Footpaths

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures were used to effect the stopping up of a public footpath on each occasion in the last 10 years, to date, where the power under section 16 of the Defence Act 1842 was exercised to stop up a public footpath.

Mr. Soames [holding answer Monday 6 February 1995]: During the last 10 years, the power conferred under section 16 of the Defence Act 1842 has been exercised to stop up a public footpath on two occasions. As far as can be ascertained from the available records, the procedures used were as follows:

Footpath No. 43 (Darley) at Menwith Hill station, North Yorkshire. This footpath had apparently been out of general use from 1955 when the station was established; indeed, the station was unaware of its existence, and a building has been constructed across the route, which in any case ran through the secure area of the base. In the early 1980s the Ramblers Association became interested in re-establishing the right of way, and in view of the situation it was thought appropriate to re-provide the footpath across the north-west corner of the site, a short distance from the original route, but outside the secure fencing. The agreement of the local highway authority was obtained that the new route was reasonable.

Footpath No. 31 at HMS Cambridge, Wembury, Devon. The stopping up of this footpath took place at a time when there was increased concern about the security risk to military establishments from the terrorist threat. The original line of the footpath ran through the establishment's administrative and accommodation area, around which a security fence had been established and the continuing threat to security from the footpath was deemed to be unacceptable. As at Menwith Hill, the new route was in fact slightly shorter than the original. Informal discussions were held with Devon county council footpath officers prior to the closure action being taken.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the last 10 years, to date, the power conferred under section 16 of the Defence Act 1842 to stop up public or private footpaths or bridle roads has been exercised; on each such occasion if he expressly authorised the stopping order to be made; on each such occasion who signed the stopping up order; what was the exact geographical location of the footpath or bridle road in question; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer Monday 6 February 1995]: During the last 10 years, the power conferred under section 16 of the Defence Act 1842 to stop up public or private footpaths or bridle roads has been exercised on five occasions. Although, due to the passage of time, file records are now incomplete, ministerial approval is normally sought on each occasion and the orders are signed by the head of what is now the Defence

Lands Service. The information specific to each case is as follows:

At RAF Molesworth, Cambridgeshire, on 5 February 1985. The route in question was part of bridleway number 28 in the parish of Brington and Molesworth, between GR50702 27665 and GR50680 27779.

At Menwith Hill station, North Yorkshire, on 1 October 1985. The route in question was part of footpath number 43 in the parish of Darley, between GR42005 and 45776 and GR41996 45719.

At RAF Molesworth, Cambridgeshire, on 18 November 1985. The route in question was part of bridleway number 27 in the parish of Brington and Molesworth, between GR50858 27694 and GR50868 27710.

At RAF Upper Heyford, Oxfordshire, on 30 July 1990. The route in question was part of the Portway (bridleway number 1) in the parish of Upper Heyford, between GR45050 22647 and GR45051 22669.

At HMS Cambridge, Wembury, Devon, on 3 December 1991. The route in question was part of footpath number 31 in the parish of Wembury, between GR24987 04873 and GR25022 04882.

Consultants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 1166, where details of contracts awarded by his Department's central contracts branch are held; and what consideration he has given to collecting these details centrally.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer Tuesday 10 January 1995]: Financial and management responsibility for all goods and services purchased by my Department, including consultancy work, rests with individual budget holders. Large and valuable contracts are, however, placed by the appropriate central contracts branch in order to ensure an additional degree of oversight in entering into such important commitments. Although records are kept, for a time, of the value of, and parties to, such contracts, there is no requirement for the relevant contracts branch including the central contracts branch to maintain a full description of the purpose for which each contract was let; that remains the responsibility of the budgetary area concerned. There is no need for contracts branches to keep detailed information after the work is finished; and there are no Defence management reasons for collecting or maintaining details centrally. Finally, consultancy, in whatever form, routinely constitutes but one element in larger contracts and is often not separately identified or costed in such records as are held.

EMPLOYMENT

National Vocational Qualifications

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of young people who complete a youth training course obtain NVQs at (a) level 2 and (b) level 3.

Mr. Paice: Of those who completed their youth training between April and August 1993, 31 per cent. gained an NVQ or equivalent at level 2 and 13 per cent. at level 3.

Careers Provision

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the difference in bids to provide careers provision in Stockport between the consortium including Stockport metropolitan borough council and the bid by Nord Anglia plc; and what factors led to the awarding of the contract to Nord Anglia plc.

Mr. Paice: Bids were assessed against the criteria published in the careers service prospectus. These included: effective quality assurance arrangements; financial viability and value for money for the taxpayer. In each case the preferred bidder has more closely met the criteria than competing bids. As yet, contracts have not been signed in any area. Negotiations with preferred bidders continue.

Training

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of those leaving adult training schemes who progress to (a) full-time work, (b) part-time work, (c) self-employment, (d) further education or training and (e) unemployment in each training and council area in England and Wales for the past four years and for (i) those unemployed for six to 12 months, (ii) those unemployed for 12 to 24 months, and (iii) those unemployed for more than 24 months.

Mr. Paice: As this information is contained in a large number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much the running of the training for work programme cost in the financial year 1993–94; and what is the projected cost for the scheme for 1994–95.

Mr. Paice: In 1993–94, £760.2 million was spent on training for work in England. The estimated expenditure for 1994–95 is £693.3 million. These figures exclude administration and running costs.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people who took part in schemes run under the auspices of employment training and employment action went on to further education as a result of their training scheme in the years 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Mr. Paice: Of those leaving employment training in Great Britain in 1991–92, 3 per cent. went into full-time education/training courses. For 1992–93 leavers, the figure was 4 per cent.

The only full year for which data are available for employment action is 1992–93. Of those leaving EA in Great Britain in that year, 2 per cent. went into full-time education/training courses.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have taken part in training for work programmes since the scheme started in April 1993.

Mr. Paice: In the period April 1993 to October 1994, there were 515,000 starts on training for work in Great Britain.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those people who have taken part in training for work programmes since April 1993 have proceeded on to further education as a result of their training.

Mr. Paice: Of those leaving training for work in Great Britain in 1993–94, 4 per cent. went into full-time education/training courses.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people who took part in schemes run under the auspices of employment training and employment action (a) successfully completed their programme and (b) attained a recognised qualification in the years 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Mr. Paice: Of those leaving employment training in Great Britain in 1991–92, 55 per cent. had completed their agreed course of training and 35 per cent. had gained a qualification or credit towards one. Of those leaving in 1992–93, 59 per cent. had completed their agreed course of training and 38 per cent. had gained a qualification or credit towards one.

No figures are available on completion and qualification rates from employment action.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those people who have taken part in training for work programmes since April 1993 have successfully managed, on completion of their course, to get full or part-time employment as a result of their training.

Mr. Paice: Of those completing Training for Work in England and Wales in 1993–94, 38 per cent. went into full or part-time employment or self-employment.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much the running of the combined employment training and employment action cost his Department in the years 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Mr. Paice: Total expenditure for employment training and employment action is given in the following table:

	ET	EA	Total £ million
1991–92	737.4	16.3	753.7
1992–93	629.5	137.3	766.8

Notes:
1. ET figures for 1991–92 are for England and Wales. EA figures for 1991–92 are for England, Scotland and Wales.
2. ET figures for 1992–93 are for England only. EA figures for 1992–93 are for England and Scotland.
3. Excludes administration and running costs.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those people who have taken part in training for work programmes since April 1993 have (a) completed their course and (b) successfully attained the goals set out in their individual participation plans.

Mr. Paice: Of those leaving training for work in England and Wales in 1993–94, 60 per cent. completed their agreed course of training. In the same year, 51 per cent. of leavers fulfilled their individual participation plans.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people took part in schemes run under the auspices of employment training and employment action during the years 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Mr. Paice: In 1991–92, there were 293,000 starts on employment training in Great Britain. In 1992–93, the figure was 291,000. Employment action began in October 1991; in the remaining part of 1991–92, there were 22,000 starts in Great Britain. In 1992–93, there were 67,000 starts on EA.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those people who have taken part in training for work programmes since April 1993 have proceeded on to further training as a result of their course.

Mr. Paice: Of those leaving training for work in Great Britain in 1993–94, 3 per cent. went into another Government training programme.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people who took part in schemes run under the auspices of employment training and employment action went on to part or full-time employment as a result of their training scheme in the years 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Mr. Paice: Of those leaving employment training in Great Britain 1991–92, 31 per cent. went into full or part-time employment or self-employment. For 1992–93 leavers, the figure was 35 per cent.

The only full year for which data are available for employment action is 1992–93. Of those leaving EA in Great Britain in that year 17 per cent. went into full or part-time employment or self-employment.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are awaiting a YT place; and what is the figure as defined in the careers service management returns supplement.

Mr. Paice: On 31 January 1995, in England, 35 young people covered by the youth training guarantee had been waiting for the offer of a YT place for eight weeks or longer as provided in the monthly returns from careers services.

Benefits Appeals

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking in response to the chief adjudication officer's report on the number of (a) decisions in 1993–94 which were unsatisfactory and (b) decisions regarding appeals against benefit disqualification in the past year which did not follow the prescribed procedures.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to the Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 14 February 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the action being taken in response to the Chief Adjudication Officers's (CAO) Annual Report on Adjudication Standards for 1993–94.

The fact that a monitoring comment has been raised by the CAO's adjudication monitors does not necessarily mean that the adjudication decision is incorrect, but rather that the adjudication process was not correctly followed in one or more respects. Similarly, where a comment is raised on a written appeal submission, it is an indication that some aspect of the information included in it was either deficient or incomplete. The type of shortcomings identified by the CAO are unlikely to affect the outcome of appeals.

The CAO recognises that some of the deficiencies in the adjudication process identified by his monitoring are more significant than others. One of the principal concerns must be whether the claimant received the correct amount of benefit but, until the current operational year, the monitoring procedures did not assess this factor. When the CAO's monitoring for the current year (1994–95) is completed this information will be available for the first time and will enable him to focus his findings more closely on our service to claimants in the quality of decision making, as well as on deficiencies in aspects of the adjudication process.

I responded positively to the findings and recommendations made by the CAO in his 1992–93 report, which was published on 24 November 1993. My people introduced a package of measures aimed at improving the overall quality of our adjudication function.

This package includes a statistically valid system of quality monitoring; a review of all forms and procedures; and the creation of a permanent Quality Working Group. In his 1993–94 report, the CAO confirms that he expects these measures to lead to improved standards, and that their effect will be reflected in future reports by the CAO.

Two out of six recommendations in the CAO's 1993–94 report focused on the quality of adjudication within the Employment Service. They related to review and overpayment decisions and the standard of written appeal submissions respectively. These recommendations are currently being addressed by our Quality Working Group.

I hope this is helpful.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the annual expenditure per capita of the Equal Opportunities Commission in Great Britain in each of the last three years.

Miss Widdecombe: The Equal Opportunities Commission's grant in aid for the last three years has been £5.949 million, 1994–95; £5.794 million, 1993–94; and £5.282 million, 1992–93. This works out at approximately 10p per person in the population.

Youth Training Guarantees

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in the London boroughs of Lewisham, Lambeth, Greenwich and Southwark he expects to be in receipt of youth training guarantees on 1 April.

Mr. Paice: I am unable to estimate the number of young people who will be on youth training in these boroughs on 1 April. The current figure at accounting period 10—5 December 1994 to 1 January 1995—shows that 2,643 young people were on YT in the four South Thames training and enterprise council boroughs.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training guarantees were made in 1994 to young people in the area covered by South Thames training and enterprise council; how many youth training guarantees had been met by South Thames TEC as at 21 December 1994; and how many youth training guarantees he expects will have been met by 31 March 1995 in the area covered by South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: Some 2,979 young people covered by the youth training guarantee started on a YT scheme in the South Thames training and enterprise council area between April 1994 and 1 January 1995. As at 31 December 1994, when the careers service returns were made for December, there were no young people for whom the YT guarantee had not been met. I am unable to estimate the position for 31 March 1995.

Training and Enterprise Councils, London

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what contingency plans he is making to deliver training to the London boroughs of Lewisham, Lambeth, Southwark and Greenwich if SOLOTEC and CENTEC are unable to provide sufficient contracts to meet the needs of the unemployed.

Mr. Paice: In putting forward the proposals for the four boroughs in the South Thames training and enterprise council area, CENTEC and SOLOTEC will have to satisfy me that they can provide adequately for the demand and range of training provision required. If they are unable to do so, the Department will put in place other measures to ensure that adequate training provision is maintained in the area.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if information relating to contracts and performance by individual training providers contracted to South Thames TEC will be made available to SOLOTEC or CENTEC if the same training providers apply to either TEC for a contract from 1 April onwards.

Mr. Paice: Information will be made available provided all parties involved agree.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many contracts for training for work and youth training he expects to be issued by SOLOTEC and CENTEC at 1 April to training providers formerly contracted to South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: I am unable to estimate the number of contracts likely to be issued. This is a matter for SOLOTEC and CENTEC which are best placed to decide who they should contract with.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many contracts were issued by South Thames TEC in the financial year 1994–95 to provide training for people with special needs.

Mr. Paice: A total of 81 contracts under youth training and training for work were issued by South Thames training and enterprise council in 1994–95. Nine of the YT contracts and three of the TfW contracts are exclusively for people with special training needs. However, all the 81 contracts encourage training providers to recruit trainees with special needs by paying them premium rates to do so.

SCOTLAND

Medical Negligence

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many cases of medical negligence were settled, and what was the total cost of damages awarded together with legal costs, in each year since 1990–91, by district;

(2) how many cases of medical negligence were settled, and what was the total cost of damages awarded together with legal costs, in each year since 1990–91, by region.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland the regional and district functions of the NHS are administered by health boards. Given the small number of cases in certain health boards, it is not appropriate on the ground of confidentiality to publish the information in the form requested. The total amount of damages awarded, including legal costs, for all health boards and NHS trusts in Scotland for the years 1990–91 to 1993–94 is given.

Total amount of compensation (including legal costs)

Year	£
1990–91	949,603
1991–92	998,367
1992–93	1,091,489
1993–94	946,038

Agricultural Arbitration

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 575, what plans he has to reassess the costs associated with agricultural arbitration cases; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The rate of remuneration for agricultural arbiters appointed by the Secretary of State is normally reviewed annually. The current hourly rate was set in August 1989 and stands at £42. There are no plans at present to adjust the rate.

Other costs are a matter for the arbiter and the parties concerned in the arbitration.

Prisoners

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, (1) if he will give the number of persons convicted and sentenced to a term of imprisonment in the last year for which figures are available and the number of those who were unmarried or single as defined in Department of Social Security regulations;

(2) how many single or unmarried prisoners served sentences between 26 weeks and two years as a result of the non-payment of fines, in the last year for which figures are available.

(3) if he will give the number of single or unmarried prisoners who were sentenced to 26 weeks but not more than two years in prison in Scotland, broken down by gender, in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: I have asked the chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to reply.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 14 February 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your 3 Questions relating to the number of unmarried or single prisoners sentenced to a term of imprisonment in Scotland.

At present information on the marital status or household composition of prisoners is not collected centrally.

Contagious Epididymitis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the cases of contagious epididymitis in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: No cases of contagious epididymitis have been recorded since the disease was made notifiable on 1 January 1993. Official records are not available for the period before that date.

Population Statistics

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) population, (b) number of employees, (c) number of employees per 1,000 population and (d) political party in control of each local authority; and if he will post the answer on his Department's pages on the Government's world wide web server, "www.open.gov.uk".

Mr. Kynoch: The following table list for each Scottish local authority (a) its population as at June 1993, (b) its total number of employees—full time plus part time—and (c) the number of employees per thousand population as at September 1994. These are the most up-to-date figures available. The information relating to the political party in control of each local authority is as at May 1994. I have today placed the information requested in the Library of the House. No firm decision has yet been taken by the Scottish Office on the use of the Internet.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the political balance among justices of the peace in Dumbarton district; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table shows the political affiliations declared at the time of their appointment by the 57 justices of the peace for the Dumbarton commission area:

	Number
Conservative	20
Labour	21
Liberal Democrat	2
Independent	1
SNP	1
No particular views/none declared	12

JPs are appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland on the basis of nominations by local authorities for ex-efficio appointment of elected members or on the recommendation of local advisory committees. JPs are not paid and are not compelled to declare their political views. The primary consideration in the appointment of a JP is the individual's personal suitability for the office.

NHS Trusts

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the external financing limit for each of the NHS trusts in Strathclyde.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

NHS Trust	1994–95 (£000s)
Ayrshire and Arran Community Healthcare	2,113
Glasgow Royal Infirmary University	(2,459)
Greater Glasgow Community and Mental Health Services	(3,470)

South Ayrshire Hospitals	850
Southern General Hospital	2,749
Stobhill	(1,520)
Victoria Infirmary	116
West Glasgow Hospitals University	3,052
Yorkhill	1,379

Note:
Those figures in brackets mean a negative limit. In essence, this means the trust's agreed capital expediture is less that its surplus.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the termination payments made to chief executives and general and senior managers in each NHS trust since its inception, indicating the size and number of individual payments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 February 1995]: This information is not held centrally. Consideration is being given to the collection of data on termination payments in Scotland.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those NHS trusts which have received either (a) a loan from his Department or (b) an overdraft guarantee in each year since their creation, indicating (i) the amount involved and (ii) the reason for its allocation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is detailed in the tables:

Note:
[1] This trust has now merged with Forth Valley Healthcare.

Trusts borrow principally to support their capital investment activities, but may also borrow to cover working capital requirements. All the borrowing detailed was within agreed limits. Trusts use overdrafts to cover very short-term working capital requirements. The purpose of overdraft guarantees is to reduce the cost of this borrowing from the trusts' bankers.

Remedial Care

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of children and young persons who are currently providing a substantial amount of remedial care to sick, elderly and disabled relatives in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The only information available comes from the 1991 census of population and relates to "dependants". A dependant is defined as a person aged zero to 15, or a person aged 16 to 18 who has never married, is in full-time education and economically inactive, or a person with a limiting long-term illness whose economic activity is "permanently sick" or "retired". The table shows the number of households where all residents were dependants and the youngest was aged five to 18 and the oldest 19 or over. However, the figures give no indication as to whether the child(ren) in such households actually provide a substantial amount of care for the adult dependant(s). Households which contain a 16 to 18-year-old non-dependant and one or more older dependants are not included.

Dentists

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dentists in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole have ceased to treat NHS patients in each year since 1992.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In order to provide NHS dental services a dentist must join a health board dental list. The table shows the number of individual principal dentists on health board lists in each of the four health board areas within Strathclyde region and Scotland as a whole; the number of new list numbers allocated; and list numbers cancelled. Information for individual local government districts and regional areas is not available. It is not possible to identify from these figures the number of individual dentists who may have withdrawn from providing NHS treatment as dentists who surrender one number may hold other numbers.

[1] Total number of individual dentists who practised during the financial year in each of the health boards. Dentists contracted to more than one health board are counted more than once. The total number of dentists shown in Scotland is the number of individual dentists with no double-counting.

[2] A dentist may hold one or more list number. The table shows a count of the list numbers that commenced or were surrendered in the given period, not dentists. Dentists may surrender health board list number for a variety of reasons—including moving to another health board area, practice reorganisation, or retirement.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dentists in (a) Inverclyde and (b) Strathclyde have closed NHS registers to new patients in each year since 1992.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available. General dental practitioners on health board NHS dental lists are free to decide in each case whether to provide NHS treatment to an individual patient.

Earnings

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average earnings per capita for (a) men aged 16 to 65 years and (b) women aged 16 to 60 years in full-time work for (i) 1990 and (ii) the latest available date.

Mr. Kynoch: The information in the table gives average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees in Scotland.

Prison Damage

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of repairing and renovating prisons as a result of damage caused by prisoners acting unlawfully in each year since 1976.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under the chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman dated 14 February 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the cost of repairing and renovating prisons as a result of damage caused by prisoners' unlawful activity.

Such activity ranges from minor incidents such as breaking light bulbs to serious riot damage. Damage of a minor nature caused by vandalism would normally be repaired as part of the ongoing maintenance programme and the cost would not therefore be separately identified.

Information on the cost of prisoner damage from major incidents is not available prior to 1986 but the annual cost each year since then is set out in the table below.

Year	Cost (£)
1986–87	1,099,437
1987–88	258,926
1988–89	379,790

Prison Escapes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of escapes from prison in each year since 1983 stating (a) the prison concerned, (b) what offence the prisoner had been convicted for and (c) how long each prisoner remained at large.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 14 February 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about escapes from Scottish prisons.

Information on the number of escapes from 1983 from Scottish Prisons is included in Reports "Prisons in Scotland" and from 1991–92 "Scottish Prison Service".

The remaining information you requested relating to escapes is not held centrally. Details of the relevant Annual Reports are as follows:

Schools (First Aid)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines are issued to regional and island authorities concerning the subject of first aid cover in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No guidelines are issued to regional and islands authorities specifically on first aid cover in schools. It is for authorities to make appropriate arrangements for first-aid cover, having regard to their responsibilities under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and to the guidance in the revised approved code of practice published in February 1990 by the Health and Safety Commission in respect of the Health and Safety (First-Aid) Regulations 1981.

Fort William Rail Services

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Highlands and Islands Enterprise in respect of the future of Fort William sleeper services and the Fort William and Inverness motorail service; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Highlands and Islands Enterprise wrote to my officials about future rail service levels, and in particular sleeper services, in October 1994. My right hon. Friend and I will continue to take a close interest in this matter.

Objective 1 Funding

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications his Department received, and how many had been agreed, for objective 1 FEOGA funding by 30 September 1994.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Three applications for the first tranche of awards under the FEOGA processing and marketing grant scheme were received by my Department from applicants in the objective 1 region of the highlands and islands. All were received by 30 September 1994.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what considerations were taken into account by his Department when it was decided to extend the time limit for submission of applications for the first tranche of objective 1 FEOGA funding in 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 February 1995]: The time limit of 30 September 1994 for submission of applications for the first tranche of FEOGA processing and marketing scheme awards was not extended.

Sexual Abuse

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each sheriffdom the number of cases of sexual abuse of children which have been reported to procurators fiscal since January 1990; how many of those were (a) referred to court under summary procedure, (b) referred to court under indictment and (c) cases in which the accused was found guilty; and what were the sentences given in cases when the accused was found guilty.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 February 1995]: It is not possible to identify all cases of child abuse proceeded against in Scottish courts because the Scottish Office Home and Health Department's classification of crimes and offences does not contain information on the victims of crime. The table sets out the available information for those sexual offences within the classification which, by definition, involve abuse of children.

Oncologists

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) clinical oncology consultants and (b) medical oncology consultants there are currently in Scotland; and how many of each are funded by charities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 February 1995]: There were 31 consultants in clinical oncology—radiotherapy—and 12 consultants in medical oncology in Scotland at 30 September 1994 the latest date for which information is available centrally.

The Pringle report "Management of Non-Surgical Cancer Services in Scotland", 1992, found that five posts in medical oncology were funded by the major cancer charities.

Fish Conservation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to amend section 4 of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967 as recommended by "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas", Cm 2560, HMSO May 1994, paragraph 17.31, page 265; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 February 1995]: The Government expect to issue shortly a consultation paper on the standards of fish factory ships.

Rate Appeals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many rate revaluation appeals are currently outstanding for previous rate revaluations from the borders region.

Mr. Kynoch. [holding answer 10 February 1995]: None.

Newton Street Rail Tunnel, Greenock

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects repair work on the Newton street rail tunnel, Greenock, to be completed; if he will estimate when the passenger train service to Gourock will be resumed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 February 1995]: Responsibility for repairs to the Newton street rail tunnel rests with Railtrack and Strathclyde regional council through the Strathclyde passenger transport executive. I understand, however, that the tunnel is expected to re-open for passenger traffic on 27 March 1995.

Scottish Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proportion of SVQs achieved on Government training schemes was externally moderated by Scotvec;

(2) to what extent the attainment of SVQs on Government training schemes is dependent on internal assessment by the training provider.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 7 February 1995]: Questions about Scottish vocational qualifications achieved on Government training schemes are an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of these bodies to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about how and to what extent the income of training providers on Government training schemes is dependent on the achievement of vocational qualifications.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 7 February 1995]: For youth and adult training programmes, between 25 and 40 per cent of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise funding to local enterprise companies is payable on the achievement of positive outcomes, including vocational qualifications. The funding of training providers is, however, a commercial contractual matter between them and the local enterprise companies.

Trust Hospitals (Press Officers)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) health authorities and (b) trust hospitals in Scotland have press officers; what is the cost incurred for their services; and if he will list these authorities and trust hospitals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 February 1995]: The information requested is not held centrally.

Water Schemes

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those private companies which have expressed an interest in creating build own and operate water schemes in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 8 February 1995]: Awarding of contracts for build own and operate water and sewerage schemes is a matter for regional and islands councils. My officials are, however, aware of considerable interest by many Scottish, United Kingdom and international companies in the construction, finance and other sectors.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many items he has received from Ian Greer in each week of the last month.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 February 1995]: None.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions departmental officials met representatives of Ian Greer Associates (a) formally and (b) informally on 26 January to discuss matters relating to their clients' interests.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 31 January 1995]: There were no such occasions on 26 January when officials from my Department met representatives of Ian Greer Associates.

Hunterston Terminal

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last received a report, as required under sub-paragraph (2) of the Clyde Port Authority (Hunterston Terminal) Order Confirmation Act 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1995]: The last report under the requirements of the Clyde Port Authority (Hunterston Terminal) Order Confirmation Act 1973 was received in 1976. However, throughout the subsequent period there has been monthly environmental monitoring at Hunterston by Clydeport plc, overseen by Cunninghame district council and, until imports of ore and coking coal ceased, Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the duty to make annual reports under sub-paragraph 10(2) of the Clyde Port Authority (Hunterston Terminal) Order Confirmation Act 1973 now applies to Clydeport Ltd. as owners of the terminal.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 18 January 1995]: This duty has passed to Clydeport plc as successors to the Clyde port authority.

Local Government and Housing Act 1989

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sections of the local Government and Housing Act 1989 have not been brought into force; for what reasons they have not been brought into force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 25 January 1995]: The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 relates to England, Wales and Scotland but only the following sections, together with associated schedules, extend to Scotland:

Sections 1-32
Section 36(9)
Sections 140-145
Sections 150-153
Section 155
Section 157
Section 159
Section 161
Section 168
Sections 170-171
Sections 176-182
Section 185
Section 190
Section 192
Section 194(1) and (4)
Section 195

A number of these sections were commenced at royal assent and further commencements were made by commencement order under section 195(2). The following Scottish provisions have not been fully commenced:

Section 9 (Assistants for political groups)
Section 14 (Voting rights of members of certain committees)
Section 15 (Duty to allocate seats to political groups)
Section 16 (Duty to give effect to allocations)
Section 17 (Exceptions to and extensions of political balance requirements)

These sections are commenced only for the limited purpose of giving the Secretary of State regulation-making powers and substantive commencement. The making of regulations on these sections is still under consideration.

Section 140-commenced for the year 1990/91
Section 141-not commenced

Both these sections have been repealed and are replaced by section 10 of the Local Government Finance Act 1992, which introduced new sections 7A and 7B to the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1975 making provision as to the setting of non-domestic rates.

Section 142
Section 145

These sections were commenced for the years 1990–91 onwards and are now obsolete following the abolition of the community charge.

Local Authority Members (Payments)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is reviewing the levels of payment which can be made by local authorities to the authorities' senior elected members.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 26 January 1995]: I refer the hon. member to the answer given by the hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) to myself on 19 January, which covered allowances for all councillors.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of operations for breast cancer in 1993–94 was performed in hospitals where more than 150 such operations took place.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Estimated number of discharges from Scottish NHS hospitals following an operation for breast cancer (year ending March 1994)

	Frequency	Per cent. of total cases
Female breast cancer
Hospitals with frequency over 150 cases	3,743	71
Male breast cancer
Hospitals with frequency over 150 cases	0	0

[1] Data for 1994 are provisional

HEALTH

Clinical Services (Market Testing)

14. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all clinical services that have been market tested since April 1991; and if she will list all those that will be market tested in 1994–95.

Mr. Sackville: Since April 1991, some 22 clinical and clinical support services have been market tested by one or more national health service units.

For 1994–95, we have been advised of local plans to market test some 20 clinical and clinical support services.

Prescription Charges

15. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to alter the cost of prescriptions.

Mr. Malone: Judgments have to be made each year about how finite health resources can best be targeted for maximum health gain so that year on year the national health service can continue to treat more patients than ever before. Prescription charges are but one aspect of these considerations. Any announcement will be made at the appropriate time.

Waiting Lists

16. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been waiting for more than 12 months for hospital treatment in Tameside and Glossop; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: At 30 September 1994, of a total waiting list of 1,800 at the Tameside and Glossop acute services national health service trust, only 11 people—0.6 per cent—had been waiting for more than a year as opposed to a national average of 5.8 per cent. None had been waiting for more than two years.

Smoking and Diet Targets

17. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made towards the achievements of the targets on (a) smoking and (b) diet set out in the White Paper, "The Health of the Nation".

Mr. Sackville: Adult smoking prevalence, smoking in pregnancy and total cigarette consumption are continuing to fall. However smoking amongst 11 to 15-year-olds remains broadly unchanged.

Trends over time indicate that the proportion of energy intake derived from total fats has remained comparatively steady while that from saturated fatty acids has been declining.

In 1994 the Government published "Smoke Free for Health" and "Eat Well!" setting out action plans for achieving the smoking and diet targets respectively. Each document sets out the range of measures being taken.

General Practitioners

19. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes there have been in the number of general practitioners in the past decade; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The number of general medical practitioners in England rose from 23,640 at 1 October 1984 to 26,387 at 1 April 1994, an increase of 12 per cent.

Community Care

20. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next expects to meet disability organisations to discuss the implications for disabled persons of the Government's community care policy.

Mr. Bowis: I meet disability organisations on a regular basis and discuss a range of issues including community care. I also meet the national user and carer group every six months. The group is made up of users from a wide range of community care client groups and carers and provides information on the progress being made with the community care reforms by local and health authorities from a user's and carer's perspective.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which local authorities have not submitted audited returns detailing community care spending in 1993–94.

Mr. Bowis: Audited returns detailing community care spending in 1993–94 for 29 local authorities have not yet been received by the Department. The outstanding returns are being followed up through the Audit Commission. A list of the relevant authorities is as shown.

Winter Illnesses

21. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the adequacy of NHS resources to cope with flu and flu-type illnesses this winter.

Mr. Sackville: Every year the Department runs an immunisation campaign aimed at people who are at particular risk of serious illness or death.

At the first sign of an impending epidemic, the Department alerts health authorities and trusts so that local contingency plans can be made.

The national health service reimburses general practitioners for the purchase of influenza vaccine. The cost of vaccine purchased during 1993–94 was about £27 to £28 million. Year-on-year increases in uptake are expected.

GP Fundholders

22. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the population is currently served by a GP fundholder; and what proportion she expects this to be from April.

Mr. Malone: Some 35 per cent. of the population in England is currently served by a fundholding general practitioner. Final figures for 1995–96 are not yet available.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the amount of general practitioner fundholders' budgets which is being spent on medical services outside the NHS in the last 12 months.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary gave the hon. member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 9 December 1994 Official Report, column 401.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given the health commissions in respect of those general practitioner fundholders who have overspent their budget.

Mr. Malone: Guidance on financial matters relevant to the general practice funding scheme was issued to health authorities in EL(91)36 and covered by the general practitioner fundholders' manual of accounts, 1993, copies of which are in the Library.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

23. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what savings she expects to result from the abolition of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Malone: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier) earlier today.

Community Care

24. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next expects to meet the Association of Directors of Social Services to discuss resources available for the implementation of community care.

Mr. Bowis: We have regular contacts with the association and discuss a wide range of issues, including community care.

Accident and Emergency Departments

25. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital accident and emergency departments have closed since 1979, and since April 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

27. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the number of (a) beds and (b) accident and emergency departments needed in London.

Mr. Sackville: District health authorities are responsible for purchasing hospital and other services for their resident populations, with general practitioner fundholders also purchasing some care for patients on their lists. In addition, districts are responsible for purchasing accident and emergency services for all-comers in their area, and for ensuring that, where major changes to the pattern of local services are proposed, full public consultation takes place.

Consultant Episodes (Private Patients)

26. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage increase in finished consultant episodes on private patients on NHS premises between 1990–91 and the latest available date.

Mr. Sackville: Between 1990–91 and 1992–93 there was an increase in private patient finished consultant episodes in the national health service in England of 21.8 per cent. Private patient episodes in the NHS are about one per cent. of total episodes.

Waiting Times, Essex

28. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact of Essex county council's budgetary overspend on social services on waiting times in Essex hospitals.

Mr. Malone: We have made no comprehensive assessment of this impact but recent visits to two otherwise well-run national health service trusts in Essex have made it clear to me that the county council's failure to make arrangements for discharge of patients is having a direct impact on hospitals' ability to admit new patients for elective surgery.

Teenage Pregnancies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress in meeting

"The Health of the Nation" targets for teenage pregnancies.

Mr. Sackville: The year 1991 saw the first fall in 10 years in the under-16 conception rate. Provisional figures for 1992 are broadly in line with 1991. Concerted effort is necessary if a downward trend is to be maintained.

Minimal Access Surgery

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the dangers of minimal access surgery; and how many hospital re-admissions occurred in the last year as a result of the failure of that type of surgery.

Mr. Sackville: We have received a number of letters about the risks and benefits of minimal access surgery. Information on readmissions following minimal access surgery, or for any other reason, is not available centrally.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those public bodies for which she retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Sackville: The public bodies for which the Department has responsibility are listed in "Public Bodies 1994". None have been identified as suitable for privatisation. As part of the usual quinquennial review process, the Department critically examines both the need for its public bodies and whether control of their business should reside in the private sector.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to order NHS trusts to stop the practice of NHS trusts soliciting voluntary contributions from persons treated for road accident injuries.

Mr. Sackville: We have no evidence of national health service trusts seeking voluntary contributions. All health service hospitals, including those managed by NHS trusts, are empowered to collect the emergency treatment fee under section 158 of the Road Traffic Act 1988. The fee, which must be covered by motor vehicle insurance policies, is payable by vehicle users in respect of each person given immediate treatment or examination arising from a road traffic accident.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will advise all NHS trusts to finance a patients' friend and arrange that the postholder is accountable only to the appropriate community health council.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for individual trusts.

Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the Government's intentions in regard to the future of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960.

Mr. Sackville: The Government accept the case for examining how far this legislation provides an adequate framework for professional self-regulation. We intend to commission an independent review of the current operations of the statutory bodies concerned. We shall bring forward for consultation specific proposals for change in the light of the outcome of that review.

Convictions (Disclosure)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to require all organisations tendering for NHS authority or trust business to declare convictions for fraud or professional misconduct.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Care Fees

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the number of people who have had to sell their homes to pay for fees in a residential or nursing home since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: The value of a resident's interest in a property can be taken into account only if he or she has moved permanently to residential accommodation. It must be ignored in certain circumstances, for example if the resident's spouse still lives in it. If it does have to be taken into account, the local authority may put a charge on the property which is not recovered until the property is eventually sold.

Information about the number of properties actually sold in order to meet charges for residential accommodation is not available centrally.

Directors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if chairmen and non-executive directors of health authorities and trusts are informed on appointment of the number of hours per week or month that they would normally be expected to devote to their duties.

Mr. Malone: The matter of the number of hours per week or month which chairmen and non-executive directors of health authorities and national health service trusts will be expected to devote to their duties forms part of a comprehensive discussion between the appropriate regional health authority and prospective nominees before their names are submitted to Ministers, or, in the case of appointments made by regional health authorities, before formal appointment is made.

Club 18-30

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect of the current poster advertising campaign of Club 18-30 on "The Health of the Nation" targets for teenage pregnancies and sexual health; and what plans she has to make representations to those responsible for these posters.

Mr. Sackville: None. Club 18-30 is a commercial enterprise. It would not be appropriate for the Government to intervene in the company's choice of advertising material. Complaints about the nature or content are a matter for the Advertising Standards Authority.

Consultants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued since the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 on the limitation of NHS consultants' private work sessions, or private work income; and on what occasions such guidance has later been withdrawn or amended.

Mr. Malone: None.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has issued to NHS consultants on doing private work at the same time as their NHS (a) out-patients work, (a) surgeries, (c) ward rounds and (d) other clinical sessions.

Mr. Malone: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 2 February, columns 837-38.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department has issued on the maximum time NHS consultants with maximum part-time contracts can spend working in the private sector during their normal working week.

Mr. Malone: Guidance is contained in the national terms and conditions of service for national health service consultants.

Specialties

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to increase the numbers of doctors specialising in neurology and anaesthesiology.

Mr. Malone: Considerable attention is given to medical work force planning. The aim is to provide an adequate supply of appropriately-trained doctors in each specialty. The agreed policy of achieving a balance, introduced in 1987, is overseen by the Advisory Group on Medical Education, Training and Staffing. This policy encourages consultant expansion of at least 2 per cent. per year. Consultant posts are also funded under the new deal and the part-time consultant scheme.

However, the establishment of new consultant posts is a matter for local employing authorities and they should have regard to competing priorities and available resources.

For doctors in higher specialist training, senior registrar and career registrar quotas set by the Joint Planning Advisory Committee are still in operation. It is necessary to ensure an appropriate supply of doctors, and numbers of higher specialist trainees in any specialty must therefore depend on the best available predictions of future consultant opportunities in that specialty.

Liquid Fuels

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what health risks have been identified from the emissions from burning secondary liquid fuel.

Mr. Sackville: The likely health effects of emissions from the burning of fuel cannot be determined unless the specific components of the fuel, and the method and temperature of its combustion, are known.

Doncaster Royal Infirmary Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the names, occupations and qualifications of all persons nominated for appointment as chairman to the Doncaster Royal Infirmary trust; what were the names of those shortlisted; who shortlisted them; and who made the final selection.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 November 1994, Official Report, column 789. Mr. Raymond Tonkinson, chairman of the Doncaster Royal Infirmary and Montagu Hospital national health service trust, is a company chief executive.

Operation Statistics

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to collect statistics on the number of operations purchased by the private sector, together with their cost.

Mr. Sackville: No.

Dermatology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her policy in relation to dermatology; and what response she has made to the submissions by Professor Rona Mackie of Glasgow university, on behalf of the all-party group on the skin.

Mr. Sackville: The provision of dermatology services and the manner in which they are delivered is a matter for health authorities and hospital and community trusts in the light of available resources and local needs and priorities.

I attended a meeting of the all-party parliamentary group on skin on 20 October 1994 when the hon. Member for Linlithgow mentioned Professor Mackie's work. I am not aware of any submissions from Professor Mackie on behalf of the all-party group on skin. We will, of course, consider carefully any such representation.

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards exist to ensure proper standards of domiciliary care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The social services inspectorate published guidelines "Developing Quality Standards for Home Support Services" in October 1993, copies of which are available in the Library. A code of practice is produced by the United Kingdom Home Care Association, by which all its members are expected to abide, and the Joint Advisory Group of Domiciliary Care Associations produced a document "A Framework for the Development of Standards for the Delivery of Domiciliary Care" last July. Local authorities who purchase domiciliary care from independent providers are able to include specific standards in their contract specifications, and should monitor compliance with them.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people received domiciliary care in 1993–94; and how many are estimated to need domiciliary care in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98.

Mr. Bowis: In a sample week in September 1993, there were an estimated total of 512,600 households in England receiving home help or home care.

Estimates are not made for future years.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to monitor the number of independent sector agencies providing domiciliary care.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are undertaken to monitor the suitability of domiciliary care provided to individuals who purchase such care directly from private agencies or individuals.

Mr. Bowis: Domiciliary care agencies are subject to the provisions of the Employment Agencies Act 1973.

Hormone Replacement Therapy

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the use of synthetic alternatives to premarin and prempak-C in hormone replacement therapy.

Mr. Sackville: There are many other forms of hormone replacement therapy available, all of which are synthetic and all of which can be prescribed under the national health service. It is for the woman and her doctor to decide which preparation is most suitable for her needs.

London Chest Hospital

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to close the London chest hospital;

(2) what plans she has for the future of the London chest hospital under "Making London Better".

Mr. Malone: "Making London Better" reported that North East Thames regional health authority would initiate public consultation on proposals to merge the management of the London chest hospital with that of the Royal London hospital. Following public consultation, the Royal Hospitals trust was established incorporating the London chest hospital, the Royal London hospital and St. Bartholomew's hospital.

East London and the City health authority is currently consulting on proposals to consolidate the trust's services at the Royal London hospital, Whitechapel. No decisions will be taken until all the responses to public consultation have been fully considered.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the research rating of the London chest hospital in relation to other hospitals.

Mr. Malone: The London chest hospital was included in the 1993 review of the research and development taking place in the London postgraduate special health authorities, as part of the Royal Brompton National Heart and Lung hospitals SHA. The Review Advisory Committee's report did not give a separate rating for the London chest hospital.

Closures

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given in relation to district health authorities taking account of local opinion when deciding to close services.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 8 February, Official Report, column 277.

Glaucoma and Diabetic Eye Disease

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of treating glaucoma and diabetic eye disease in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Waiting Times

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average waiting time (a) to see a consultant privately and (b) to see a consultant in the NHS in each of the last five years (i) generally and (ii) by specialty where such figures are available.

Mr. Malone: We do not collect information on waiting times for patients who see consultants in the private sector. Provisional information on outpatient waiting times for patients seen in the national health service is only available for the quarter ending 30 September 1994 and is contained in statistical bulletin 95/3, copies of which are available in the Library. This shows how long patients seen over the quarter had to wait following written referral by a general practitioner within specified time bands but does not give average waiting times.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the current average waiting times for operations (a) in the NHS and (b) privately.

Mr. Malone: In 1992–93, the latest year for which information on national health service operations is available, the average waiting times for patients admitted from waiting lists or who had booked admissions was just over three months. We do not collect information on waiting times in the private sector.

Opthamology

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the cost to the NHS in treating eye diseases and (b) the total budget for ophthalmology in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: District health authorities are funded through their general allocations for purchasing ophthalmology services.

Expenditure by health authorities and national health service trusts on opthamology is shown in the table.

Year	Expenditure £000 (cash)
1989–90	159,804
1990–91	177,976
1991–92	293,825
1992–93	308,715
1993–94	328,953

Note:
Figures after 1991–92 are not directly comparable with earlier years due to a change in accounting policy and practice with the introduction of the internal market.

Source:
Annual financial returns of district, regional and special health authorities—1989–90 to 1993–94—and NHS trusts—1991–92 to 1993–94.

Consultants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional payments are made to NHS consultants to perform operations on NHS patients privately (a) in NHS hospitals and (b) in private hospitals.

Mr. Malone: Such payments are a matter for the individuals concerned.

Cataract Operations

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cataract operations were performed in each of the last five years; and what was the average cost of a cataract operation in England.

Mr. Sackville: The number of cataract operations performed in the last five years up to and including 1992–93 are shown in the table.

Year	Thousands
1988–89	82.3
1989–90	92.2
1990–91	97.9
1991–92	111.7
1992–93	118.6

Information on the average cost of cataract operations is not available centrally.

Closures, Hertfordshire

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what weight will be given to the views of Hertfordshire general practitioners on the closure of two Hertfordshire accident and emergency departments; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what is her policy in respect of closures of accident and emergency units in Hertfordshire for the next five years; and if she will make a statement;

(3) if she will make a statement on the proposed closure of two accident and emergency units in Hertfordshire, and the plans she has for hospital services in Hertfordshire.

Mr. Sackville: Hertfordshire health agency recently initiated a period of public debate on possible future patterns of health services, including accident and emergency services, in the county. The right hon. Member may wish to contact Ms Jenny Griffiths, chief executive of Hertfordshire health agency, for information on the conclusions that have been reached following this period of public discussion.

Supplementary Medicine Review

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will be the chairman of the review body for the review of the professions supplementary to the Medicine Act 1960; and when she expects to introduce measures for the protection of fully qualified physiotherapists.

Mr. Sackville: We intend to commission an independent review to examine the current operations of the statutory bodies concerned. The study team has yet to be decided. The report, to be produced within a year, should provide an authoritative and objective base from which to carry out a more comprehensive consultation on future arrangements.

St. Christopher Nursing Home

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will request a report from the chair of the Hertfordshire health authority on its investigation into the number of deaths at Takare plc St Christopher nursing home; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Investigations into deaths in any nursing home are a matter for the relevant health authority.

Hertfordshire Health Agency

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the members of the Hertfordshire health agency, the chief executive, their qualifications and a list of their outside interests.

Mr. Malone: The Hertfordshire health agency is an agency of the three Hertfordshire district health authorities—East and North Herts, South West Herts and North West Herts—and Hertfordshire family health services authority. Control of the agency rests with the four boards of the authorities. The chief executive is Ms Jenny Griffiths. The right hon. Member may wish to contact Ms Griffiths for any additional information.

Out-of-hours Service

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of the general practitioner out-of-hours service per general practitioner in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The cost of general practitioners' out-of-hours services is not separately identifiable within total GP remuneration.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the model of general practitioner out-of-hours services to be promoted by her Department.

Mr. Malone: The Department promotes general practitioner out of hours services which provide high-quality care for patients and manage effectively GP work load. It is for individual GPs to decide the exact model which best suits local needs.

Authority Funding

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) real funding and (b) the preferred funding per head of population for each (i) district health authority and (ii) family health services authority in (1) 1992–93, (2) 1993–94, (3) 1994–95, (4) 1995–96 and (5) 1996–97.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Population Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the average population by family health services authority from (a) census data and (b) general practitioner list size data.

Mr. Malone: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for York (Mr. Bayley) on 10 January, columns 129-31.

Takare plc Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will investigate the arrangements made by district health authorities in respect of the registration of Takare plc Nursing Homes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The registration and inspection of nursing homes is wholly delegated to health authorities.

Junior Doctors

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of operations was performed by junior doctors and what percentage by consultants in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Consultation

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the extent to which health authorities and health commissioning agencies should take account of the views of the local population and general practitioners.

Mr. Malone: Health authorities are expected to consult widely with their local populations, general practitioners and other interested agencies in establishing local priorities, developing annual purchasing plans and longer term strategies. Recent guidance—EL(94)79—sets out an enhanced role for GPs working in partnership with health authorities in developing local health strategies. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

General Practitioners (Night Visits)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many night visits were carried out by general practitioners in each of the last five years; and how many night visit claims were submitted by general practitioners in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The table shows the number of night visits in each of the last five years, calculated from information held by the Department of Health on the number of night visit fee claims by general practitioners.

Financial year	Number of visits
1993–94	1,832,456
1992–93	1,585,999
1991–92	1,712,245
1990–91	1,586,960
1989–90	936,148

Note:
In 1989–90, night visit fees were payable for the period from 11 pm to 7 am. From 1990–91, this period was extended to cover 10 pm to 8 am.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she proposes to issue on the maximum target time before a patient needing emergency care from a general practitioner, should be initially assessed by that general practitioner.

Mr. Malone: None. All general practitioners are bound by their terms of service. It is for GPs to exercise their professional judgment, within these terms of service, as to when a patient needs to be seen.

Deprivation

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the average deprivation score for each district health authority.

Mr. Malone: Information will be placed in the Library showing figures for district health authorities calculated using the same method as the Department of the Environment's ward index of local conditions.

Bed Closures, London

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number of (a) acute bed closures and (b) long-stay bed closures in London since the publication of the Tomlinson report.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 30 January 1995]: This information is not available centrally. However, analysis of published data on available beds suggests that the bed reductions in inner London as defined by Tomlinson, including special health authorities, between 1990–91 and 1993–94 were:

1,399 for acute beds and
900 for long-stay beds.

HEALTH

Community Care

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by her Department on community care for the mentally ill broken down by local authority in the last financial year; and what is the proportion of the resources allocated to community care spent on mental health patients.

Mr. Bowis: Figures for the last financial year are not yet available.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the results of GP fundholding in (a) the Fylde coast area and (b) Lancashire.

Mr. Malone: Fundholding general practitioners are at the leading edge of purchasing developments and are at the forefront of quality improvements for patients, including the creation of outreach clinics for such services as diabetes, physiotherapy, ophthalmology and vasectomy. The improvements made by general practitioner fundholders often have the effect of improving the quality of care for all patients.

Information on specific localities is not available centrally. For information about Lancashire, the hon. Member should write to Sir Donald Wilson, the chairman of the North West regional health authority.

NHS Chief Executive

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what limitations have been placed on the NHS chief executive in his dealings with the media.

Mr. Sackville: In accordance with the normal rules for civil servants, the national health service chief executive is permitted, under ministerial authority, to have contact with the media in order, inter alia, to explain Government policy and the performance of the NHS.

NHS Accounts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will amend the form of NHS authorities' and trusts' annual accounts to show the number of non-executive directors who decline to accept emoluments or salaries.

Mr. Sackville: No.

Child Protection Registers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each local authority the percentage annual decrease or increase of children placed on protection registers in England for the latest available year; and what were the figures for (a) five years and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Bowis: Information for the year ending 31 March 1994 will be placed in the Library. The earliest reliable annual comparisons available centrally for each local authority are for the year ending 31 March 1990.

District Nursing Services

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to ensure that district nursing services are maintained at existing levels under the national health service reforms.

Mr. Sackville: Each locality will have different health needs and these will be reflected in the work of district nurses and other health professionals. It is for those who employ district nurses to assess continually and review their work with them.

Business Plans

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the value of business plans estimated under the public financial initiative broken down by region;

(2) what is the total value of the public financial initiative business plans currently being assessed by the NHS executive.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health does not have a public financial initiative.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will cancel all payments to chairmen and non-executive directors other than the reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses and make available the savings for the provision of intensive care beds.

Mr. Malone: No.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the occasions during the last five years when her Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Sackville: There have been no occasions when the Department or agencies have had to resort to legal action with consultancy firms over the last five years.

Acute Psychiatric Wards

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (a) how many acute psychiatric wards there are, (b) how many beds are in each acute psychiatric ward, (c) on average what percentage of beds are vacant on those wards and (d) on average what percentage of patients are legally detained on those wards in respect of (i) the north-west regional office, (ii) the west midlands regional office, (iii) the south Thames regional office and (iv) the north Thames regional office of the NHS executive.

Mr. Bowis: The information is not available centrally.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information sought can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. But there is one readily identifiable case which is subject to legal action and for that reason no further details can be given.

The Lord Chancellor has three executive agencies, HM Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office. As the question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executives of the agencies are best placed to provide an answer, I have accordingly asked the chief executives to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 10 February 1995:

Parliamentary Question—Legal Action by HM Land Registry Against Consultancy Firms

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning the occasions during the last five years when HM Land Registry has taken legal action against a consultancy firm.

I can reply that there have been no such occasions.

Letter from Julia Lomas to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 10 February 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary, of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your parliamentary question, listed on 9 February 1995 regarding legal action taken against consultancy firms over the last five years.

Over the last five years the Public Trust Office has instructed three firms of consultants and has not taken legal action against any of these firms.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 14 February 1995:

Parliamentary Question—Legal Action Against Consultancy Firms

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about legal action taken against consultancy firms.

The Public Record Office has not taken any legal action against a consultancy firm during the last five years.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 376, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the last year, 244 new appointments were made to the public bodies for which the Lord Chancellor has ministerial responsibility. This does not include re-appointments or judicial appointments.

Pre-trial Interviews

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many pre-trial interviews in line with the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and the memorandum of good practice have been made since September 1993; how many applications to submit a pre-recorded video taped interview with a child witness have been made since this date; and how many have been refused as evidence and on what basis.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department does not collect data about numbers of pre-trial interviews. Such information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and its accuracy could not be guaranteed as many interviews do not result in criminal proceedings. Between 30 September 1993 and 31 December 1994, 725 applications were made to submit pre-recorded video taped evidence. Of these, 41 applications were refused. The reasons for the refusals are not recorded.

Child Support Agreements

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those countries which have child support systems which as a result of agreements or treaties with the United Kingdom are able to collect child support and maintenance money in the United Kingdom in respect of (a) their own nationals, (b) United Kingdom nationals and (c) nationals of third party countries.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In accordance with the relevant international conventions and agreements to which the United Kingdom is a party, the following overseas countries have made arrangements with the United Kingdom for the reciprocal enforcement of maintenance payments through our courts. The nationality of the respondent is not relevant to the operation of the arrangements.

Countries

Algeria, Anguilla, Antigua*, Austria, Australia, Bahamas*, Barbados, Belize*, Belgium, Bermuda, Bosnia and Herzagovena, Botswana*, Brazil, British Solomon Islands Protectorate*, Brunei*, Canada, Cayman Islands*, Central African Republic, Chile, Croatia, Czech Republic, Cyprus*, Denmark, Dominica*, Ecuador, Falkland Islands, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia*, Germany, Ghana, Gibraltar, Greece, Grenada*, Guatemala, Guyana*, Guernsey*, Haiti, Holy See, Hong Kong, Hungary, India, Isle of Man, Israel, Italy, Jamaica*, Jersey*, Kenya, Lesotho*, Luxembourg, Macedonia, Malawi*, Malaysia*, Malta, Mauritius*, Monaco, Montserrat*, Morocco, Naura, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria*, Norfolk Island, Norway, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Republic of Ireland, St. Christopher and Nevis*, St. Helena, St. Lucia*, St. Vincent*, Serbia and Montenegro, Seychelles*, Sierra Leone*, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland*, Sweden, Switzerland, Tanzania, except Zanzibar, Trinidad and Tobago*, Tunisia, Turkey, Turks and Caicos Islands, Uganda*, United States, Upper Volta, Virgin Islands*, Zambia*, Zanizibar*, Zimbabwe.

Note 1: Asterisked countries do not have reciprocal enforcement arrangements with Scotland.

Note 2: Reciprocal enforcement arrangements have not necessarily been made with all the states or territories of the countries listed.

Civil Cases (Appeals)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the number and proportion of (a) all civil cases in which the appeals heard by the Court of Appeal were unsuccessful, (b) all applications for leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused by the Court of Appeal, (c) all petitions to the House of Lords for leave to appeal that were successful and (d) hearings in the House of Lords which overturned the ruling of the Court of Appeal after a successful petition.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: The latest available figures show that in the 12 months ending 30 September 1994, 1,102 or 71 per cent. of the 1,546 civil appeals disposed of by the Court of Appeal were unsuccessful. The information requested regarding applications for leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused by the Court of Appeal is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. During 1994, of the 167 petitions to the House of Lords for leave to appeal from the civil division of the Court of Appeal, 46 or 28 per cent. were allowed. Of the 25 civil appeals from the Court of Appeal allowed by the House of Lords during 1994, including one appeal allowed in part, 17 or 68 per cent. had been granted leave by the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fur Trade

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many fur pelts were (a) imported and (b) exported in each year since 1989; and what was their value.

Mr. Needham: The available information is published by the Central Statistical Office in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", available in the Library of the House. Fur pelts are classified to group 212 of the standard international trade classification.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many retail businesses were involved in the fur trade in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The Government do not collect data on the number of retailers involved in the fur trade.

Nuclear Levy

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the nuclear levy has raised for each year since it was introduced.

Mr. Eggar: The fossil fuel levy has raised the following amounts:

Year	£ Million
1990–91	1,175
1991–92	1,324
1992–93	1,348
1993–94	1,233

Source:
Office of Electricity Regulation.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much the nuclear levy currently adds to average household fuel bills.

Mr. Eggar: The fossil fuel levy is charged to licensed electricity suppliers, at the rate of 10 per cent. of the value, net of VAT, of leviable electricity supplied. The levy has made transparent the nuclear costs that it finances; but because these costs were already being met, electricity prices did not have to increase when the levy was introduced in 1990.

Supply Network Programme

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce final details of the regional supply network programme.

Mr. Eggar: An announcement will be made shortly.

Insurance Cover (Mortgages)

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to encourage insurers to standardise definitions of unemployment and disability in respect of private mortgage protection policies.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No. This is an operational matter for individual companies in which the Government has no powers to intervene. The Association of British Insurers has said that insurers are guided by an individual's welfare benefit entitlement or by the legislation on redundancy in settling such claims. During their consultation on the proposed changes the Department of Social Security will discuss with insurers how best to ensure that the interface between public and private provision works well.

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the United Kingdom treated individuals and organisations listed by the United States Treasury in April 1991 as sanctions breakers or links with Iraqi procurement networks as persons in Iraq or Kuwait within the terms of the Iraq and Kuwait United Nations Sanctions Order 1990.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Some individuals and organisations listed by the United States Treasury are regarded as being persons in Iraq or Kuwait for the purposes of the Iraq and Kuwait United Nations Sanctions Order 1990.

Broadly, this would include any body constituted or incorporated under the law of Iraq and any body carrying on business, whether within Iraq or not, which is controlled by persons or bodies resident in Iraq or constituted or incorporated under the law of Iraq.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the United Kingdom companies which have been granted export licences to Iraq since sanctions began.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 14 February 1995]: It has been the practice of successive administrations not to disclose such information unless the public interest outweighs the requirements of confidentiality.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the products that have been exported to Iraq since sanctions began.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 14 February 1995]: To identify and list every product which has been exported to Iraq since sanctions began would incur disproportionate cost. Any export to Iraq has to either be notified to, or authorised by, the United Nations Sanctions Committee in New York. Exports which leave the territory of the United Kingdom will also require a export licence from my Department. Typical exports to Iraq include: foodstuffs, medical items, clothing and other items for essential civilian needs.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library information showing if each item listed in schedules 1, 2 and 3 of annexe A in his discussion document on the chemical weapons treaty is presently a licensable export and on what date the requirement to be licensed was imposed.

Mr. Ian Taylor: This information has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Food Competition

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to encourage genuine competition between different food manufacturers and stop the creation of cartels.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The competition legislation provides for the Director General of Fair Trading, Sir Bryan Carsberg, to consider and, if appropriate, investigate allegations of cartelistic behaviour, anti-competitive practices and abuse of market power. His remit covers all commercial activities in the United Kingdom including the food manufacturing sector. Sir Bryan has recently announced a new initiative against cartels. Should the hon. Member have any specific cases in mind he should write to him directly.

European Satellite System

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he proposes to take to involve United Kingdom manufacturers of navigation systems in the European Space Agency programme now being set up in co-operation with Eurocontrol and the European Commission to propose a European global navigation satellite system.

Mr. Ian Taylor: After consultation with officials from the Department of Trade and Industry and the European Space Agency, the Department of Transport has agreed to provide a Government financial contribution to the proposed European collaborative global navigation satellite system.

This Government funding will allow industry to play an active role in the proposed programme. I am also pleased to report that industry has agreed to provide support to the programme from its own resources.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the Secretary of State for Transport to discuss the operational and industrial importance to the United Kingdom of involvement in the steps being taken by Eurocontrol, the European Commission and the European Space Agency to establish a European global navigation satellite system.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Officials of the two Departments have been working closely for a number of months on UK participation in the European global navigation satellite system. I hope to meet my noble Friend Viscount Goschen, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport, to discuss satellite navigation issues in the near future.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance the Government will give to companies providing products and support services to the fishing industry, to help them diversify.

Mr. Eggar: The Government provide a wide range of business support services for these companies and others. There is focused support available in assisted areas, and the full range of services is available to assist diversification in north Devon. Details can be obtained from the Government office for the south-west.

Assistance is also available from the European structural funds: north Devon is covered by the objective 5(b) single programming document which will make grants towards a variety of economic measures including many business support activities. Diversification is an important factor, and support will be provided for, among other things, product and process development and for increasing the level and capacity for research and development.

Information Super-highway

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many miles of co-axial cable have been laid towards the information super-highway infrastructure; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many miles of optical fibre cable have been laid towards the information super-highway infrastructure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Department does not hold details of how many miles of optical fibre and coaxial cable have been laid. Figures from industry sources, however, point to the rapid installation of new or upgraded communications networks. Investment in these new networks has been spurred by the Government's liberalisation of the telecommunications sector.

Optical fibre is the dominant technology for trunk networks and inter-exchange traffic, and increasingly for large business customers. BT, for example, has more than 1.4 million miles of optical fibre in its network. The cable industry is installing 260,000 miles of fibre per annum. Together with the networks being installed by other telecommunications operators such as Mercury, Energis, COLT, and MFS, the United Kingdom is estimated to have more than 2 million miles of fibre.

Coaxial copper cable, which is the medium normally used by the cable industry in the final connection to residential customers, is being installed at a rate of 60,000 miles per annum. Compression techniques can materially increase the amount of traffic which can be sent over these cables. The information super-highway embraces both fibre and coaxial cable and applications are being developed accordingly.

Nuclear Review

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what timetable he presently envisages for decisions and announcements on matters relating to the nuclear review.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 19 October 1994, Official Report, column 239.

Iraq (Visits)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the names of the companies which have been given a licence to communicate with and visit Iraq in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995, in each case giving the date the licence was granted.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 14 February 1995]: It has been the practice of successive administrations not to disclose such information unless the public interest outweighs the requirements of confidentiality.

TREASURY

Tax Relief

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 7 December to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts), Official Report, column 263, for the year 1995–96 to provide a list of the reliefs categorised under the heading (c) other reliefs.

Sir George Young: Estimated full-year yields at 1995–96 income levels based on a projection of the 1992–93 survey of personal incomes and other survey data in line with the assumptions in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96" are given in the table. The figures do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such changes, and show the yield from restructuring each allowance or relief separately. If two or more were restricted, the total yield would be greater than the sum of individual figures. Most of the amount shown within heading (c) is relief for charitable covenants, for donations under the giftaid scheme, for allowable interest on loans to acquire company shares and relief for class 4 national insurance contributions.

	Restriction to
	Basic rate		20p
Effect of restricting	Yield £ million	Numbers affected millions	Yield £ million	Numbers affected millions
(a) Personal allowances	1,600	3.5	5,900	26.5
(b) Relief for pension contributions	730	2.0	1,410	11.6
(c) Other reliefs	150	0.7	[1]n/a	n/a

[1] Information on reliefs given at source is not available from the survey of personal incomes so it is not possible to estimate the effect of restricting other reliefs to 20 per cent.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue from tobacco duty in each year since 1992.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information is as follows:

Tobacco revenue	£ billion
1992–93	6.0
1993–94	6.5
1994–95[1]	6.8

[1] Forecast.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the receipts from value added tax in each year since 1993; and what are the forecast receipts of value added tax for the year 1995–96.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information is as follows:

VAT receipts	£ billion
1993–94	38.9
1994–95[1]	43.3
1995–96[1]	48.1

[1] Forecast.

Alcohol Duty

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue from alcohol duty in each year since 1992.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information is as follows:

Alcohol revenue	£ billion
1992–93	5.1
1993–94	5.2
1994–95[1]	5.4

[1] Forecast.

Capitalisation Values

Mr. Olner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current capitalisation values of (a) British Telecom, (b) British Steel, (c) British Gas, (d) the privatised water industry, (e) the privatised electricity industry, including the distribution element—Powergen and National Power and (f) the coal industry.

Sir George Young: The capitalisations of BT, British Steel, British Gas, the privatised water and sewerage companies and the privatised electricity companies are shown in the table. They reflect the market's assessment of the increased value achieved by the companies concerned since their flotation. The capitalisation of the privatised coal industry cannot be readily determined.

Capitalisation of Privatised industries

Company(ies)	[1]Capitalisation (£ billion)
BT	24.6
British Steel	3.1
British Gas	13.5
Water and sewerage companies (10 companies)	11.8
Electricity companies[2] (17 companies)	30.4

[1] As at close of business, 10 February 1995.[2] Excludes the four generating companies in Northern Ireland which are not listed companies.

Public Bodies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to reduce the payment of salaries to members of non-departmental public bodies.

Mr. Aitken: Provision for the remuneration of chairmen and members of non-departmental public bodies is generally set out in the founding legislation of those statutory bodies. The Government's policy is to pay the appropriate remuneration as determined by Ministers with the consent of the Treasury.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Credit Unions

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 67, when the consultation document on credit unions is to be issued; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury is currently preparing a consultation document on the proposed amendments to the Credit Unions Act 1979. It will be issued shortly. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Monetary Union

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to date of the Treasury's preparation on economic convergence in the European Union with a view to the possible introduction of a common currency and monetary union.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 February 1995]: It is not possible separately to cost work within the Treasury on economic convergence within the EU. The Government's macro-economic policies are directed toward achieving sound public finances and permanently low inflation. These objectives are shared by other EU member states, and are also key elements of the convergence criteria set out in the Maastricht treaty.

TRANSPORT

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Norris: None.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 716, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Norris: Eighty-two.

Network SouthEast

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list (a) the number of trains and (b) the percentage of trains, which arrived more than five minutes late during peak hours on each of the Network SouthEast divisions in each four-week period during (i) 1992, (ii) 1993 and (iii) 1994;

(2) if he will list (a) the number of trains cancelled and (b) the percentage of trains cancelled on each of the Network SouthEast divisions in each four-week period during (i) 1992, (ii) 1993 and (iii) 1994.

Mr. Watts: I have written to the hon. Member and placed a copy of my letter in the Library.

Waste Containers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department or consultants to his Department have made of the suitability of the use of (a) elastomer rather than metallic seals and (b) austenitic steel rather than other metallic containment in the transport flasks used for the forthcoming shipment of high-level waste to Japan.

Mr. Norris: The Department judges the suitability of both seal materials and materials of construction of the containment system as a part of the design assessment process, against the stringent leaktightness criteria required by the International Atomic Energy Agency's regulations for the safe transport of radioactive material, for each application for design approval which it is required to undertake.

The forthcoming shipment of high-level waste to Japan will use a French design of package, assessed to the same standards by the competent authority of France.

Rail Service Withdrawals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which rail services have been withdrawn since April 1992.

Mr. Watts: British Rail has discretion to vary services and many changes are made each year. Information on such changes could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Complete closure of a line or station is subject to statutory closures procedures.

Since April 1992 services have been completely withdrawn from the following stations:

Primrose Hill
Ditton
Tilbury Riverside
Westbourne Park
Brocklesby
Elsham
Llangelynin
Dover Western Docks

Rail Track Access Charges

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the rail track access charges in (a) each EU country, (b) each Scandinavian country, (c) the USA and (d) Japan.

Mr. Watts: These countries have different railway structures which would make it difficult to identify actual access charges and make accurate comparisons with our own access charge.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to ensure that charter aircraft engaged in the transportation of live cattle are airworthy.

Mr. Norris: Before issuing any permits to a non-European Economic Area airline to operate an aircraft for flights to or from the United Kingdom under article 88 of the Air Navigation Order 1989, my Department must be satisfied that the aircraft to be used has, among other things, a valid certificate of airworthiness issued by the state of registry of the aircraft.

In view of concern about the safety of flights engaged in the transportation of live cattle from Coventry airport as a result of the Air Algerie crash on 21 December 1994, the Department has taken the additional measure of requesting the Civil Aviation Authority to conduct inspections of the non-EEA aircraft for which an article 88 permit has been made in order to ensure, among other things, that the aircraft is airworthy.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total Government spending for medical research into the causes and treatment of repetitive strain injury in each year since 1991; and what is the projected figure for 1995.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: None.

Antarctica

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of the clear-up work necessary at each of the abandoned British bases in the Antarctic region with the estimated costs in each case.

Mr. David Hunt: The removal of hazardous waste will be given priority. The cost, estimated at around £45,000 per station, is subject to weather conditions and accessibility. Complete removal of the abandoned stations may be necessary in the longer term.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reason in each case.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: None.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many public appointments have been made by his Department in the last year; and how many of those appointed were first identified by the public appointments unit.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Seventy-five public appointments have been made to Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service and Science sponsored public bodies in the last year.

Of these, 57 were to the scientific research councils whose creation was announced in the White Paper "Realising Our Potential". One of these was first identified by the public appointments unit. In common with other Departments, the Cabinet Office-OPSS follows the guidance provided in the "Guide on Public Appointments Procedures". This advises that PAU is just one option which may be appropriate in filling certain posts.

Scientists (Higher Education Institutes)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, columns 757–58, what number of research scientists and engineers were employed by higher education institutes in each year since 1981–82.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The estimated number of research scientists and engineers, as defined by OECD, employed in HEIs are available only for selected years and are shown in the table. It should be noted that these data are derived from total HEI staff numbers using a set of factors representing the proportion of time that different categories of staff spend on teaching or research. The numbers also include academics working directly on research and development, and the time of central support staff attributed to R and D.

Research scientists and engineers engaged on R and D within HEIs, 1986–1992[1]
(Full-time equivalents)

	1986	1988	1990	1991	1992
UK	25,000	26,000	28,000	29,000	31,000

Note:
[1] The definition of R and D employment is from the Frascati manual.

EDUCATION

Class Sizes

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what account she has taken, in formulating policy, of research carried out by Peter Mortimore of the London Institute of Education, linking performance in reading and mathematics to class size.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is aware of research published by Professor Mortimore and his colleagues in 1988. His report noted that the weight of earlier research had supported the view that larger classes were more effective. The Department will continue to monitor research in this field.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the occasions during the last five years when her Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Boswell: Neither the Department nor its one next steps agency, the Teachers Pensions Agency, has taken legal action against a consultancy firm during the last five years.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 398, how many appointments to public positions have been made by her Department in the last year.

Mr. Boswell: In the last year, 149 appointments to public positions were made by the Department.

Careers Advice

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the quality of careers advice for those aged 16 to 19 years in south-east London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: I have been asked to reply.

Quarterly and half-yearly reviews of the careers services in south-east London have indicated that they are achieving the objectives set out in their business plans. Impartial and timely careers advice is essential to help young people make informed choices about education, training and employment.

ENVIRONMENT

Air Pollution, Rotherham

12. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor air pollution in Rotherham.

Mr. Atkins: My Department, in co-operation with Rotherham metropolitan borough council, monitors levels of smoke and sulphur dioxide at four sites and nitrogen dioxide at four sites in the Rotherham area.

Shop Front Design

24. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met members of the English Historic Towns Forum to discuss shop front design.

Sir Paul Beresford: We have invited many organisations, including the English Historic Towns Forum, to discuss our proposals to improve the quality of design in our towns and cities, set out in the discussion document "Quality in Town and Country".

Diesel Engines (Public Health)

25. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of diesel engines on public health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Diesel vehicles emit a range of pollutants, notably small particles—PM10. Advisory committees of my Department and of the Department of Health are examining possible health and environmental effects of PM10 and are expected to make recommendations on possible air quality standards shortly. More generally, Government will continue to fund research into links between air quality and, in particular, respiratory health.

Revenue Support Grant, Sunderland

26. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of the reduced revenue support grant on the provision of services in Sunderland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Sunderland's budget is properly a matter for the city council. Within our provisional capping criteria, the council may increase its expenditure in 1995–96 by 0.5 per cent.

Water Supply

27. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will arrange to meet representatives of the water authorities to discuss quality and reliability of water supply.

Mr. Atkins: From time to time Ministers and officials do meet representatives of the water companies to discuss matters of mutual interest. My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans for meetings to discuss quality and reliability of water supply.

House Building

28. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet representatives of the house building industry to discuss prospects for new house building in the coming year and the impact of Government policies.

Mr. Gummer: I met representatives of the volume housebuilders study group on 13 February. Discussion covered a number of topics of mutual interest.

Housing Market

29. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the prospects for the housing market in 1995.

Mr. Curry: The housing market will continue to benefit from a range of Government policies, including the right to buy, cash incentives and shared ownership schemes for local authority and housing association tenants, and from our economic policies which have produced low interest rates and made home ownership more affordable than for many years.

Urban Environment

30. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to improve the quality of the urban environment.

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department launched last summer a wide-ranging initiative, "Quality in Town and Country", designed to see what more can be done to improve the quality of the built environment, in city, town and village. In the light of the overwhelmingly positive response, we are considering how best Government and others can take forward this initiative. The Government already help to improve the quality of life in urban and other areas through the single regeneration budget, including city challenge partnerships. My Department has also issued planning policy guidance aimed at sustaining the vitality and viability of town centres, and encouraging effective town centre management.

Standard Spending Assessment, Leicester

31. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the percentage increase in the SSA for Leicester council between 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: On a comparable basis, Leicester city council's SSA increases by 2.6 per cent. from £40.340 million in 1994–95 to £41.396 million in 1995–96. This compares with an increase of 0.1 per cent. for non-metropolitan districts as a whole.

Out-of-town Shopping Developments

32. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new out-of-town shopping developments await planning approval subject to DOE appeal.

Mr. Gummer: There are 18 appeals awaiting a decision.

National Parks

33. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he will take of the views of national park residents on his plans to change the structure of national park authorities.

Mr. Atkins: Our proposals for the future administration of the national parks are set out in part III of the Environment Bill, which is currently being considered in another place. No doubt my hon. Friend and other hon. Members whose constituents live in the parks will make their views known when the Bill comes before the House in due course.

Lobbying Groups

34. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on meeting lobbying groups.

Mr. Gummer: I try to meet as many as possible of the various types of groups that wish to see me, and I listen carefully, with an open mind, to what they say.

Departmental Staff

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial resources, broken down by programme where possible, have been allocated and are to be allocated by each department to each Government office for the regions, in the financial years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House.

Public Bodies

Mr. Patten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those public bodies for which he retains departmental responsibility; which of these bodies have been identified as suitable for placing in the private sector; and by when it is expected each of these bodies will enter the private sector.

Mr. Gummer: Details of the public bodies for which I have departmental responsibility are listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1994". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library. In addition to the bodies listed in that publication I now have responsibility for two further executive non-departmental public bodies. These are:

Stonebridge Housing Action Trust, Brent
The National Forest Company

I announced plans in October 1994 to privatise the docklands light railway which is wholly owned by the London Docklands development corporation. The first step will be taken in 1996, when DLR operations will be franchised to the private sector for a period of about seven years. The second step will be taken at the end of the franchise period, when the aim will be to transfer the railway as a whole into the private sector.

There are no plans at present to privatise any of the other public bodies, but non-departmental public bodies are subject to a quinquennial review. Each such review considers the scope for privatising, contracting out or market testing all or part of the functions of the body. The Department's larger executive public bodies have programmes to contract out and market test parts of their work, where this is not already carried out in the private sector.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out a year-by-year projection from 2000 to 2010 of the projected level of sulphur dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom; and if he will indicate for each projected sulphur dioxide total the targets required under the United Nations economic commission's second sulphur protocol.

Mr. Atkins: Year-by-year projections from 2000 to 2010 are not available.

The most recent published projections of sulphur dioxide emissions, prepared by the Warren Spring Laboratory, now the National Environmental Technology Research Centre, were:

	'000 tonnes
	High	Low
2000	2.596	2.050
2005	2.200	1.890
2010	2.332	1.889

These figures represent 47 to 58 per cent., 53 to 61 per cent. and 52 to 61 per cent. reductions respectively against 1980 sulphur emissions. The protocol requires reductions in sulphur emissions against 1980 levels of 80 per cent. by 2010, to be achieved through intermediate targets of 50 per cent. by 2000 and 70 per cent. by 2005.

There have been considerable changes since these projections were prepared and the Government expect to produce revised projections this year, taking account of recent developments. These will provide a basis for consultation on a national strategy to achieve the protocol commitments.

Property Sales, Westminster

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties that are designated for sale have been empty in each of the wards within the borough of Westminster in the last (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) nine months, (d) 12 months and (e) 24 months.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the district auditor's interim report on Westminster city council's designated sales policy has caused his Department to review guidelines on relationships between members and officials in the control of local councils.

Mr. Robert. B. Jones: No.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines have been issued to local authorities since the district auditor's interim report on Westminster city council's designated sales policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government have said that they will consider whether there are any general lessons to be learned, when it is possible to do so without prejudice to the particular case in question. No guidelines have been issued by the Secretary of State to local authorities concerning housing sales since the district auditor published his provisional findings on the allegations relating to council house sales in Westminster, in January 1994. Designated sales take place under long-standing statutory consents for voluntary sales of housing as part of authorities' normal activities. Revised consents were issued in September 1994 and my Department is currently consulting the local authority associations on further revisions to those consents.

Consultants

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the framework of rules for engaging consultants by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities wishing to engage consultants must follow their own standing orders and obtain value for money. In this regard, the Audit Commission, in 1994, produced a good practice guide for local authorities called "Reaching the Peak? Getting Value for Money from Management Consultants".

McDonald's Restaurants Ltd.

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals his inspectors have heard against the refusal of councils to grant planning consent to McDonalds Restaurants Ltd.; and what were the results of the appeals in each of the last three years.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is not held in the Department's records.

Foleshill Gas Works

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with English Partnerships about grant to assist the development of the Foleshill gas work site.

Sir Paul Beresford: I understand that English Partnerships has reached agreement with British Gas about the grant required to develop phase I of the site and that a survey will be completed this month for British Gas to establish ground conditions on phase II of the site. A formal submission to the board of English Partnerships will be made shortly after that about the offer of a grant to British Gas.

Liquid Fuels

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate whether the secondary liquid fuel currently being burned by Rugby Cement at Barrington should be reclassified as hazardous waste.

Mr. Atkins: It is for waste regulation authorities to decide whether or not a material should be classified as a waste under the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994, and, if so, whether that waste should be considered special, under the Special Waste Regulations 1980. The Department of the Environment has issued guidance on what is a waste and what is not in its circular 11/94, and on how to determine whether or not a waste is special in waste management paper No. 23. I understand that Cambridge waste regulation authority has taken the view that the material in question is not waste.

Public Expenditure, Kent

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of public expenditure per head in the county of Kent.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authority net revenue expenditure per head of population in Kent in 1994–95 was budgeted to be £773. Central Government expenditure in Kent is not available.

Whitechapel Moors, North Devon

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of representations made to him relating to his decision over whether to call in the planning application for a leisure development at Whitechapel moors, north Devon.

Sir Paul Beresford: I will arrange for the hon. Member to receive copies of all the representations made about the proposed leisure development at Whitechapel moors, north Devon, as it would not be appropriate to place copies in the Library. Copies of all these representations have already been sent to the agents acting for the applicant and North Devon district council.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations underlay his Department's delay in calling in the planning application for a leisure development at Whitechapel moors, north Devon.

Sir Paul Bereford: I refer the hon. Member to the answers that I gave him on 2 November 1994, Official Report, columns 1152-53.

There was no undue delay in calling in the planning application.

On 21 December 1994 North Devon district council wrote to the Government office for the south-west indicating that it had resolved to grant planning permission for a leisure development at Whitechapel moors, north Devon. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State took full account of all the planning issues involved, and the representations received, and called in the application for his own determination on 19 January 1995—15 working days after receipt of the council's letter.

The planning issues which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wants considered at the public inquiry are set out in the call-in letter issued by the Government office for the south-west.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of housing benefit paid in the last year for which figures are available to private tenants renting properties previously acquired from local authorities under the right-to-buy scheme.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Council Tax

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost to date of processing appeals against council tax bandings.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The cost of work undertaken by the Valuation Office agency on council tax banding proposals and appeals in England between 1 April 1993 and 31 December 1994 was £56.2 million.

During the same period, the running costs of the valuation tribunals in dealing with all types of appeal, including non-domestic rating, council tax liability and valuation, were £18 million. Non-domestic rating cases accounted for a majority of this figure, but no exact breakdown is available.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties currently have exemption from council tax under each category of exemption.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest information on the number of properties in England under each class of exemption is as follows:

As at 7 June 1994	000s
A. Empty dwellings where works are required, under way or recently completed	89.5
B. Empty dwellings owned by charities	1.5
C. Dwellings left empty and unfurnished	201.5
D. Dwellings left empty by prisoners	1.0
E. Dwellings left empty by patients in hospitals and care homes	31.6
F. Dwellings left empty by deceased persons	57.5
G. Dwellings which are unfit etc.	10.4
H. Empty clergy dwellings	1.2
I. Dwellings left empty by people receiving care	5.9
J. Dwellings left empty by people providing care	0.7
K. Dwellings left empty by students	2.1
L. Repossessed dwellings	31.9
M. Halls of residence	9.2
N. Dwellings occupied solely by students or school leavers	98.5
O. Armed forces' accommodation	61.9
P. Visiting forces' accommodation	14.0
Q. Dwellings left empty by bankrupts	0.6
R. Vacant caravan sites and moorings	0.5
Total	620.0

The number of dwellings on the valuation list, including the 620,000 listed was 20,216,303.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the factors taken into account in the calculation of local authorities' standard spending assessments in order of importance.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The amounts allocated by each of the main indicators in the standard spending assessment formula for 1994-95 were set out in the standard spending assessment handbook 1994–95, a copy of which was placed in the Library. The corresponding figures for the SSAs for 1995–96 will be set out in the next edition of the handbook which is expected to be published in April.

Homelessness

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has received on the extent of homelessness among young single people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: In central London, where the problem of rough sleeping is greatest, a count undertaken last November by voluntary sector agencies found 288 people sleeping rough, of whom two were aged under 18 and a further 45 aged 18 to 25.

Outside central London, I know of no reliable information about the number of young homeless people. It is properly the responsibility of each local authority to consider the housing needs of all people in their area, including young homeless people.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future of the British Waterways Board.

Mr. Atkins: I have today published a consultation paper continuing the review of navigation functions of the British Waterways Board and the National Rivers Authority recommended by the Select Committee on the Environment. I intend to consider carefully the views of those who respond and, therefore, I cannot yet say what effect the outcome of this consultation exercise may have on the future of the British Waterways Board.

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he hopes to fulfil his undertaking to inspect the Forth rail bridge.

Mr. Gummer: Soon.

Air Pollution

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what study his Department has made of changes in air pollution levels in (a) Manchester and (b) other United Kingdom cities; what comparable information he has about the situation in major industrial cities elsewhere in the EU; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Changes in annual average levels of pollution in Manchester and other United Kingdom cities are set out in the 16th edition of the Department of the Environment "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Information on levels of pollution in major industrial cities elsewhere in the European Union is not held centrally.

A European topic centre of the European Environment Agency on air quality has been established to assess, among other issues, environmental data requirements, collection and reporting, with a view to improving information on urban air quality across Europe.

Ozone Layer (Damage)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action the United Kingdom is taking to phase out the production of substances damaging the ozone layer.

Mr. Atkins: The production of halons, chlorofluorocarbons and carbon tetrachloride has already ceased, and methyl chloroform will cease by the end of this year. The Community has introduced a new European regulation which phases out hydrochlorofluorocarbons by 2015. This is directly applicable in United Kingdom law.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State is not aware that any legal action has been taken during the last five years by his Department in relation to a consultancy contract.

London Boroughs (Rents)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the planned average rent, (b) the planned actual average rent rise and (c) the planned percentage rent rise of each of the London boroughs.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities set their own rents and are currently in the process of doing so for 1995–96. For the purposes of calculating housing revenue account subsidy, each authority is given an average weekly guideline rent. These are as follows for all London boroughs for 1995–96:

	Guideline rents
	Rents	Increase over 1994–95
Borough	(£)	(£)	(per cent.)
Barking and Dagenham	36.98	2.82	8.2

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 411, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Sir Paul Beresford: No central record is maintained of the total number of appointments made by the Department. However, information readily available indicates that 105 public appointments were made during 1994.

Regeneration Policies

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new jobs have been created through regeneration policies since April 1992.

Sir Paul Beresford: Since April 1992, there has been a reduction of more than 500,000 in the number of unemployed. In that time, my Department's policies have been successful in creating or safeguarding over 340,000 jobs.

EC Eco-management Scheme

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to assist small firms to improve their environmental performance when the European Community eco-management and audit scheme becomes fully operational in April.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government strongly supports the EC eco-management and audit scheme which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be launching on 10 April. The scheme will give public recognition, throughout the European Union, to manufacturing businesses which adopt a positive approach to managing their environmental impacts. I am now delighted to be able to announce that we will be introducing a new grant to help small companies participate. The grant will be known as the small company environmental and energy management assistance scheme or SCEEMAS.

SCEEMAS will be an adaptation of the existing energy management assistance scheme. It will help small firms address the whole spectrum of environmental issues facing them. Energy will remain an important element since the scope for saving energy must always be considered in establishing an environmental management system. Eligibility will be confined to manufacturing industry and to firms with fewer than 250 employees.

The details of the grant will be refined over the next few weeks and its management will be contracted out, subject to satisfactory competitive tenders being received. I expect SCEEMAS to come into operation during May.

To make way for SCEEMAS, the existing grant scheme will be phased out over the next year. Fresh applications under the existing scheme will be allowed up to 31 March; applications for successive stages will be allowed up to 29 September; with final claims allowed up to 31 January 1996. My officials will be writing to consultants involved in the scheme in the next few days, explaining the arrangements.

The new grant should play an important role in promoting environmental management among smaller firms, and assisting them to become more competitive.

Inland Waterways

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to continue the review of British Waterways and the National Rivers Authority's navigation functions recommended by the Environment Select Committee.

Mr. Atkins: I have today published a consultation paper continuing the review of British Waterways' and the National Rivers Authority's navigation functions begun in 1991. Copies have been placed in the House libraries.

The paper seeks views on how we might secure the best possible stewardship of our waterways for future generations. A number of options are identified, including those of transferring all the NRA's existing navigations to BW and vice versa, achieving more effective management through closer co-operation between existing authorities, and the possibility of creating a new single statutory authority for navigation. Our waterways are a unique asset and must serve a wide range of interests and uses. This consultation aims to give all those concerned about the waterways the opportunity to make their views on the best way forward known to Government.

Docklands Light Railways

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extension to Lewisham of the docklands light railway.

Mr. Curry: I have today given my approval for Docklands Light Railway Ltd. to shortlist four private consortia to tender for the concession to finance, build, own and maintain the extension of the DLR to Lewisham, under the Government's private finance initiative. The competition is expected to last about nine months, with the concession contract being concluded before the end of this year. Construction should start in 1996, and the extension should then open to passenger services in 1999.

Private sector interest in the project has been strong, with seven consortia representing a wide range of finance, construction and project management expertise from the United Kingdom, Germany, Italy, Spain and Japan competing to prequalify. The four selected by DLR Ltd. to proceed to tendering are, in alphabetical order:

Brown and Root, AMEC and Dragados
Docklands Link Group
Lewisham Extension Company
Light Rail Group.

In l atement last October, the Secretary of State indicated that the project could not be financially viable \ Cutty Sark station included and that the station could therefore be built only if its costs were to be met in full by third parties. He said that contributors should agree unconditionally and contractually by the end of January 1995 to meet the actual costs of the station as they arose during the construction period. I have to report that no funding package was submitted by third parties. The tender documents to be issued by DLR Ltd. for the Lewisham project will therefore make it clear that bids are being invited on a basis of six stations, without provision for a station at Cutty Sark.

Greenwich council, local landowners and other interested bodies wish to discuss with the four prequalified bidders for the Lewisham extension the possibility of their making separate contractual and financial arrangements to provide a station at Cutty Sark. Those discussions must neither delay the Lewisham project nor prejudice its financial arrangements. The decision whether to enter into negotiations or reach an agreement with the council and other local interests will be for the private bidders to make, according to their own commercial judgment. I have asked DLR Ltd. to provide information, as requested, to assist any discussions between third parties.

I am pleased to confirm that the Lewisham line will have a new station at Island Gardens just north of the river, which will be 600 m from Cutty Sark via the Thames foot tunnel and another alongside the Greenwich BR station, some 700 m south west of the Cutty Sark. Further south it will have stations at Deptford Bridge, Elverson Road and Lewisham town centre, all in the Deptford city challenge area. The extension will therefore dramatically improve access to Greenwich and Lewisham, and provide new cross-river access to and from the City, Docklands and Stratford for local residents, tourists and north Kent commuters. It will be a splendid addition to the capital's public transport network and will reinforce the Government's commitment to promote regeneration in the Thames gateway.

Credit Liabilities

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the provision for credit liabilities as at 31 March 1994; and what is his estimate of the total of the provision for credit liabilities represented by cash for each local authority and its total for England.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 9 February 1995]: Returns to the Department indicate that the total amount that English local authorities had set aside for debt repayment at 31 March 1994 was £6 billion.

The Department has no detailed information as to the extent to which these amounts are represented by cash held by local authorities, but is aware that many authorities have made use of the cash involved to meet their financing needs.

Opencast Gravel Mining, Avon Valley

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are for opencast gravel mining in the Avon valley.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Proposals for minerals extraction in Hampshire are set out in the deposit draft of the Hampshire minerals and waste local plan, which is due to be considered at a public local inquiry commencing on 21 March. There are no proposals in the draft plan for gravel working in the Avon valley.

Countryside Stewardship Sites

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, columns 15–18, if he will name and provide a grid reference for each countryside stewardship site; and if he will indicate those sites where access is available beyond September 2004.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 14 February 1995]: A list of the names of countryside stewardship sites has been placed in the House Library. Details of grid references of sites are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Countryside stewardship agreements are signed for 10 years. Contractual obligations to provide access under current stewardship agreements will not extend beyond September 2004 when the last of these agreements terminate. Existing rights of way are unaffected.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Compensation

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent on criminal damage and emergency provisions compensation in each of the last 10 years.

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Denis Stanley. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Denis Stanley to Ms Majorie Mowlam, dated 13 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply, on behalf of the Compensation Agency, to your recent Question regarding criminal damage and emergency provisions compensation.

The following amounts of compensation were paid out on criminal damage and emergency provisions in each of the last ten years:

Year	Criminal damage compensation	£ million Emergency provisions compensation
1984–85	19.9	Not available
1985–86	17.2	Not available
1986–87	15.2	0.3
1987–88	19.0	0.6
1988–89	20.6	1.3
1989–90	22.1	1.2
1990–91	22.7	1.7
1991–92	33.1	1.9
1992–93	75.9	2.8
1993–94	67.9	2.6

Fair Employment

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 168, if he will list the 58 consultants who undertook assignments under the small firms fair employment scheme.

Mr. Ancram: The list of consultants is as follows:

Boundary Commission

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, columns 167–68, on what basis officials of the political affairs division of the Northern Ireland Office gave guidance as to the revised recommendations of the Northern Ireland Boundary Commission prior to the publication of those recommendations.

Mr. Ancram: In accordance with normal briefing practice, on receipt of the deputy chairman's letter of 16 January 1995 the political affairs division was asked to contribute to the advice for Ministers on the possible electoral consequences if the revised recommendations of the Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland were implemented.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Sir John Wheeler: None.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 9 February 1995]: The information requested is not available in all the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office for each year. However, from the information available, expenditure on external consultants, including management consultants in 1994 prices was:

Year	Expenditure (£000)
1987–88	1,580
1988–89	8,889
1989–90	14,451
1990–91	17,753
1991–92	26,141
1992–93	29,662
1993–94	30,286
1994–95	[1]16,933

[1] Available estimates to date.

As consultants are, in many instances, engaged to contribute particular skills to an element of a much larger process, it is not possible to quantify cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in but, in each instance, consultants were engaged on the basis of best value for money.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 420, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Sir John Wheeler: From 1 February 1994 to 31 January 1995, 395 individuals were appointed or reappointed to the bodies listed in the publication entitled "Public Bodies 1994", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Delorean Motor Car Co.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the total and breakdown of legal fees and all other costs associated with the action being pursued against Arthur Anderson in connection with the collapse of the Delorean Motor Car Co. and related matters; on what date the action was commenced; when it is expected to be concluded; and if he will make a statement on progress of that action to date.

Mr. Ancram: The legal fees and other costs associated with the action are a matter between the Government and their lawyers and disclosure while the action continues would not be in the public interest. The action was commenced on 15 February 1985. Arthur Anderson and Co. has filed a motion for summary judgement which is at present under consideration by the court. A date for trial cannot be set until the court has ruled on that motion and it is not possible to state when the action will be concluded.

Sheep Pox

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of sheep pox have been reported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: Sheep pox has never been reported in Northern Ireland.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the annual expenditure per capita of the Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

1992–93: 79p

1993–94: 87p

1994–95: 94p

Criminal Justice

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provisions there are in the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 1994 to protect the principle that a person is innocent until proven guilty by due process of law.

Sir John Wheeler: Generally speaking the prosecution bears the burden of proving all the elements of the offence necessary to establish guilt. It would not be necessary therefore for the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 1994 to provide any specific protection as the common law rule is not affected by this legislation.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMEMT ADMINISTRATION

Crown Agents

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are being made to meet expenditure by the Overseas Development Administration in 1994–95 in connection with the proposal to change the status of the Crown Agents.

Mr. Baldry: As announced in the gracious speech on 16 November 1994, the Government intend to bring forward legislation to change the status of the Crown Agents. In advance of the enactment of the legislation, expenditure will be incurred on preparatory advisory services and suppliers have been contracted to provide these services.

Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a spring supplementary estimate for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office: Overseas Development Administration external assistance vote, class II, vote 5. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure, estimated at £59,000, will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

The Attorney-General: There are none.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 399, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

The Attorney-General: None.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the severance payments made to special advisers in each of the last five years indicating (a) the amount and (b) the date.

The Attorney-General [holding answer 1 February 1995]: There have been no special advisers in the departments for which I am responsible in the past five years.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council

Ms Lestor: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many women are currently on the Privy Council; and how many (a) men and (b) women have been appointed since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council currently includes 18 women. Since 1979, 266 men and 13 women have been appointed to the Privy Council.

House of Commons Medical Facilities

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what medical provision is available in the House to hon. Members and their staff who require medical but not accident and emergency help from a hospital.

Mr. Michael J. Martin [holding answer 10 February 1995]: The staff of the occupational health service, located off the Lower Waiting Hall, are available to advise Members or their staff, and staff of the House, who require medical help. It is their practice to deal with any small-scale accidents or emergencies, and to arrange for the transfer of more serious cases of this kind to St. Thomas's hospital. The service is not intended to provide medical treatment for which an individual's own general practitioner would be more suitable.

PRIME MINISTER

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Office or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

The Prime Minister: None.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, columns 398-99, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

The Prime Minister: I have made 18 appointments since January 1994 to bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1994".

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what action he plans to take to ensure a higher priority within public spending to the provision of intensive care beds.

The Prime Minister: It is for each purchasing authority to determine the appropriate level and type of provision of intensive therapy, and to priorities these accordingly based on an assessment of the total needs of its population. For their part, the Government have undertaken to increase the real level of resources devoted to the health service.

Education Priorities

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 9 February to the right hon. Member for Bridgewater (Mr. King), Official Report, column 452, if he will list those local education authorities which may need to look carefully at education priorities.

The Prime Minister: All local education authorities need to consider their priorities to ensure that they provide an effective and efficient service.

Hong Kong

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit Hong Kong in 1995.

Marchioness

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will (a) meet those who survived the sinking of the motor vessels Marchioness and their relatives, and (b) respond positively to the requests for legal aid to be granted to them for their representation at the forthcoming inquest.

The Prime Minister: My right Hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor would be willing to meet a delegation of survivors of the tragedy and their relatives. Legal aid is not available for representation at inquests. Subject to financial eligibility, advice and assistance may be available before the hearing under the green form scheme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have made commitments to the proposed UN peacekeeping force in Angola; how many troops are involved; and what provision has been made to provide the necessary logistical support for such an operation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The authorised maximum strength of United Nations Angolan unification mission III is 7,000 military personnel, 350 military observers and 260 civilian police observers. Some 30 countries have made offers of troops to UNAVEM III and the UN has accepted commitments from Brazil, Romania, India, Uruguay, Pakistan and Zimbabwe. Logistical support for the operation will be handled by a civilian contractor to be appointed by the United Nations.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how quickly the UN believes it can install United Nations Angolan verification mission III in Angola; and what commitment he has made to assist.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council resolution authorising the deployment of UNAVEM III was adopted on 8 February. That resolution called for the phased deployment of forces subject to a report from the UN Secretary-General that certain conditions have been met for example, an effective cessation of hostilities and provision of all relevant military data. We are considering whether we are able to assist the operation.

Football Agents

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Norwegian Government concerning their investigation into the activities of football agents, with particular reference to Mr. Rune Hauge.

Mr. David Davis: None.

Ministerial Travel (Hong Kong)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no firm plans to visit Hong Kong in 1995, but he intends to continue to pay regular visits to the territory.

Cyprus

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the accession of Cyprus to the European Union; and what conditions he attaches to such accession.

Mr. David Davis: We agreed at the Corfu European Council that Cyprus would be involved in the next phase of enlargement. We welcome that prospect. The Council is currently reviewing Cyprus's application. We want to see the whole island join the EU, and want to help remove the obstacles presented by the intercommunal dispute.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the proposal of the French Foreign Minister for holding a summit meeting in Paris to which representatives of Bosnia, Croatia and Serbia would be invited.

Mr. David Davis: We, along with our EU and contact group partners, support the French Government's initiative. If successful, such a meeting could be a major advance towards political settlements of the conflicts of former Yugoslavia.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Goodlad: My Department has not taken court proceedings against a consultancy firm in the last five years. On one occasion during that period a legal dispute with a consultancy firm was referred to arbitration. This concerned the alleged failure of an architectural practice properly to carry out design, supervision and administrative functions.

Antarctica

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to offer former bases in Antarctica to non-governmental organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: Our policy is to offer, where appropriate, UK former bases in Antarctica to other Antarctic treaty parties, to promote the spirit of scientific co-operation between states foreseen by the Antarctic treaty. There are no plans to change this policy.

European Movement

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial assistance the European Movement received from his Department in 1994; and what commitment has been given for 1995 or future years.

Mr. Baldry: The European Movement was given a one-off grant of £10,000 in 1993, which was paid in January 1994. It has received no financial assistance this year. No commitment has been given for 1995, or for future years.

Equipment Sales (Human Rights)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he gives to the Secretary of State for Defence on the transfer of equipment which is likely to violate human rights.

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 30 January 1995]: If my Department judged that defence equipment, if transferred, would be likely to be used to violate human rights, it would advise against the transfer.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington : To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about reported Sudanese military air attacks on Uganda, the reasons for such activities and the British and international response.

Mr. Baldry: We are aware of the recent incident in which two bombs were dropped on Ugandan territory near the border with the Sudan. The Sudanese authorities have stated that this was an accident and continue to maintain normal relations with Uganda. There has therefore been no requirement for a formal British or international response.

Defence Exports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account the Government take, in considering applications for licences for the export of defence equipment, of its likely use for internal security purposes.

Mr. David Davis: We do not issue licences for the export of equipment likely to be used for internal repression.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Escaped Prisoners, Parkhurst

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of searching for and recapturing the three prisoners who escaped from Parkhurst prison in January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 15 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of searching for and recapturing the three prisoners who escaped from Parkhurst prison in January.

It is difficult to give a definitive answer to your Question as some costs have not yet been finally calculated. The estimated additional cost to the Prison Service of mounting the operation to recapture the escaped prisoners is about £25,000.

The cost of the police operations from the beginning of the incident until Thursday 9 February was £252,000. It is not anticipated that this figure will increase substantially.

Group 4 Ltd.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the benefits from the contract with Group 4 Ltd. for court services in Merseyside, Greater Manchester and north Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Peter Thurnham, dated 15 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about court escorting and custody services in the North West.

Group 4 has been awarded the contract for the court escort and custody service in the North West (Area 6). Based on the tender submitted, the terms of the contract and prior experience, this contract is expected to lead to fewer escapes, a better quality service to the courts, less disruption to the police and Prison Service, and lower costs.

Experience in the East Midlands and the Metropolitan Police District shows that there are fewer escapes than occurred when the police and Prison Service were responsible for escorts. In the East Midlands, where Group 4 has been running the service for more than a year, escapes are now 40 per cent. fewer than under the previous arrangements.

Contract standards are enforceable, with penalties for non-compliance. Two full time Prison Service monitors will be based in the contract area carrying out regular spot checks. In a recent survey in the East Midlands, over 90 per cent. of court staff said that Group 4 was providing a service as good or better than under the previous arrangements.

Contracting out this task also relieves prison and police officers of a non core task, enabling them to concentrate on more important duties. Police forces and prisons will be relieved of a task which is unpredictable in its demands and will no longer have to redeploy officers to meet unexpected peaks. They will be able to plan better how to use their resources most effectively.

The overall cost saving, following the award of Area 6 to Group 4 is estimated to be £11 million or 14 per cent. Duplication between the police and Prison Service will be eliminated.

Prisons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the salary scales for (a) prison officers and (b) prison auxiliaries; and if he will distinguish between the duties of each.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 15 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the salary scales for a) prison officers and b) prison auxiliaries; and to distinguish between the duties of each.

The salary scales are from £15,630 to £19,491 for prison officers and £8,348 to £9,299 for prison auxiliaries. In addition to their basic salary, all prison auxiliaries receive 12.6 per cent. shift disturbance allowance and additional hours worked are paid by overtime. Prison officers are compensated for additional hours by time off in lieu.

Prison officers are required to undertake and pass formal training at a Prison Service College and accept that they are fully mobile. They are required to demonstrate a wide range of skills and competencies in dealing with inmates in order to perform their duties, which include supervising activities, searching, escorting prisoners, counselling, offending behaviour programmes, advising on legal procedures, sentence planning, categorising prisoners, crisis intervention and support, report writing, security information collation, disciplinary action, interviewing, incident response (including control and restraint techniques) and pre-release course leadership.

Prison auxiliaries are non mobile and perform a wide range of support duties, such as staff mess caterer, gate keeper, records officer, escorting contractors and assisting in control rooms.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce the successful bids for the next phase of private prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 15 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the next phase of contracted out prisons.

The next phase will be the first two design, construct, manage and finance prisons, one in Bridgend in South Wales and another in Merseyside.

We have received a first round of tenders and we are discussing those with the tenderers under the negotiated procedure of the EU Services Directive. We hope to issue a final invitation to tender in the next few weeks.

After consideration of tenders, we would expect to make an announcement of the successful contractor or contractors in the spring or early summer.

Radio Broadcasts

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what monitoring he carries out of radio broadcasts to see whether they comply with the Race Relations Acts or Public Order Acts;

(2) what investigations he has made into the organisation, Muslim Community Radio;

(3) how many staff are employed monitoring radio broadcasts to consider whether they are racially offensive or incite racial hatred;

(4) what guidelines are issued to the Radio Authority with regard to broadcasting of racially offensive or anti-semitic material.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Section 22 of the Public Order Act 1986 makes it an offence to broadcast material intended to stir up racial hatred. The investigation of any complaints is a matter for the police and prosecuting authorities.

The Home Office has no role in the monitoring of radio broadcasts. The responsibilities of the Radio Authority are a matter for the Department of National Heritage.

Immigration Detainees

Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people have been detained at Manchester airport under Immigration Act powers in the last two years;

(2) how many people were detained on entry at Manchester airport over the past two years; and what was their country of origin;

(3) how many people detained at Manchester airport under Immigration Act powers were subsequently transferred to other detention centres or prisons over the past two years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information set out shows the number of people detained at Manchester airport overnight or longer broken down by nationality. Of these, 94 were detained on entry in 1994 and an estimated 82 in 1993. The other information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to re-examine the provisions of section 3 of the Football (Offences) Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have no specific plans to do so. We do, however, keep under review all of the provisions of the Football (Offences) Act 1991, as well as other football legislation concerned with public order.

Al Fayed Brothers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to take decisions on applications for British citizenship by (a) Mr. Ali Al Fayed and (b) Mr. Mohammed Al Fayed; if he has all the information he requires on which to take decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As I explained in reply to a question from the hon. Member on 31 October 1994, Official Report, column 947, I do not propose to comment further on the detailed processing of these applications.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During the period specified, I am not aware that the Home Office has had occasion to take legal action against a consultancy firm.

Asylum Seekers

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reinforce asylum decision taking procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Government intend to undertake a significant reinforcement of the asylum determination system, and of the independent immigration appellate authorities in respect of their responsibility for hearing asylum appeals.

The United Kingdom fully adheres to its obligations towards genuine refugees. But the number of abusive or otherwise undeserving asylum applications has grown massively since the late 1980s. Currently, nearly 80 per cent. of asylum applications are rejected outright, and the great majority of appeals are dismissed. It is not in the interests of genuine asylum seekers for the system to be overloaded with applications from people whose real motives have nothing to do with a well-founded fear of persecution.

Additional money is being made available to fund 150 additional determination staff in the asylum division of the Home Office, and there will be a corresponding reinforcement in the independent appeal system. Once the additional staff are in post and trained, it will make possible an additional 7,000 initial decisions annually.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what use is being made of the power in section 7 of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 to curtail the leave to enter or remain of an asylum seeker at the same time as his claim is being rejected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The use of the curtailment power has been reviewed in the light of the first year's experience of the operation of the Act. The curtailment power has deliberately been used sparingly while the new asylum procedures were settling in. I have concluded that it would now be right to make wider use of this power.

A refused asylum applicatant with extant leave at the time of his application may, if the curtailment provision in section 7 of the 1993 Act is not used, appeal twice, first against the asylum decision, and then, if he overstays, against deportation. This is wasteful of resources, leads to delay and is not in the interests of either genuine refugees or an efficient asylum system.

Greater use of curtailment will speed up appeal procedures and make it easier to remove those with existing leave to enter or remain who have sought to abuse the asylum procedures. Genuine asylum seekers are better served by a system that deals with undeserving cases swiftly and effectively.

Section 7 of the 1993 Act allows curtailment of any existing leave to enter or remain at the time of refusal of an asylum claim. Curtailment takes effect immediately the decision is served. The applicant's appeal right is triggered by the service of a notice of intention to deport. The applicant's detention may be ordered pending his deportation. If the applicant decides to appeal, then all relevant aspects of the case, including the asylum and deportation aspects, may be addressed by a special adjudicator at a single hearing.

During the passage of what became the 1993 Act, the Government indicated that it was not the intention that curtailment should be used either automatically or punitively. We propose no change of approach in these respects.

However, discussion of curtailment during the passage of the Bill tended to focus on the case of a person who is admitted as a bona fide tourist but makes an asylum application soon after, thus revealing that the real intention in coming here was to apply for asylum. Experience since implementation of the 1993 Act suggests that it would restrict the curtailment power too narrowly to confine its use to cases of this sort.

At present, some two thirds of all asylum applications in the United Kingdom are made after entry, rather than at the port. More than half of these in-country applications are made by people with existing leave to enter or remain. In the bulk of cases, the asylum application is not made immediately after leave to enter or remain has been granted, but shortly before it is due to expire. We have concluded that in these cases there is significant scope for proper use of the curtailment power.

There will in future be a general presumption that curtailment will be used where available except where this would be inappropriate. Each case will continue to be looked at on its individual merits and, as before, curtailment will be neither automatic nor punitive. Cases where curtailment might be inappropriate include those where it is right to allow existing leave to run after the asylum decision has been taken; where the applicant qualifies for leave to remain under another category of the immigration rules—for example, if they are married to a British citizen or person settled here; or where there are compelling compassionate or other circumstances which would make it inappropriate to proceed to deportation action. Where the curtailment power is used, a notice of intention to deport will normally be served at the same time. This is necessary in order to trigger a right of appeal against the refusal of asylum. It will still be open to the applicant to leave voluntarily, either before or, if it is unsuccessful, after the appeal.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the total cost to public funds of the Metropolitan police in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: As police authority for the Metropolitan police district, I have approved estimates which provide for net revenue expenditure of £1,687.828 million in 1995–96.

The receiver for the Metropolitan police district is issuing, with my approval, a precept of £47.86 per property in band D of the council tax valuation band for Metropolitan police purposes.

I have discussed the estimates for the Metropolitan police expenditure in 1995–96 with representatives of the London local authority associations.

Boundary Commission for Wales

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take on the fourth periodical report of the Boundary Commission for Wales.

Mr. Howard: I have today laid before Parliament the fourth periodical report of the Boundary Commission for Wales together with a draft Order in Council for giving effect, without modifications, to the recommendations contained in the report.

SCOTLAND

Contagious Agalactia

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of contagious agalactia have occurred in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: No cases of contagious agalactia have been recorded since it was made notifiable on 1 January 1993. Official records are not available before that date.

Sheep Pox

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of sheep pox have been reported in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: No cases of sheep pox have been recorded in Scotland since 1985.

Power Generation

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to change Government policy in respect of directing the Scottish utilities, Scottish Power and Scottish Hydro to accept Scottish Nuclear's total generation production at any time.

Mr. Kynoch: Scottish Power and Scottish Hydro-Electric purchase all of Scottish Nuclear's output of electricity under the terms of the nuclear energy agreement. Any change in this commercial contract would be a matter for the three companies.

Strathclyde Fire Brigade

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many malicious calls were made to Strathclyde fire brigade in (a) Inverclyde and (b) Strathclyde in each of the past three years; and, of these, how many led to successful prosecutions in the district courts in (i) Inverclyde and (ii) Strathclyde.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Relevant information is as follows:

Mountain Rescue Teams

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to require those who benefit from the services of Scottish mountain rescue teams, and who subsequently receive payments from newspapers to provide details of such rescues, to pay over such sums to the rescue services in question; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I cannot commend too highly the work carried out by our mountain rescue teams, the members of which provide their services free of charge. Although it is most disappointing when a rescued person seeks to sell the story to a newspaper and does not donate the proceeds to the rescue services concerned, I do not consider it appropriate for the Government to legislate in the manner proposed.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what compensation will be available for staff made redundant as a result of reorganisation of local government in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kynoch: I am laying before the House today regulations setting out the compensation which will be made available, in general, to local authority staff who may be made redundant or prematurely retired as a result of local government reorganisation in Scotland. Further regulations will be laid shortly covering members of the teachers' superannuation scheme who are in administrative posts and who may be similarly affected. Copies of the regulations will be placed in the Library.

In determining the compensation package, I have given careful consideration to the comments received on the draft proposals which were circulated for consultation at the end of last year. In response to these comments, I have simplified the administrative arrangements and, as indicated, will be bringing forward regulations to provide similar arrangements for members of the teachers' superannuation scheme who are in administrative posts in local authorities. I believe local authorities will welcome these changes.

I believe the compensation package being made available represents a sensible and balanced approach to an important issue and one which will allow authorities and their staff to take forward the necessary planning for transition to the new unitary authorities.

Child Witnesses

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, when he expects to extend the provision of closed circuit television for the taking of children's evidence in the High Court and criminal trials in the sheriffs courts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following consultation with the Lord Justice General and the sheriffs principal, arrangements are being made to extend these provisions from 3 April 1995 to the whole of Scotland. The necessary facilities will be provided in one court house in each sheriffdom.

Boundary Commission Report

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to present to Parliament the report of the Boundary Commission for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The report has been laid before Parliament today, together with the draft of an Order in Council for giving effect to the recommendations.

Trading Standards

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to safeguard the trading standards service in the future local government structure.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 14 February 1995]: The trading standards service is a local authority function and I will expect the new councils to give careful consideration to how this important function should be provided in the new structure, including exploring the use of joint arrangements. Should suitable arrangements fail to be made, my right hon. Friend has powers under section 20 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 to establish a joint board.

Mature Students

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students in Scotland currently benefit from the mature students allowance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 February 1995]: In the academic year 1993–94—the latest period for which complete figures are available—the number of Scottish domiciled students qualifying for a mature students' allowance as part of their means-tested maintenance award under the students' allowances scheme was 7,272.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979 in 1994 prices.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Expenditure by my Department and its agencies on advertising, based on 1994 prices, has been:

Year	£
1993–94	1,874,000
1992–93	1,648,000
1991–92	2,104,000
1990–91	1,911,000
1989–90	2,713,000
1988–89	1,470,000

Figures in the form requested are not available for 1979–80 to 1987–88. Total expenditure on information publicity for each year of that period, at 1994 prices, was:

Year	£
1979–80	629,000
1980–81	744,000
1981–82	724,000
1982–83	664,000
1983–84	592,000
1984–85	1,102,000

Year	£
1985–86	1,001,000
1986–87	1,228,000
1987–88	1,507,000

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 9 February 1995]: A full reply could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, I refer the hon. Member to my answers to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 21 February 1994, Official Report, column 51, and to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 16 March 1994, Official Report, column 660, which contain much of the information sought.

EMPLOYMENT

Saddlery

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the prospects for young people to enter, and receive training for, the saddlery trade; if he will support the continuing provision of centres of excellence within the trade for the provision of training; and what plans he has to ensure that employment prospects in the industry are strengthened.

Mr. Paice: The prospects for young people entering and receiving training in the saddlery trade are very good. The industry is interested in developing a modern apprenticeship framework which will enhance and improve existing opportunities.

The industry is successful in the domestic and overseas markets and should be responsible for primary support for centres of excellence. Young people are, of course, eligible for support through youth training. Individual training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies have flexibility in addressing the needs of their local labour markets.

Training

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of people who took part in schemes run under the auspices of employment training and employment action progressed to further training as a result of their scheme in the years 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Mr. Paice: Of those leaving employment training in Great Britain in both 1991–92 and 1992–3, 2 per cent. went into another Government training programme. The only full year for which data are available for employment action is 1992–93. Of those leaving EA in Great Britain in that year, 11 per cent. went into another Government training programme.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, how many young people with severe disabilities are currently participating on a youth training scheme; how many are awaiting a position on a youth training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: Of those leaving youth training in England and Wales in the period April to September 1994, 5 per cent. had a disability or health problem.

There are no figures available for the number of disabled people waiting for a position on a YT scheme.

Ministerial Travel (Hong Kong)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to travel to Hong Kong.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total assets available to South Thames TEC prior to it going into receivership.

Mr. Paice: This is a matter for the receiver. A list of South Thames training and enterprise council's assets and liabilities is still in the process of being drawn up.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what reasons his Department is asserting preferential creditor status with regard to the receivership of South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: The Department is not a preferential creditor with regard to South Thames training and enterprise council. The Department is a secured creditor as a result of the debenture with the TEC. Where, as in the case of South Thames TEC, public money is at risk, the Department has a duty to protect it. Were secured creditor status to be waived, this would not be possible. The debenture provides for a relationship between the Department and the administrative receiver which enables it, consistent with the receiver's legal responsibilities, to influence the management of the contract with the Department so as to minimise the disruption caused by the receivership to individuals on Government programmes within the South Thames TEC area.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the South Thames TEC assets will go to his Department as preferential creditor; and how much will go to the training providers owed money by the TEC.

Mr. Paice: The receiver is currently still in the process of drawing up a list of South Thames training and enterprise council's assets and liabilities. Until this is known, I am not in a position to make a statement about the division of assets between the Department and other creditors.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Miss Widdecombe: Records held by the Department and its agencies do not differentiate between consultancy firms and other organisations. It would be disproportionately costly to examine all case records manually.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 461, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1994, 201 appointments were made to the public bodies which are the responsibility of the Employment Department group.

Unemployment

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures showing the number of unemployed persons with dependent children who have been unemployed for (a) less than six months, (b) six to 12 months and (c) 12 months or more.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Latest estimates from the summer 1994 labour force survey for Great Britain show that there were 785,000 International Labour Organisation unemployed parents with dependent children. Of these, 297,000 had been ILO unemployed for less than six months; 138,000 had been ILO unemployed for six to 12 months and 349,000 had been ILO unemployed for over one year.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish the latest figures showing the number of children living in families with an unemployed head;

(2) if he will publish the latest figures showing the number of children living in families headed by a person who has been unemployed for (a) less than six months, (b) six to 12 months and (c) 12 months or more.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Latest estimates from the summer 1994 labour force survey for Great Britain show that there were 1,103,000 children living in families with an ILO unemployed head. Of these, 297,000 children lived in a family where the head had been ILO unemployed for less than six months; 170,000 in a family where the head had been ILO unemployed for six to 12 months and 635,000 in a family where the head had been ILO unemployed for over a year.

Ethnic Minorities

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his oral answer of 7 February to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey), Official Report, column 124, (1) if he will make a statement regarding measures he is taking to improve the working of the labour market which will address discrimination faced by ethnic minorities;

(2) what are the measures he has taken to tailor the most effective help for those facing prejudice on the grounds of race when looking for a job.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 13 February 1995]: The Race Relations Act 1976 makes racial discrimination in employment matters generally unlawful and anyone who feels that they have been discriminated against any complain to an industrial tribunal.

The Department's race relations employment advisory service advises employers on how to provide racial equality of opportunity. The Department has also published guidance for employers on this.

Helping people at a disadvantage in the labour market to find work is one of the strategic priorities set for training and enterprise councils. They are contractually obliged to ensure that they and their providers promote equality of opportunity in access to, treatment on and outcomes from their programmes. Performance-related funding encourages TECs to improve the rate of job outcomes from training for ethnic minority people.

The Employment Service applies the principles of racial equality of opportunity in its programmes and services. ES has taken a number of measures to assist people from ethnic minorities. Employers wishing to use ES provisions must comply with the Race Relations Act.

Jobsearch Plans

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy on whether it will be considered reasonable, in answer to question 18 of the draft jobsearch plan, to specify a figure below the benefit level that the jobseeker would get if he remained unemployed.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The draft jobsearch plan has been designed to enable jobseekers to set out information to help them prepare for the discussions with an employment adviser about their jobseeker's agreement. Whether a particular level of pay is reasonable will be determined in the light of the jobseeker's skills and experience, whether he has a previous occupation and the labour market conditions. As now, people with a previous occupation may be allowed a permitted period of up to 13 weeks during which they may refuse employment where the level or remuneration is lower than they are accustomed to receive. Legislation would stipulate that, as now, the level of remuneration cannot be a reason for refusing employment outside the permitted period.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance he proposes to issue in respect of the lowest wage that can be specified under question 18 of the draft jobsearch plan without a refusal of benefit resulting; and if he will make a statement about question 18 of the draft plan.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 3 February 1995]: The draft jobsearch plan has been designed to enable jobseekers to set out information to help them prepare for the discussions with an employment adviser about their jobseeker's agreement. A question about the level of pay is relevant for consideration of the permitted period during which an unemployed person may refuse employment where the level of remuneration is lower than he is accustomed to receive. The same question is already asked of all unemployed people when they make a claim for benefit. The draft Jobsearch plan simply carries forward existing practice in this respect.

Beyond any permitted period, the jobseeker may still be allowed to restrict his availability on grounds of pay for up to six months, provided that he retains reasonable prospects of securing employment, and that he becomes available for an increasing range of jobs. Legislation would stipulate that, as now, the level of remuneration cannot be a reason for refusing employment outside the permitted period.

Decisions on such issues will be a matter for independent adjudication officers who are not subject to guidance from the Secretary of State. It is for the chief adjudication officer to issue guidance based on the relevant legislation and case law.

Labour Statistics

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people left unemployment in each quarter since 1987 after (a) zero to 13 weeks unemployed, (b) 12 to 26 weeks unemployed, (c) 26 to 39 weeks unemployed, (d) 39 to 52 weeks unemployed, (e) 52 to 65 weeks unemployed, (f) 65 to 78 weeks unemployed, (g) 78 to 91 weeks unemployed, (h) 91 to 104 weeks unemployed, (i) 104 to 140 weeks unemployed, (j) 140 to 156 weeks unemployed and (k) 156 to 208 weeks unemployed; and what is the exit rate as a percentage of the relevant stock of unemployed for each duration.

Mr. Oppenheim: Unadjusted quarterly information on the stock of claimant unemployment, and on claimant outflows, by duration can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. No information is available on ILO unemployment flows.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many, and what proportion of people, in each year since 1974, who were (a) unemployed, (b) unemployed for more than one year and (c) unemployed for more than two years have (i) a degree, (ii) GCEs or GCSEs and (iii) no qualifications.

Mr. Oppenheim: For years 1984 onwards, this information is available from the labour force survey and can be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Industrial Accidents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if Her Majesty's Government support the decision of the European Parliament to amend the EC industrial hazards directive 82/501 so as to require EU member states to forward data on industrial accidents to the Commission and the European Environment Agency.

Mr. Oppenheim: I understand that the European Parliament is to consider at its session on 16 February 1995 amendments suggested by its members to the proposed Council directive on the control of major accident hazards involving dangerous substances, which is intended to replace Council directive 82/501. The Parliament has, therefore, not yet taken a decision on the position of data on industrial accidents being forwarded to the Commission and the European Environment Agency.

The Health and Safety Executive and the Department of Environment, which jointly lead on negotiations on the proposed directive, are considering the implications of an additional reporting requirement to the European Environment Agency. I will take a view on this when the European Parliament has made its position clear.

Part-time Workers

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he intends to take to publicise the new employment rights for part-time workers.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Employment Department publicises employees' statutory rights in a number of ways. A press notice was issued on 20 December last year when the Government announced their intention to remove the qualifying hours thresholds. News items on the removal of the thresholds have since been included in the Department's "Employment Gazette" and "Employment News" publications. In addition, the Department's series of free leaflets on employment protection rights is being revised to reflect the new position.

WALES

Pregnancy Statistics

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number and rate of (a) conceptions, (b) full-term pregnancies and (c) terminations for each of the last 10 years, for girls in the age group 12 to 15 years; and if he will disaggregate this information to the level for which figures are collected centrally.

Mr. Richards: The information available for Wales is shown in the following table. Corresponding information for district health authorities, with rates averaged over three year periods, is published in the OPCS Monitor, "Conceptions in England and Wales 1991: residents of regional and district health authority areas FM1 94/1", which is in the Library of the House.

Conceptions at ages under 16—rate per 1,000 women aged 13–15

			Conceptions leading to:
Year	Number	Total conceptions	maternities	abortions
1984	553	8.6	4.5	4.2
1985	577	9.3	4.9	4.3
1986	510	8.4	4.7	3.7
1987	545	9.6	5.0	4.6
1988	536	9.9	5.4	4.5
1989	460	8.9	4.9	4.0
1990	523	10.4	6.3	4.1
1991	461	9.5	5.0	4.5

Note:
Rates use the mid-year population estimates revised following the rebasing of mid-1991 estimates using the 1991 census of population.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many 16 and 17-year-olds are unemployed in each of the counties of Wales and in each of the parliamentary constituencies; and what is the percentage not receiving a benefit.

Mr. Redwood: Information on levels of claimant unemployment for under 18-year-olds are available from the NOMIS database in the Library of the House. Information on the numbers of people in receipt of benefits is not available from the claimant count.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many long-term unemployed there are in each of the parliamentary constituencies and counties of Wales;

(2) how many young unemployed adults there are in each of the counties in Wales and in each of the parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Redwood: The data requested are available from the NOMIS database, which can be accessed by the staff of the Library of the House.

Training

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives there are in place to ensure that there are sufficient training opportunities for young people with special needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Youth training provides a range of opportunities for young people, including those with special needs. This is underpinned by the Government's guarantee that all 16 and 17-year-olds not in education or employment who are seeking training shall receive the offer of a suitable YT place. The guarantee may be extended to those aged 18 who have been prevented from taking up, or continuing with, a YT place for specified reasons including language difficulties and disability.

Civil Servants (Redundancy Payments)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors are taken into account by his Department in relation to the setting of redundancy payments made to civil servants; and if he will make it his policy to offer the same terms to local government staff.

Mr. Redwood: The financial terms for civil servants in the event of redundancy are set out in the civil service compensation scheme. This scheme, which applies throughout the civil service, was laid before Parliament on 20 December 1994 by Her Majesty's Treasury.

The Local Government (Compensation for Redundancy) Regulations 1994 set out the redundancy terms for local government staff, which are not the same as those which apply to civil servants. The regulations were approved by a resolution of the House on 24 January 1995. The Government have no plans to amend them.

Receiverships

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many firms went into receivership in Wales in (a) 1994, (b) 1993, (c) 1992, (d) 1991, (e) 1990 and (f) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Official statistics on companies placed into receivership are not available separately for Wales.

Dentists

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each (a) district council area, (b) health authority area and (c) for Wales as a whole for the latest available date and for the previous three years the number of (i) dentists and (ii) dentists accepting new patients to NHS lists.

Mr. Richards: Information on the number of general dental practitioners treating NHS patients in Wales is collected centrally by family health services authority area and is given in the following table. Information on the number of dentists accepting new patients to NHS lists is not held centrally.

Number of dentists at 30 September [1]

FHSA	1991	1992	1993	1994
Clwyd	105	102	114	117

Wales	832	831	843	849

[1] Principles and assistants. Dentists working in more than one FHSA are accounted in the FHSA where they perform most work.

Free School Meals

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children attending (a) secondary and (b) primary schools are entitled to free school meals and how many do not receive them; and if he will provide the information by local education authority.

Mr. Richards: The information available is shown in the following table:

School meals service, by LEA area 1993–94

	Clwyd	Dyfed	Gwent	Gwynedd	Mid Glamorgan	Powys	South Glamorgan	West Glamorgan	Wales

Number of pupils entitled to free meals[2]	3,815	3,906	6,249	2,379	9,398	486	5,290	5,003	36,526

[1] Pupils taking free midday meals on 18 January 1994.

[2] Pupils on roll on 18 January 1994 who were registered as being entitled to free meals. Pupils entitled to free meals but absent from school on 18 January are included.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has taken legal action against one consultancy firm in the last five years. This action, initiated in 1994, is being taken in connection with alleged defective workmanship on a trunk road scheme. Further information cannot be provided until the case has been resolved.

W. S. Atkins and Partners

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) on what grounds he instructed the Welsh Health Common Services Authority to place W. S. Atkins and Partners on a stop list for the purposes of hospital design consultancy work; and on what date subsequent modification to that instruction have taken place;

(2) if he will specify what instructions his Department issued to Welsh Health Common Services Authority to place W. S. Atkins and Partners on a stop list; on what date the stop list was lifted or modified; what bearing the stop list classification had on pre-qualification for inquiries about sale of hospital design sections of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: W. S. Atkins and Partners has not been placed on any stop list in Wales. Health authorities in Wales were advised on 22 September 1988 that it should not be appointed to major new commissions in Wales without the approval of the Department and to ensure the company was capable of performing satisfactorily in all aspects of the proposed commission.

The requirement for departmental approval was lifted on 4 January 1991, but health authorities were required to exercise caution when considering any appointment of W. S. Atkins and Partners.

Any speculation about the future of the EstateCare Group of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority or the interest of any particular company is premature until the current review of market testing opportunities has been completed.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority in relation to inquiries by W. S. Atkins and Partners with a view to the market testing and sale of the EstateCare group of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 423, how many officers of the Welsh Development Agency have had disciplinary action taken against them arising out of problems on procurement of information systems.

Mr. Redwood: I have asked the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Habitat Scheme

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the habitat scheme was launched; and when details were made available to farmers and their unions.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The habitat scheme was announced on 15 December 1994. Further information is available from the new countryside and agricultural information service or Agriculture Department divisional offices.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total budget of the environmentally sensitive area schemes in (a) the Cambrian mountains, (b) Lleyn peninsular, (c) Radnor and (d) Preseli.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The total budget available for distribution under the schemes in Wales in 1995–96 will be £6,900,000.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been processed for grant aid under the present environmentally sensitive area scheme; and what was the average time spent processing them.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are 793 extant management agreements in Wales. Processing time is not currently recorded but has varied according to the circumstances of each case, and has depended upon the complexity of the application and the amount of help needed by farmers in drawing up a scheme.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been received to take part in the Preseli environmentally sensitive area scheme.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Ninety-five.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of Welsh health authorities and trusts concerning the provision of additional intensive care beds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have not discussed the provision of intensive care beds with NHS chairmen, but will shortly be asking all health authorities in Wales to assess the need for such beds and then to work with hospitals to introduce any changes that are necessary.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 444, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Redwood: Between 1 December 1993 and 30 November 1994, I made 198 appointments, excluding reappointments, to non-departmental public bodies, including NHS bodies.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the dispatch of tender documents for a buildings condition survey in relation to the impact of rising groundwater from the Cardiff bay barrage; how many applications were received by the 20 January deadline; what is the estimated survey cost in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. My Department has authorised the provision of £5.04 million in total for expenditure on property condition surveys. The number of survey applications received and the estimated cost of surveys in each of the next five years are operational matters for the corporation and the chief executive will write to the hon. Member.

St. David's Hospital, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has received for the construction of a new local neighbourhood hospital on the site of St. David's hospital, Cowbridge road east, Cardiff; on what date he received the full detailed business case; what was the date of its approval; if he will make a statement on the application of the principles of the private finance initiative to the business case; and what was the proposed capital expenditure in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97.

Mr. Redwood: The Department received and advised on a draft proposal for a local hospital on the site in February 1994. South Glamorgan health authority's revised submission taking into account its strategic purchasing plan and its consultations with local community health councils is still awaited.

If and when the outline business case is approved, expressions of interest will be sought from private sector organisations wishing to submit proposals for the design, build, finance and management of non-clinical facilities.

Stillborn Baby, Wrexham

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the Wrexham Maelor hospital into the transportation of a stillborn baby from Wrexham to the University hospital of Wales, Cardiff.

Mr. Redwood: Yes. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Hague: No legal action has been taken by the Department of Social Security or its agencies against a consultancy firm during the last five years.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State or Social Security how many appeals concerning invalidity benefit were received by his Department during each of the quarters since 1994; and what percentage of these were found in the claimant's favour.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

Invalidity benefit appeals

Quarters in 1994	Received	Heard and decided	Percentage in appellant's favour
January–March	6,381	4,005	58
April–June	6,290	3,683	58

Information from "Quarterly Social Security Appeal Statistics" produced by the Government Statistical Service.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 387, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Hague: There were 87 such appointments or re-appointments to those bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1994".

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for unemployment benefit in the last available year the claimant (a) gained the adult dependent addition and (b) refused the addition on the grounds that the claimant's dependents earnings were above the threshold.

Mr. Roger Evans: The latest available information is that the number of claimants with an adult dependency increase to unemployment benefit in Great Britain, as at May 1994, was 73,000 and, as at November 1993, was 82,000. Figures are for a point in time, rounded to the nearest thousand, and based on a 5 per cent sample. They are derived from the "Half yearly analysis of unemployed claimants", a copy of which is in the Library.

Information on the number of refusals of adult dependency increases by reason is not available.

Incapacity Benefits

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the exercise of monitoring the revised medical control procedures introduced for incapacity benefits will be completed and published.

Mr. Hague: The current medical control arrangements for benefits for incapacity will be superseded by the introduction of incapacity benefit from 13 April 1995. Data collection from the monitoring of the procedural changes introduced in April 1993 will continue for some time after that. We expect analysis to be completed towards the end of the summer.

Net Incomes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) of 2 February, Official Report, columns 825-26, if he will provide a comparable table on income distribution for quintiles 2, 3 and 4.

Mr. Burt: The following table gives the change in the real net incomes for quintiles 2, 3 and 4 of the United Kingdom income distribution of families with children for the period 1979 to 1991–92. 1991–92 is the two calendar years combined.

Information is given both before and after housing costs.

Percentage change in real incomes of 2nd, 3rd and 4th quintiles of families with children, 1979 to 1991–92

	Quintile 2 20–40 per cent.	Quintile 3 40–60 per cent.	Quintile 4 60–80 per cent.
Before housing costs	(7)	22	33
After housing costs	(1)	20	32

Notes:
1. In the table quintiles 2, 3 and 4 refer to the second from bottom, middle and second from top quintiles respectively.
2. Percentage growth estimates are calculated from the median income of each quintile.
3. Estimates in brackets () are particularly uncertain; see appendix 5 of "Households Below Average Income 1979 to 1991–92—a copy of which is in the Library—for details of the tests applied to estimates of changes in real incomes.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) of 2 February, Official Report, columns 825–26, on income distribution, if he will indicate (a) the numbers in each quintile in each year, (b) the actual income levels in each year for each quintile, 1 to 5 and (c) at what income level there was no change in income (i) before housing costs and (ii) after housing cost; and if he will provide a regional analysis of real income levels in each quintile, 1 to 5.

Mr. Burt: Information is provided for the United Kingdom as a whole. Information is not available on a regional basis.

In 1979 there were 5.5 million individuals in each quintile of the income distribution of families with children. For 1991–92 the equivalent figure is 5 million. 1991–92 is the two calendar years combined.

The available information is in the table.

Income of families with children: quintile medians for 1979 and 1991–92

	Quintile 1 bottom 20 per cent.	Quintile 2 20–40 per cent.	Quintile 3 40–60 per cent.	Quintile 4 60–80 per cent.	Quintile 5 Top 20 per cent.
Before housing costs
1979	103	138	165	198	261
1991–92	100	148	202	263	394
After housing costs
1979	86	117	141	172	227
1991–92	76	118	169	226	339

Notes:
1. The figures relate to the median income level in each quintile in April 1994 prices. Estimates are for weekly income and are given to the nearest whole £.
2. The figures given are for equivalised income.
3. All estimates are subject to sampling error.

Before housing costs the income level of the 21st percentile of the income distribution of families with children is the same in 1979 as in 1991–92. After housing costs the equivalent figure is approximately the 29th percentile.

Newcastle Estate

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that as part of the proposed redevelopment of his Department's Newcastle estate the new office will be in the Tyneside area and will not involve any loss of jobs locally.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The administration of the Department's Newcastle estate is the responsibility of Mr. George Bertram, the acting chief executive of the Contributions Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from George Bertram to Mr. Neville Trotter dated 14 February 1995:

As Acting Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for control and administration of the Department of Social Security's Newcastle Estate. I have been asked to reply to your question to the Secretary of State for Social Security regarding the proposed development of the Estate.

The Newcastle Estate Development Project seeks to provide new accommodation within a ten mile radius (approximately) of Newcastle city centre. This encompasses the whole of the Tyneside area and also extends into Wearside, whilst skirting the boundaries of Durham and Northumberland.

Organisations who express interest will, over the coming months, develop proposals to satisfy our accommodation requirements, the evaluation of which will consider all factors including location, and most importantly, value for money for the taxpayer.

The aim of the project is to provide modern, multi-functional accommodation for the use of DSS staff currently on the Newcastle Estate. As you know, the Department continues to seek efficiency savings and possible future reductions in staffing levels may coincide with a change of location. However, the rationalisation of the accommodation will not itself involve any loss of jobs although the physical location of the jobs may change within the ten mile radius.

I hope you find this information helpful.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poultry Transport

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the regulations applying to the transport of poultry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The following orders, made under the Animal Health Act 1981, apply to the transport of poultry:

The Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973

The Welfare of Poultry Transport Order 1988

The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1994.

Consultants

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his latest estimates of the expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1987, in 1994 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in.

Mr. Jack: Expenditure on consultants in each of the years concerned was as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £	Expenditure at 1994 prices £
1987–88	44,015	61,887
1988–89	1,174,114	1,547,016
1989–90	2,972,150	3,661,506
1990–91	4,495,793	5,125,327
1991–92	5,374,284	5,761,665
1992–93	7,010,814	7,238,665
1993–94	12,169,785	12,169,785
1994–95	[1]11,534,575	—

[1] Estimated.

The figures for 1987–88 exclude computer consultants.

It is not possible to quantify savings accruing from this expenditure, since most of the benefits derive from new systems and working methods, and from the consultants' expertise in certain fields, in which permanent staff do not have the necessary knowledge and experience.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks were made that the calves unable to be flown from Coventry airport on 3 February were fed, watered and rested every 15 hours; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: Two consignments of calves that had arrived at the airport were returned to their premises of origin after planned flights were disrupted by demonstrators. A third consignment was turned back before reaching the airport. Two of the three would have reached their premises of origin within the 15-hour statutory period. The third could not and the calves were therefore returned under a notice requiring their feeding and watering immediately on arrival at the home premises.

As a result of this incident we are now insisting that exporters make contingency arrangements for the animals to be lairaged in premises near the airport in the event of similar disruptions.

Fur Farms

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many mink were killed on fur farms in the United Kingdom in 1994; and how their carcasses were disposed of.

Mrs. Browning: This information is not available.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people were employed in the killing of animals on fur farms in the United Kingdom in 1994; and what were their qualifications for this.

Mrs. Browning: In monitoring welfare standards on fur farms the state veterinary service takes account of guidelines laid down in the recommendation concerning fur animals adopted by the Council of Europe in 1990. That recommendation specifies that the killing of farmed fur-bearing animals must be carried out by a competent person. However, no specific qualifications are laid down and information regarding the number of people involved is not available.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the environment needs of farmed mink and Arctic fox; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The Farm Animal Welfare Council's review of fur farming in 1989 considered the environmental needs of farmed mink and fox. It concluded that there was insufficient evidence to make specific recommendations on the keeping of fur-bearing animals and recommended that the industry should carry out further research.

The Farm Animal Welfare Council has recently given its views on a report by Respect For Animals which made certain recommendations regarding the keeping of mink and Arctic fox. Interested organisations are being consulted on this further advice from FAWC.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports he has received of mink escaping from fur farms on the Isle of Wight in the last 10 years.

Mrs. Browning: Over the last 10 years no reports have been received by this Ministry of mink escaping from the licensed mink farm on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences for fur factory farms of the Isle of Wight he has issued in the last 10 years.

Mrs. Browning: In each of the last 10 years only one licence has been issued to keep mink at premises on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are carried out to ensure that pentobarbiturate used killing animals on fur farms has been properly and legally authorised and obtained.

Mrs. Browning: Products used to kill animals require authorisation under the marketing authorisation for veterinary Medicinal Products Regulations 1994. All such products are categorised as prescription-only medicines and are subject to the usual checks for product of that sort. Members of the state veterinary service, as part of their duties during regular visits to all farms for welfare purposes, including fur farms, check that veterinary medicines have been properly authorised and obtained.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Ministry or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Jack: No central records are kept, but so far as we can ascertain no such actions have been taken.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 447, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Jack: In the last year, my right hon. Friend has made 205 appointments to those bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1994". Of these, 80 were re-appointments and 125 were new appointments.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of compensation paid in respect of animals slaughtered as BSE carriers has subsequently been discovered to have been paid in respect of animals which were not infected in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The percentage of cattle slaughtered as BSE suspects which were subsequently not confirmed after laboratory examination for the past five years is as follows:

Year	Percentage unconfirmed
1990	15
1991	14
1992	15
1993	16
1994	[1]23

[1] Provisional figure.

However, it is not possible without disproportionate costs to divide the total amount paid out in compensation into the percentages for confirmed and unconfirmed cases. The compensation paid varies from animal to animal according to market value within a ceiling which is adjusted monthly—the indicative market price. The ceiling is increased by 25 per cent. for unconfirmed cases.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 645, what was the nature of the other experiments which revealed that cows milk contains no detectable BSE infectivity.

Mrs. Browning: The other experiments involved challenge of mice with:

A) A mixture of milk and udder by feeding;
B) Milk alone by feeding;
C) Udder alone by inoculation; and
D) Milk alone by inoculation;

All derived from cows with clinical signs of BSE and confirmed by microscopic examination of the brain. No infectivity was detected in any of these studies.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 647, how the sterilisation of specified bovine offals is undertaken.

Mrs. Browning: The term "sterilised" is defined in the Specified Bovine Offal (Prohibition) Regulations 1989, as amended, and has the meaning as given in the Meat (Sterilisation and Staining) Regulations 1989.

Under existing legislation, specified bovine offal must either be sterilised or stained at the place of its removal—that is, at the slaughterhouse. The sterilisation option is rarely used by slaughterhouses and the Government have recently consulted with interested parties on proposals to withdraw this option for slaughterhouses.

SBO will continue to be sent from slaughterhouses to rendering plants for treatment before being buried or incinerated under licence.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 646, what was the monthly number of cases of BSE confirmed in the United Kingdom during 1994 that (a) were born before 18 July 1988 and (b) after 18 July 1988.

Mrs. Browning: The number of confirmed cases of BSE in Great Britain for 1994 is as follows:

Year	Born before 18 July 1988	Born after 18 July 1988
January	1,559	637
February	2,312	805
March	2,160	1,119
April	1,643	945
May	1,425	558
June	1,480	1,024
July	948	493
August	1,019	539
September	992	884
October	1,071	940
November	1,079	816
December	685	495
Total	16,373	9,255

The number of cases of BSE in Northern Ireland for 1994 is as follows. The ruminant feed ban in NI came into force on 11 January 1989.

Year	Born before 11 January 1989	Born after 11 January 1989
January	44	8
February	36	7
March	42	7
April	28	2
May	11	0
June	23	6
July	19	2
August	23	4
September	20	8
October	22	3
November	22	7
December	17	2
Total	307	56

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 645, what was the apparent source of the infection in the cow born in April 1989.

Mrs Browning: It is not possible to precisely indicate specific routes of infection for most individual cases. The breeding records relating to the case in question were incomplete and the date of birth was therefore estimated by its dentition. The animal's mother has been sold but has not been reported as a BSE suspect elsewhere.

Milk Quota

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received concerning delays in transferring milk quota by the Intervention Board.

Mr. Jack: The Ministry received 57 representations concerning the delays in processing milk quota transactions by the Intervention Board following the transfer of responsibility for administering the milk quota system to the board on 1 April 1994. These delays were due in part to technical problems with the Intervention Board's new computer system, but the principal cause was the delay on the part of the milk marketing boards in providing essential information. These problems have now been overcome and the processing of quota transactions is proceeding satisfactorily.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many transfer applications the Intervention Board had for (a) the sale and (b) the leasing of milk quota in England and in Wales.

Mr. Jack: As milk quotas can be transferred throughout the United Kingdom, separate figures are not available for England and Wales. For the whole of the UK the Intervention Board had received 24,404 applications for the lease of milk quotas by the end of the leasing period on 31 December 1994, and 5,762 applications for the permanent transfer of milk quotas by 13 February 1995.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total litreage of milk quota transferred by the Intervention Board (a) by sale and (b) for leasing to date.

Mr. Jack: The total litreage of milk quota processed by the Intervention Board at 13 February 1995 was 341,000,000 litres by permanent transfer and 1,339,000,000 litres by lease.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the average time spent by the Intervention Board in processing applications for transfer of milk quota by (a) sale and (b) leasing in England and in Wales.

Mr. Jack: After initial processing delays when milk quota records were being transferred from the milk marketing boards and subsequently amended following vesting day changes on 1 November 1994 in England, Wales and Scotland, the Intervention Board is now processing the majority of milk quota leases and transfers within 15 days of receipt of acceptable applications.

DEFENCE

Land Sales

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken to ensure that sale by tender or auction is not the invariable method of approved disposal where another method would achieve better value; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: It is our normal practice to dispose of the freehold of surplus land—in which there is no former owner of pre-emptive interest—on the open market by competition, so as to maximise the financial return. A range of other methods may, however, be used if professional advice indicates that such alternatives would produce a better value.

Departmental Property

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action his Department has taken to ensure the provision of an efficient and cost-effective service to customers of his Department's property services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A new Defence Estate Organisation is to be formed which will incorporate the staff who are involved in providing services to the occupiers of the defence estate. The intention is that this will provide a top-down oversight of the estate and thereby improve the efficiency of those services. As announced on 17 January, the chief executive of the new organisation will take up his appointment on 1 April.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy as to the notice given to agents appointed to dispose of property by reference to the date of closure of a service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: When disposing of surplus property, it is our policy to seek the smoothest possible transition from service to civilian use by ensuring that as much notice as possible of closure and vacation dates together with other appropriate information is given to appointed agents.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action is taken to ensure that the use of joint ventures is encouraged so that optimal value is achieved for property disposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: It is our practice to consider alternative methods of disposal, including joint venture, where professional advice indicates that conventional open market sale would not achieve optimal value.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has established a clear distinction between his Department as estate owner and the various budget holders as occupiers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The responsibilities of the budget holders as occupiers of the defence estate are clearly established. They are responsible for the efficient and economic use of the estate in ensuring that the armed forces are properly prepared for war. Their responsibilities include the maintenance of the estate, taking account of operational requirements, conservation, the interests of tenants and, wherever possible, the generation of income and allowing access by the public. The budget holders are ultimately responsible to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, in whom title to the estate is vested, for the discharge of these duties.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of disposal pressures on the achievement of optimal value for property disposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We are conscious that many factors such as the size and nature of the establishment; the local planning environment; the state of the market; and the timing of the disposal can impact on the achievement of optimal value. All such factors are taken into account in developing a disposal strategy for a site.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action his Department has taken to promote the effective utilisation of landed property and its rationalisation, reductions in cost of use and operation and consequently properly planned redundancy and disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The director of estate rationalisation, defence lands service is specifically charged with identifying opportunities for rationalisation and disposal of the defence estate, so as to promote its best and most cost-effective use; this includes ensuring that estates issues are taken fully into account in investment appraisals and studies.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the normal time scale for the disposal of surplus property; what discretion is given to the defence estate in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: In common with other Government Departments, it is our policy to dispose of surplus property, wherever practicable, within three years. It is accepted that for some sites a longer-term disposal strategy is required, and in those circumstances, a flexible approach is adopted.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will restructure the defence land service and the defence works service and infrastructure to form one overall organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: It was announced on 17 January that the first chief executive of the Defence Estate Organisation will be Mr. Brian Hirst who will join the Ministry of Defence on 1 April this year. The new organisation will incorporate the defence lands service, the defence works service and the infrastructure and logistics, infrastructure, division.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to amend budgetary rules related to anuality to ensure that optimal value is achieved for property disposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to seek changes to the existing end-year flexibility scheme which allows funding to be carried forward from one year to the next subject to certain criteria being met. All defence operating costs, including property disposals, and defence procurement expenditure are eligible for carry-forward under this scheme.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if all his Department's property assets are valued; if a comprehensive database has been established; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Some parts of the defence estate have already been valued and other elements are to be valued under a programme which is due to be completed by the end of 1996. As a separate but related exercise, a new database is to be created containing a more detailed record of property assets held by my Department.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to ensure his Department's estate becomes more proactive in overall occupational and budgeting decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Defence estate issues are already given the fullest possible exposure in Departmental studies and other initiatives involving occupational and budgeting decisions.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his strategic plan encompassing property interests at his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: It is our objective to manage the defence estate so that it supports, cost effectively, the military capability of the armed forces in peace and war. Property which is no longer required for these purposes is disposed of.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons phasing plans are used for large-scale disposals of his Department's property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A phased disposal strategy may be employed under various circumstances including: where market supply exceeds demand; where planning objectives can best be met by staged release of land; or, where the financial return from sale cannot otherwise be maximised.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he takes to ensure value for money in property maintenance in his Department.

Mr. Soames: Following my Department's untying from the Property Services Agency on 1 April 1990, property maintenance became the responsibility of individual top-level budget holders. At each unit which controls maintenance programmes, three independent parties undertake clearly defined tasks. The Department appoints a service or civilian officer as property manager who is advised by a contractor—establishment works consultant. Another contractor acts as works services manager carrying out the tasks. This system, centering on contractorisation, reinforced by independent reviews and audits, is intended to ensure best value for money.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to ensure his Department's property estate places greater emphasis on active asset management and asset realisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Department is taking a number of steps to place greater emphasis on the management of the defence estate as an asset. These include the creation of the Defence Estate Organisation which will provide a top-down view of all estate related activities. In addition, the estate is being valued as a precursor to the introduction of resource accounting and the valuation work is linked to the creation of a new property database.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances his Department's estate is allowed to enter into term contracts with the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: As with all contracts, term contracts are used when they are both appropriate and to my Department's advantage in terms of value for money. The scale and nature of the demand and delivery requirements are also factors used to determine whether a term contract is the most appropriate means to meet a particular need.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice his Department gives in the preparation of planning briefs for significant disposals of property, including joint ventures, to ensure appropriate greater local authority involvement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: It is normal practice to seek to develop, in co-operation with the local authority, a planning brief for large or complex sites.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the surplus air bases in the eastern counties of the United Kingdom that (a) have and (b) have not a phasing plan for disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The following air bases in the counties of Essex, Norfolk and Suffolk have been declared surplus to RAF requirements: RAF Bentwaters, RAF Sculthorpe, RAF Swanton Morley, RAF West Raynham and RAF Woodbridge. An offer has been accepted for the sale of RAF Bentwaters in its entirety. No disposal plans have been finalised for the other sites, several of which remain under consideration for alternative defence uses.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department will liaise with the Department of National Heritage and other appropriate bodies where buildings need to be preserved for posterity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department has developed good working relationships at all levels with the Department of National Heritage, English Heritage and other national heritage bodies with the aim of achieving the highest standards of conservation of its historic buildings.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to ensure that buildings declared surplus but which have feasible alternative uses are not neglected to such an extent as to make their disposal at a later date more difficult and less cost-effective; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: It is already our policy to take steps, wherever possible, to maintain the viability of surplus buildings which have alternative use potential and to explore the scope for realising revenue through their short-term commercial use where disposal of the freehold is not in immediate prospect.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account is taken in his strategy for control of his property operations of heritage policy and the military married quarter estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Within the overall strategy of holding the minimum amount of land and buildings necessary to support the operations of the armed forces, historic buildings are considered for their suitability alongside other buildings. Many continue in full use and others are being adapted to a new defence use but where an historic building is redundant, my Department seeks to dispose of it for an alternative use which will preserve its architectural and historic value.

The Department is committed to ensuring that the number of married quarters is kept to the minimum necessary to meet service demands. Responsibility for management of the estate will pass to the defence housing executive on 1 April 1995.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to forming a holding agency to cover those properties held by his Department for which there is no immediate market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The House of Commons Defence Committee report on the defence estate recommended that consideration be given to the creation of a separate agency to hold and dispose of surplus land. This recommendation will be given further consideration when the chief executive of the new Defence Estate Organisation takes up his appointment on 1 April 1995.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to learn from the experience gained by the NHS in a conservation strategy for his Department's buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Officials in the Department of National Heritage who have been working with the NHS on their conservation strategy also work with my Department and policy is being developed along similar lines. In particular, my officials are working with English Heritage on the selective listing of aviation structures, dockyards and barracks, on which thematic surveys are being carried out. In addition, officials from my Department held a meeting in August last year with the chairman of the historic hospitals working group to discuss common problems and respective approaches.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what phasing plans exist for disposal of Old Park barracks, Dover; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Discussion with the local authority and other interested parties concerning a single regeneration budget to assist in the development of the site is ongoing. A planning brief has been agreed for the site and phased development is an option for disposal.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those properties (a) sold by his Department and (b) in the process of being sold where the sale involved a joint venture with private or public sector partners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Although, to date, no Ministry of Defence properties have been sold through joint venture schemes, the following properties are in the process of being sold through such schemes: the former central vehicle depot, Hilton, Derbyshire, and the former ordnance storage depot, Ruddington, Nottinghamshire.

Departmental Assets

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to ensure that there is greater emphasis on active asset management and asset realisation in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A number of financial management improvements are being introduced as a result of the defence costs study. These include conventional asset accounting techniques, supported by appropriate commercial software, which are to be introduced throughout the Department.

Royal Air Force Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of running Royal Air Force Finningley in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames: The cost of running Royal Air Force Finningley, including the cost of operating the units based there, for each of the last three financial years is as follows:

	£ million
1991–1992	29.5
1992–1993	27.5
1993–1994	31.2

Information for financial years 1984–85 to 1990–91 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Simulated low-altitude Bombing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who can request and obtain simulated low-altitude bombing attacks on publicly owned buildings.

Mr. Soames: Any public body can request that its premises be used as targets for simulated low-level attacks. Any request would be considered on its merits taking into account not only the reasons for the request, but the usual criteria for selecting suitable simulated targets.

Land Contamination

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the most recent assessment he has made of land contamination at (a) the Defence Research Agency, Woolwich arsenal and (b) Royal Ordnance, Waltham abbey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The royal arsenal, Woolwich, comprises two sites. A number of studies have been commissioned on the west site; the ground study report has been completed, but the results of the building investigation are still awaited. Studies for the east site have been commissioned but not completed. The most recent assessment of contamination of Waltham abbey was conducted in August 1992.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions his Department has given in respect of the production of land quality statements for service establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: As part of an on-going review of land contamination and the defence estate, steps are being taken to incorporate the production of a land quality statement into site disposal procedures. Appropriate guidance for site occupiers is being prepared.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what budget is allocated for his Department's potential liabilities in respect of contaminated land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Individual budget holders within my Department are responsible for all aspects of site management, including any survey and decontamination work, and for making appropriate financial provision.

Burtonwood

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons his defence land agent did not inform Warrington borough council local planning department of the operational decision made in respect of Burtonwood; what was the role of that local authority's economic development unit in promoting its availability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: RAF Burtonwood has not been declared surplus to MOD requirements, pending consideration of an alternative defence use. The defence land agent has had on-going discussions with Warrington borough council regarding short-term lettings while the future of the site is determined, and also about non-defence uses in the event that the site was declared surplus. Warrington borough council will be advised when a final decision has been taken on the future of RAF Burtonwood and consulted fully about the future of the site.

"Instructions for Opening Fire in Northern Ireland"

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the current wording on the "Instructions for Opening Fire in Northern Ireland" issued to British armed forces.

Mr. Soames: Instructions concerning the use of firearms in Northern Ireland are part of rules of engagement which, like other operational documents, are not made publicly available.

Battle of Britain Memorial Flight

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to maintain the battle of Britain memorial flight's Lancaster in an airworthy condition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: All necessary steps are being taken to retain the BBMF Lancaster in an airworthy condition.

Rules of Engagement, Bosnia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the current wording on the cards issued to armed British peacekeeping troops in Bosnia in respect of rules of engagement.

Mr. Soames: The wording on the cards issued to British troops in Bosnia is part of rules of engagement which, like other operational documents, are not made publicly available.

Defence Land Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the timetable for informing the defence lands service in respect of operational decisions; and what account is taken of its planning systems.

Mr. Soames: Our procedures require that the defence lands service should be closely involved from an early stage in studies where defence estate issues are, or are likely to be, a factor in operational decisions.

Private Lee Clegg

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action was taken against the officer in charge of the patrol at the time of the incident which led to the imprisonment of Private Lee Clegg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The officer concerned was tried in the Belfast high court on two counts: making a statement with intent to pervert the course of justice; and obstructing the police. The officer was found not guilty of both charges.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any of the volunteers who underwent tests for (a) inoculations and (b) nerve agent pre-treatment sets at Porton Down in preparation for the Gulf war were women.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mrs. Edwina Currie dated 15 February 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if any of the volunteers who underwent tests for (a) inoculations and (b) nerve agent pre treatment sets at Porton Down in preparation for the Gulf War were women has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare is assessed and the effectiveness of medical countermeasures evaluated.

3. No Service volunteers participated in studies on inoculations and nerve agent pre-treatment sets (NAPS) in preparation for the Gulf War. However, a number of studies into NAPS using Service volunteers were carried out primarily between 1970 and the early 1980s at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, RMCS Shrivenham, Dover, Bulford, Cambridge Military Hospital as well as some collaborative work with the Institution of Aviation Medicine and more recently in 1993 at the Cambridge Military Hospital. These studies were to evaluate the acceptability of using pyridostigmine bromide and whether such use had adverse side effects or was affected by the nature of the duties of the Service personnel. These studies which lasted for up to eight weeks included the assessment of the effects of NAPS on volunteers undergoing strenuous exercise and of a thermally stressful environment. Our records indicate that a total of about 11 female Service volunteers received NAPS during these studies.

4. Insofar as vaccines are concerned, over many years the staff at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment and previously at the Microbiological Research Establishment at Porton Down engaged in work involving potential biological warfare agents have been vaccinated to protect them against the microorganisms they are working with in the laboratory. Over the past five years this has involved the vaccination about 150 female personnel.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the conditions and illnesses which have so far been diagnosed among those British veterans claiming to be suffering from Gulf war syndrome.

Mr. Soames: Initial findings from my Department's Gulf war medical assessment programme show that those diagnosed so far are suffering from medical conditions which can be categorised as follows: approximately 25 per cent. are suffering from psychological conditions; 20 per cent. from serious, but well-recognised, medical conditions; 10 per cent. from chronic fatigue syndrome and the remainder from minor physical ailments. None of the conditions has been found to be peculiar to service in the Gulf. There is no single illness, major or minor, common to those examined and no evidence to suggest the existence of a Gulf war syndrome. More detailed preliminary findings will be made public shortly, when 100 individuals have been fully assessed and diagnosed.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and women claiming to be suffering from Gulf war syndrome have registered a claim for compensation; how many have presented themselves to his Department's medical officers for examination; and how many have been assessed to date.

Mr. Soames: To date, my Department has received notification of 483 potential claims in respect of alleged ill health as a result of service in the Gulf. Approximately one third of these are from serving armed forces personnel and the remainder from former personnel. Some 39 of these potential claims have subsequently been withdrawn.

So far, 233 personnel have requested medical assessment through the Gulf war assessment programme, of whom about 25 per cent. are serving. Some 90 of these have been examined to date.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces are currently garrisoned on the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Figure 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1994 lists the British military units deployed to the Falkland Islands. It is not our practice to reveal precise details of the numbers of personnel involved. We keep force levels in the Falkland Islands under review and, if the need arises, the garrison can be reinforced at very short notice using the airfield at Mount Pleasant.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Ministry or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware of any such actions.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 451, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Soames: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Haymes Garth

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds he has decided not to publish the independent investigation by KPMG Peat Marwick into the official residence known as Haymes Garth.

Mr. Soames: I have made a full report to Parliament on this matter, and do not believe it would be appropriate to publish the report by KPMG Peat Marwick, which is confidential and was prepared for the use of senior management and Ministers.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 February to the hon. Member for Fareham (Sir P. Lloyd), Official Report, column 465, if he will specify the occasions on which the House was provided with wrong information concerning expenditure on Sir Sandy Wilson's official residence, Haymes Garth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The two occasions on which the House was provided with incorrect information on this subject were in the answers given by the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces, my right hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. J. Hanley), first to the hon. Member on 9 February 1994, Official Report, columns 362–63, which put the figure at some £250,000, and, subsequently to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) on 29 March, Official Report, column 732, which gave a figure of around £260,000. In his answer to the hon. Member for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer) on 4 July 1994, Official Report, column 85, the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces provided the revised figure of £387,000 and expressed his regret that an incorrect figure had been given in the preceding answer.

Gulf War Veterans

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action is taken to ensure that ex-service men and women who have been assessed as suffering from medical conditions following their service in the Gulf war are followed up to ensure adequate care and treatment.

Mr. Soames: The health care of individuals who have left the armed forces is the responsibility of the NHS. In accordance with standard medical practice, and to ensure continuity of health care, the medical reports on those ex-service personnel assessed by my Department are therefore forwarded to the patient's general practitioner. These reports contain recommendations for further care where necessary.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individuals have returned for a second examination under his Department's Gulf war veterans' medical assessment programme.

Mr. Soames: Some 14 out of the 90 patients seen to date under the Department's Gulf medical assessment programme have attended for further examinations by the service consultant co-ordinating the programme on one or more occasions.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people who have taken part in his Department's Gulf war veterans' medical assessment programme are (a) currently in the armed forces and (b) were in the armed forces at the time of their assessment but have since left the services.

Mr. Soames: Some 24 of the 90 patients seen to date were in the armed forces at the time of their assessment. Information relating to the number of individuals who may have left the services since being assessed is not readily available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which separate tests are incorporated into the examination of an individual under his Department's Gulf war veterans' medical assessment programme.

Mr. Soames: All tests offered to individuals coming forward for assessment are tailored to the particular requirements of each patient after considering the medical and occupational history, the reported symptoms and clinical signs found on initial examination. Possible tests include: full blood assay, radiological examination—CT/MRI scan—electrocardiograph, endoscopy and psychiatric or psychometric assessment but further tests or referrals are available when required.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much each examination of an individual under his Department's Gulf war veterans' medical assessment programme costs.

Mr. Soames: No separate or central record of the cost of the assessments under this programme is maintained.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individuals have been referred to a second doctor for examination under his Department's Gulf war veterans' medical assessment programme.

Mr. Soames: Current records show that 48 out of the 90 individuals seen to date have been referred to another consultant following initial assessment.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected total cost of his Department's Gulf war veterans' medical assessment programme.

Mr. Soames: The assessments do not form a separately funded programme and their total costs would, in any case, depend upon final numbers of those coming forward, which are still uncertain.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many public appointments have been made by his Department in the last year; and how many of those appointed were identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Mr. Goodlad: Nine public appointments were made in the last year by the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, of which one was identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Four public appointments were made in the last year by the Overseas Development Administration wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, of which one was identified by the Public Appointments Unit.

Corfu

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many complaints by British holiday makers have been received by the British consul in Corfu regarding (a) unprovoked attacks and (b) attacks involving theft.

Mr. Baldry: Our records do not show whether attacks were provoked or not. In 1994, our consulate in Corfu were notified of five robberies with assault, and 16 assaults, including five rapes.

Lebanon

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice is currently being given to British citizens wishing to visit Lebanon.

Mr. Baldry: Foreign Office travel advice to British nationals wishing to visit Lebanon is not to travel outside the main towns. We also advise against travel to the southern suburbs of Beirut, south Lebanon and the north and west of the Bekaa valley, particularly the area around Baalbeck and Hermel.

We strongly advise our nationals to register with the embassy.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Lebanese track of the middle east peace negotiations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Progress on the Lebanese track of the middle east peace process is vital if there is to be a comprehensive settlement. We continue to call for the full implementation of UN Security Council resolution 425.

Middle East Peace Process

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what suggestions for a comprehensive peace in the middle east were put forward by the EU troika in its recent mission to Syria; and what was the response of the Syrians.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The EU troika reaffirmed the EU's support for a just, lasting and comprehensive peace based on UN Security Council resolutions and the principle of land for peace. They urged both Syria and Israel to reach a negotiated settlement as soon as possible. The EU's support for the peace process was welcomed by Syria.

Syria

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Council of Foreign Ministers of the European Union agreed to remove the arms embargo on Syria; what considerations led to the decision; and how he informed the House of the decision.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in another place, on 7 December 1994 Official Report, House of Lords, column 85. The arms embargo was lifted as the original grounds for imposing the restrictions no longer existed and to provide a signal of encouragement to Syria with regard to progress in the middle east peace process.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the removal of the arms embargo on Syria required parliamentary consent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Sierra Leone

Ms Harriet Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of British citizens in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Baldry: Since 26 January, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has been advising dependents and those with no pressing need to stay in Sierra Leone, to leave. Many have already done so, but we estimate that 200 British nationals with the right of abode in the United Kingdom remain in Sierra Leone.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the situation in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Lady to my written answer of 30 January, columns 493-94 to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington).

The security situation in Sierra Leone continues to give cause for concern. Seventeen abducted foreign nationals, including six Britons, remain in captivity: we are working to secure their release. Large numbers of Sierra Leoneans have been displaced by the conflict, with damaging consequences for the economic and social structure of the country. We have given some £500,000 in emergency aid this financial year to help Sierra Leonean victims of this war, and stand ready to provide further such help. Special representatives of the UN and Commonwealth Secretaries-General have now arrived in Sierra Leone, and we continue to give our strong support to efforts to bring about a settlement to the conflict.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people have been killed in Sierra Leone since disturbances started in 1991.

Mr. Baldry: There are no official figures, but unofficial estimates vary between 15,000 and 20,000 deaths.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the kidnapping of aid workers in southern Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Twelve aid workers, including one British national, were kidnapped on 8 February by a rebel group in southern Sudan. By 11 February, all the aid workers had been released unharmed.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what practical arrangements have been made to transport UNAVEM III troops to Angola.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN is discussing the practical arrangements for the deployment of UN peacekeeping troops in UNAVEM III with potential troop-contributing countries.

Mrs. Christina Nevan Gando

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current position concerning the application by Mrs. Christina Nevan Gando—Ref: R250794—made to the United Kingdom post in Abuja to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have asked the entry clearance officer in Abuja to let me have a report on the application by Mrs. Christina Nevan Gando. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ushaben Sunil Bhai Patel

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is going to be made on the application made by Mrs. Ushaben Sunil Bhai Patel—Ref: AP/94/10/38—to the post in Bombay to join her husband in the United Kingdom; when her application was made; when was she interviewed at the post; if she has been notified of the outcome of her interview; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have asked the entry clearance officer in Bombay to let me have a report on the application of Mrs. Ushaben Sunil Bhai Patel. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Benzodiazepine Litigation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give (a) the total cost to date to the legal aid fund of the Benzodiazepine litigation, (b) the total number of legal aid certificates issued for Benzodiazepine litigation, (c) the average cost per certificate where no proceedings were issued, (d) the average cost per certificate where proceedings had commenced and (e) total generic costs associated with the Benzodiazepine litigation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The estimated cost to date to the legal aid fund of the Benzodiazepine litigation is £28.6 million. Some 13,500 certificates were issued in total. Of these, approximately 5,000 claims resulted in the issue of proceedings. The average cost per certificate where no proceedings were issued is estimated to be £1,590. The average cost per certificate where proceedings have been commenced is difficult to estimate because taxations are currently proceeding in these cases and a substantial number of cases have yet to be taxed. Some 3,200 cases have so far been taxed at an average cost of £3,500. This figure is expected to rise as the 1,800 outstanding cases are likely to contain a higher proportion of more expensive cases. The total generic costs paid out to date are £3.9 million.

The costs are now being taxed and, as with all other legal aid bills, the amount to be paid out of the legal aid fund will be that which the court determines to be reasonable. All the above figures include solicitors' costs, counsel fees, disbursements, court fees and VAT.

Judges (Training)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Judicial Studies Board has to introduce additional training for judges on managing rape cases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Judicial Studies Board determines what training is appropriate for judges. The courses which it provides cover rape cases. I understand that the board has no plans to introduce additional training.

Legal Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to order re-examination of all cases where legal aid costs have exceeded £1 million to establish the justification for approving the legal aid to recover the sums involved in cases where resource statements are found to be false.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The grant and discharge or revocation of civil legal aid certificates is the responsibility of the Legal Aid Board. The grant and revocation or withdrawal of criminal legal aid is the responsibility of the court dealing with the case. Legal aid regulations say what may be done if the assisted person's circumstances change or new information about his or her circumstances comes to light.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the amount of public funds available (a) to conduct prosecutions and (b) to conduct defences by barristers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The amount of public funds available to conduct prosecutions is a matter for the various prosecuting agencies. It is estimated that the net cost of criminal legal aid paid to barristers in the current financial year to conduct defences is £158 million.

Revenue (Fines)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much revenue was collected by way of fines imposed by magistrates courts and the Crown court in England and Wales in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Figures relating solely to fine revenue are not available. The revenue collected by way of fines, fees, confiscation orders, compensation orders and fixed penalties imposed by magistrates courts and the Crown court in England and Wales in each year since 1989 was:

Year	£ million
1989–90	241
1990–91	269
1991–92	241
1992–93	232
1993–94	233

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walthamstow of 6 February, Official Report, column 10, if he will make it his policy to instruct area advisory committees on justices of the peace to record the ethnic origin of all those applying to become a JP.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is reviewing his policy. He has already made it clear that he wishes to see more ethnic minority candidates recommended for appointment. Suitability for appointment remains the overriding consideration.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the upper limit on employer's national insurance contributions was abolished; if he will state the additional revenue gained each year since; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of research the Government commissioned on the impact of this change on the employment patterns of higher and lower-paid earners.

Mr. Arbuthnot: An estimate of the amounts raised each year following the abolition of the upper limit on employer's national insurance contributions is in the table.

Year	£ billion[2]
1985–1986[1]	0.50
1986–1987	1.50
1987–1988	1.75
1988–1989	2.25
1989–1990	2.75
1990–1991	3.00
1991–1992	3.00
1992–1993	3.00
1993–1994	3.00
1994–1995	3.25

[1] Upper Earnings Limit abolished on 6 October 1985.
[2] Figures are founded to nearest £¼ billion.

Abolition of the upper earnings limit for employer's national insurance contributions made it possible for the rates of employees' and employers' national insurance contributions to be reduced, especially at lower levels of pay. This was aimed at improving job prospects for the low paid, particularly among the young and unskilled, by reducing individuals' national insurance payments and reducing the business costs of prospective employers.

Research commissioned by this Department shows that a fifth of employers consider national insurance contributions when setting wage levels and that some employers take contribution rates into account when fixing staffing levels. This supports the view that reducing employers' wage costs in respect of lower-paid workers helps to promote their employment prospects.

Occupational Deafness

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount spent on disablement benefit for occupational deafness in 1993.

Mr. Hague: Information is not available in the precise format requested. Estimates based on a 10 per cent. sample suggest that in 1992–93, the latest available year, occupational deafness accounted for around £25 million of disablement benefit expenditure.

Notes:

(i) This figure has been rounded to the nearest £5 million, but is not accurate to that degree.

(ii) This figure includes cases with aggregate assessments, where occupational deafness was the first, or highest assessment.

(iii) This figure does not include any expenditure on reduced earnings allowance/retirement allowance or any of the additional allowances such as constant attendance allowance or exceptionally severe disablement allowance.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his appeal to the European Court over the social security commissioner's April 1992 decision about the rate of invalidity benefit payable to women over the age of 60 years is expected to be finally resolved.

Mr. Hague: The appeal against the social security commissioner's decision—CS 27/91—was made to the Court of Appeal jointly by the Secretary of State and the chief adjudication officer. At a hearing on 18 January 1994, the Court of Appeal decided to refer the case to the European Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling on questions of European law. A date for the European Court hearing has been set for 6 April 1995, but the court's ruling is not expected before July 1995. The case will be referred back for a decision by the Court of Appeal following this ruling.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that the invalidity benefit claimants affected will receive the real value of back payments of invalidity benefits made to them should the European Court uphold the social security commissioner's decision in respect of the payment of the benefit to women over 60 years.

Mr. Hague: Increased awards of invalidity benefit made as a result of the social security commissioner's decision—CS27/91—are being suspended pending the outcome of the appeal by the Secretary of State and the chief adjudication officer, except in cases of hardship. Any benefit which has been suspended will be paid in full if the commissioner's decision is upheld. There is no provision for the payment of interest in these circumstances.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants for invalidity benefit have been granted a suspension of his decision in respect of women over 60 years on grounds of hardship, while his appeal to the European Court over the social security commissioner's April 1992 decision is being resolved.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

Suspensions of increased Invalidity Benefit awarded as a result of Commissioner's decision CS27/91

Cases in which suspension applied	Hardship applications	Cases in which suspension lifted on hardship grounds

1. Figures relate to 31 March 1994, the latest date for which information is available centrally.
2. Source: Manual count in Benefits Agency offices.

Disabled People

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to publicise the independent living fund for disabled people.

Mr. Hague: The provision of information to potential clients of the independent living (1993) fund is a matter solely for the trustees. I understand from the fund's director that the trustees have a carefully focused programme to ensure that potential clients of the fund, and local authority social services departments which must support applications to the fund, are aware of the eligibility criteria and application procedures.

Social Fund

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he made of the regional variations in the cost of a (a) new grave and (b) funeral in making his decision about funeral payments under the social fund.

Mr. Roger Evans: We took account of a range of factors, including regional variations in costs, before making our proposals. These are now with the social security advisory committee. We expect to receive its report shortly.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will make a further allocation of funds to the discretionary social fund budget.

Mr. Roger Evans: I am pleased to announce that due to further improvements in the recovery of social fund loans we have been able to make another additional allocation in the current financial year. A total of £2 million in equal amounts of £100,000 is to be made available to the Benefits Agency's area directorates on 16 February 1995. This is on top of the £13 million in additional allocations we were able to make in November 1994.

The whole of the additional allocation will be devoted to social fund loans. We believe that social fund loans offer excellent value for money. They enable us to target available resources on those in most need and to recycle funds to help more applicants.

Since the scheme started, we have been able to make nearly £1.3 billion worth of loans for an outlay of only £286 million. This expansion of the social fund loans budget will ensure that more people receive help and that the fund continues to play a valuable role in complementing mainstream social security provision.

Details of individual district allocations have been placed in the Library.

Mortgages (Insurance Cover)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about insurance cover on home mortgages from the insurance ombudsman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: None, but we will be seeking the views of the insurance ombudsman as part of the consultation process.

Personal Assistants

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had with his colleagues on the employment status of personal assistants, with special reference to personal assistants employed by (a) local authorities and (b) other bodies.

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have had no discussions on this subject.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that people who leave their job because of discrimination or exploitation at work should not be obliged to live on reduced income support or no benefit at all while their case is being investigated.

Mr. Roger Evans: The Government have considered this issue in the context of the introduction of the new jobseeker's allowance. Where a doubt arises as to whether a claimant has left his job without just cause, but the claimant satisfies the conditions of entitlement for jobseeker's allowance, the Government propose to pay benefit in full until a decision is reached on the case by an independent adjudication officer. This change will be introduced from April 1996.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that suspension from unemployment benefit will not prejudice applications for hardship payments, and that each application will be decided on its merits alone.

Mr. Roger Evans: Unemployment benefit is suspended where a question arises over the claimant's entitlement. In such cases, hardship payments of income support are made at the discretion of an adjudication officer on a case-by-case basis. However, hardship payments may be made only to people who are not actively seeking work if they have children, are pregnant or have a pregnant partner, or a sick or disabled or have a partner who is sick or disabled.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many unemployed claimants (a) immediately draw income support, (b) draw only unemployment benefit, (c) draw unemployment benefit and means-tested support and (d) draw income support as the right to draw unemployment benefit ceases in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is contained in tables 1.1 of the "Quarterly Analyses of Unemployed Claimants", copies of which are in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many successful housing benefit applications for each district council in Scotland there have been in each financial year since 1985–86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: Information is not available in the format requested. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on Thursday 27 October, Official Report, column 801. The available case load information for 1994 is set out in the table.

Housing Benefit Management Information System

Notes:
1. The above figures refer to benefit units which may be a single person or a couple.
2. The average case-load is based on 100 per cent. inquiries taken at the end of February, May and August 1994. November 1994 figures are not yet available.
3. When a local authority has failed to send in a return, figures have been estimated.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money was spent on housing benefit, for each district council area in Scotland in each financial year since 1985–86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table.

Audited subsidy claims, except 1993–94 which is final subsidy claim.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were claiming (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax rebate at the last available date.

Mr. Roger Evans: At the end of August 1994, there were 4,667,000 recipients of housing benefit and 5,606,000 recipients of council tax benefit. A recipient may be a single person or a couple.

Income Support

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current policy of his Department regarding payment of deductions from benefits for rent arrears to local authorities; and what changes to the policy he is considering.

Mr. Roger Evans: Deductions from income support for rent arrears are paid to local authorities at intervals of 13 weeks and credited to tenants' rent accounts. There are no plans to change this policy.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the total amount of income support annually given to families with (a) one adult working, (b) two adults working and (c) three or more adults working, specifying the amount given to people aged 18 to 24 years in each category; and how much is given to single parents in category (a);

(2) how many families currently receiving income support have (a) one adult working, (b) two adults working and (c) three or more adults working, specifying the number of people aged 18 to 24 years each category includes; and how many single parents are included in (a).

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is in the table.

Information relating to part (c) is not available, as any working adults living in the same household as the claimant and their partner would claim income support in their own right.

	Number of families	Average weekly income support £	Estimated annual income support £ million
One adult worker	117,000	72.88	442
of which:
— single parents	74,000	67.08	257
— 18–24 year olds	7,000	56.16	21
Two adult workers	1,000	90.17	2
of which:
— 18–24 year olds	0	0	0

Figures rounded to nearest thousand.

Notes:

1. Estimated annual income support is calculated as total weekly income support—number of families in the inquiry week multiplied by average weekly income support—multiplied by 52.
2. Families have been taken to mean a single person or couple with dependants. Expenditure figures in the departmental report for families are benefits for lone parents only.
3. Adult workers can be either the claimant or partner.
4. Figures may not sum to totals due to rounding.
5. There may be some 18 to 24-year-old lone parents who will be included in both categories but will only be counted once in the overall total.

Contribution Conditions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 10 February, Official Report, columns 433–35, if he will publish the calculations of his Department on the number of claimants who lost (a) unemployment benefit, (b) sickness benefit or (c) retirement pension as a result of the changes in the contributory conditions since 1975.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Information relating to unemployment benefit and sickness benefit is not yet available. I will let the hon. Member have such information as becomes available as soon as possible.

The information available in relation to retirement pension is as follows.

No existing beneficiary lost entitlement to retirement pension as a result of the changes to the contribution conditions since 1975.

For new beneficiaries, comparisons between notional entitlement under the pre-1975 legislation and actual entitlements are not available.

In general, the 1975 changes made it easier for a person to qualify for retirement pension. The financial and explanatory memorandum to the 1972 Social Security Bill stated that the extra cost of the overall changes to the contribution conditions for benefits was likely to be small.

Similarly, no financial savings were anticipated from the 1978–79 change to the definition of a qualifying year; I refer the hon. Member to the Official Report, 29 April 1975, column 355.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the organisational links between his Department and other departments which are concerned with countering benefit fraud.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Close and effective links are maintained between the Benefits Agency, the Employment Service, local authorities and the police to combat benefit fraud. Through its work with the ministerial group on crime prevention and other initiatives, the Department has also established contact with a number of other Departments and agencies.

Asbestosis

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many sufferers from asbestosis paid back benefits to the compensation recovery unit of his Department in the period 1 April 1994 to 31 January 1995; and what was the range of repayments they made.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 13 February, Official Report, column 542.

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of residents of care or nursing homes with preserved entitlements to Department of Social Security benefits who have currently insufficient personal resources to meet the costs of their care.

Mr. Roger Evans: The number of residents with preserved rights to the higher limits of income support whose total entitlement to social security benefits does not meet the fees is about 78,500.

Some of these residents may have disregarded benefits, income or capital which could be used to meet any shortfalls.

Benefits Agency Medical Service

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants in each region, for each quarter ending March 1994, were examined by the Benefits Agency medical service; and how many were found capable of (a) all work and (b) alternative work;

(2) how many claims for sickness and invalidity benefit were referred to the Benefits Agency medical service in each quarter since March 1994; how many of these resulted in an examination; and what were the outcomes (a) where examinations took place and (b) where they did not.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of Benefits Agency medical services is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 15 February 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about examinations made by the Benefits Agency Medical Services (BAMS). This was with regard to the number of customers found capable of work for each quarter ending March 1994; also from March 1994 with regard to the number of sickness and invalidity benefit cases referred to BAMS and the outcomes.

The BAMS are asked to give an opinion on capacity for work by the independent Adjudication Officer (AO). The decision on the claim to benefit is made by the AO and whilst the AO may take the opinion of the BAMS into account in making a decision the AO is not bound by that opinion. An opinion that a customer is fit for work is not given by the BAMS without the customer being examined. If the evidence available to the BAMS suggests that the customer is incapable of all work, then there will usually be no need for an examination.

For the year ending March 1994 I have provided information in respect of those cases referred to the BAMS to ask for an opinion on incapacity in relation to Sickness Benefit and Invalidity Benefit. The information for the four quarters ending March 1994 is provided in Annexes A,B,C and D.

The information requested from March 1994 is provided in Annexes E and F. Figures for the quarter ending 31 December 1994 will not be available until the end of February.

It should be noted that the figures given may not accurately reflect cases referred to the BAMS within each quarter at each centre because relevant statistics are compiled at the date a case is cleared rather than the date it is received. All of the Annexes have been placed in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

PRIME MINISTER

Private Office Staff

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Prime Minister how many of his private office staff are fluent in European languages and which ones.

The Prime Minister: A number of my staff are fluent in a number of European languages.

Phoenix Project

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the letter dated 19 May 1994 from the leader of Somerset county council concerning the Phoenix project.

The Prime Minister: My office has no trace of the letter.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the conclusions or recommendations of paragraphs 11, 19, 20, 23, 29, 31, 35, 40 and 50 of the first report of the British Government on sustainable development, together with the Government's response in each case.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has welcomed the first report from the Government panel on sustainable development. The Government will consider the recommendations and respond in due course.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has had from Dr. David Fieldhouse, former police surgeon at Bradford, on the discrepancies between the Foreign Secretary's explanation of events concerning himself in relation to Lockerbie in December 1988 and Dr. Fieldhouse's own account of duties as a police surgeon as agreed by the Dumfries and Galloway police.

The Prime Minister: None.

Knighthoods

Mr. Sedgmore: To ask the Prime Minister how many hon. Members have received knighthoods since the 1979 general election.

The Prime Minister: One hundred and twenty two hon. Members have received knighthoods since the 1979 general election.

Oxfordshire Education Authority

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, following his recent statement, how Oxfordshire education authority will be able to maintain its current pupil to teacher ratio in the financial year 1995–96.

The Prime Minister: Under local management of schools, it is for governing bodies to determine school staffing levels within the resources available to them, including reserves.

Climate Change Convention

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister, if he will be attending the meeting of the conference of the parties of the climate change convention, in Berlin in March.

The Prime Minister: No. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment hopes to attend.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 16 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Special and Political Advisers

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Prime Minister how many ministerial special and political advisers were paid salaries in excess of the highest salary payable to a civil servant in each of the last five years; and what were the total annual salary payments to those advisers in each of those years.

The Prime Minister: None.

Single European Act

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will arrange for a copy of a report he commissioned from the head of the Cabinet Office European Secretariat, concerning the policy implications arising from the opt-out negotiated by Her Majesty's Government in 1985 to the Single European Act to be placed in the Library.

The Prime Minister: No. It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to disclose policy advice.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister, what representations he has received expressing concern at the requirement under the Single European Act on non-British citizens settled in the United Kingdom, to obtain visas before making short visits to other member states of the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, none. The Single European Act contained no provisions relating to visa requirements.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister, what action he proposes, in relation to the forthcoming intergovernmental conference, concerning the maintenance by the United Kingdom of its frontier immigration controls; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We shall take whatever steps are necessary to maintain our frontier controls. It is too soon to decide whether we shall need to take action on this during next year's intergovernmental conference.

TREASURY

Pool Betting Duty and Lottery Duty

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to address the tax anomaly between football pools operators and the national lottery in respect of the aggregate out-take from receipt for duty and good causes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no present plans to change the rates of either pool betting duty or lottery duty. In his Budget speech on 16 March 1993, my right hon. Friend the member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont) said that, in deciding the tax rate of the national lottery, account was taken of the level of tax on other forms of gambling and the extent to which spending was likely to be diverted from other taxed activities. He went on to say that much would depend on how the lottery developed and the position would be kept under review. In his recent Budget speech, the Chancellor announced that the 1991 reduction in pools betting duty of 2.5 per cent., to help fund the Foundation for Sport and the Arts, should continue for another five years provided that the pools companies also continue to fund sport and the arts at their present level. HM Customs and Excise is monitoring the effect of the national lottery on receipts of pool betting duty and other gambling duties.

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what lists Customs and Excise prepared of countries or destinations which were possible diversionary routes for the evasion of sanctions at the time of, or after, the passing of the Iraq sanctions orders in 1990.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise has prepared a number of lists at different times, based on intelligence currently available, to assist its officers to prevent breaches of the Iraq sanctions orders. It is not Customs' policy to make public such information provided in confidence to support operational effectiveness.

Civil Servants (Rail Travel Costs)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of rail travel incurred by civil servants in the course of their duties; and what proportion of this total represents the cost of (a) first class and (b) standard class travel for each year since 1991.

Sir George Young: Government Departments and agencies are responsible for the travel arrangements of staff travelling on official business. Details of the costs of rail travel and the class of travel used by civil servants are not held centrally.

UK Residents

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were United Kingdom residents for tax purposes but not domiciled in the UK for each year since 1991.

Sir George Young: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

European Community Budget

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the final adopted version of the EU budget for a 15-member Community; and if he will publish figures showing the level of expenditure for 1995 for all 15 members.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The 1995 EC budget was adopted by the President of the European Parliament on 15 December 1994 on the basis of 15 member states. It will be published soon in the Official Journal.

The total commitments in 1995 amount to 80.9 billion ecu, or £63.8* billion and total payments to 76.5 billion ecu, or £60.4 billion. The budget does not give details of expenditure receipts by member state.

*Throughout this reply an exchange rate of £1=1.2675 ecu has been used.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the process of Her Majesty's Treasury's drawing up a supplementary and amending budget which allocates the additional expenditure to the detailed EU budget headings among new member states.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The 1995 EC budget which was adopted by the President of the European Parliament on 15 December 1994 includes provision for additional expenditure to take account of enlargement.

The Commission will shortly be proposing a preliminary draft supplementary and amending budget which will allocate the additional expenditure to individual EC budget headings, as necessary. The Government will carefully consider the proposal, which will be subject to the usual parliamentary scrutiny procedure.

Review Body on Senior Salaries

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer in 1995–96 of implementing the review body on senior salaries 17th report.

Mr. Aitken: The estimated cost in 1995–96 of implementing the seventeenth report of the review body on senior salaries is £5.7 million, which includes salary increases and associated national insurance and pension contributions. It will be met from the existing public expenditure provision.

Group of Seven Meeting

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much time the Group of Seven Finance Ministers and central bank governors spent discussing the long-term ecological sustainability of economic activity at their recent meeting in Toronto.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There was no discussion of this issue.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since its 1979, in 1994 prices.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Expenditure by HM Treasury and the Chancellor's agencies on advertising in the period 1988–89 to 1993–94 at 1993–94 prices, and the spend to date in 1994–95 is shown in the table. Figures for other years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Year	HM Treasury £	Privatisation for which HMT responsible £	Agencies £
1988–89	64,900	—	—
1989–90	70,822	—	434,550
1990–91	49,671	—	779,087
1991–92	112,096	13,976,853	82,255
1992–93	50,204	—	399,420

1994–95	2,373	7,603,000	446,071

Tiger Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of all tiger products seized in 1994 and in 1995 to date by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 February 1995]: The figures are as follows:

1994

1 tiger skin
9 tiger teeth
41 packets of tigerbone plasters
1,726 individual tigerbone plasters
20 × 70 cl bottles of tigerbone tincture
96 bottles of tigerbone pills

1995 (to date)

10 packets and 1 bottle of tigerbone pills.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Elliot Morley: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will list the number and type of livestock exported for (a) slaughter and (b) further fattening to Greece in each year since 1984.

Mr. Jack: Official trade statistics for total numbers of livestock exported to Greece between 1984 and 1993, and in the first nine months of 1994, are given in the table. These statistics do not distinguish animals for slaughter or for fattening. However, information derived from the Animo computer system in 1994 shows that health certification issued for sheep and pigs being exported to Greece has been for breeding animals only.

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994 (part)

British Beef (German Import Restrictions)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the continuing German restrictions on the import of British beef, what representation he has received concerning the legality of the restrictions; and what action the Government can take to resolve the issue.

Mrs. Browning: The German Government have implemented the European Commission decision on BSE rules for the export of UK beef to other member states, which exempt meat from animals born after 1 January 1992 from any special trade conditions. In some German Länder, however, there are voluntary trade bans on the importation of UK beef. The European Commission has written to the German authorities questioning the legality of these voluntary bans under Community law. I welcome this prompt action by the European Commission.

The Government have received no representations about these developments, but will continue to seek the respect of EC law in this area.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the real increase in take-home pay of a single man at the lowest 10 per cent. of the earnings distribution, between (a) 1973–74 and 1978–1979 and (b) 1978–79 and 1993–94.

Mr. Oppenheim: Real take-home pay for a single man at the lowest 10 per cent. of the earnings distribution fell by 1 per cent. between 1973–74 and 1978–79 and increased by 23 per cent. between 1978–79 and 1993–94.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether benefit can be reclaimed if a claimant who was taking steps to carry out a reasonable direction for purposes of seeking entitlement to jobseeker's allowance benefit fails to do so.

Miss Widdecombe: If a claimant fails to carry out a jobseeker's direction which was reasonable having regard to his circumstances, the adjudication officer will consider whether he had good cause for doing so in deciding whether to impose a sanction. Jobseeker's allowance will be paid in full until the adjudication officer has made the decision.

If the adjudication officer decides that the claimant failed without good cause to carry out the direction, a sanction will be applied for two weeks. Vulnerable groups will have access to hardship payments during a period of sanction.

Unemployment

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people, and what proportion of the unemployed, left unemployment in each quarter since 1974 to (a) go into work and (b) leave the labour force altogether; and what figures he has for those in each category who had been unemployed for (i) 0 to six months, (ii) six to 12 months, (iii) one to two years and (iv) two years or more.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is not available in the form requested.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, how many people were unemployed in each quarter since 1974 for (a) under a year, (b) between one year and two and (c) more than two years.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information on claimant unemployment by duration is available on a quarterly basis from October 1983 and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Information on ILO unemployment by duration can be obtained via the quantime labour force survey service in the Library and is available annually from spring 1984 until spring 1992 and quarterly thereafter.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons and what percentage of the work force have been unemployed for (a) under six months and (b) six to 12 months, (c) 12 to 24 months and (d) over 24 months, in Islwyn in each year since 1979 expressing the figure quarterly and breaking the data down by gender.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on the unadjusted level of claimant unemployment by duration in each local authority district or parliamentary constituency is available from October 1983 onwards, for the months of January, April, July and October, and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Claimant unemployment by duration cannot be calculated as a percentage of the work-force below the level of travel-to-work-areas.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people entered unemployment in each quarter since 1974; and what are the figures as a proportion of the labour force.

Mr. Oppenheim: Unadjusted figures for claimant unemployment flows in the United Kingdom are available monthly from June 1986 and can be obtained, together with work force denominators, from the NOMIS database in the Library. No information is available on ILO unemployment flows.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage of people were unemployed in Islwyn in each quarter since 1979, breaking the data down by gender.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on the unadjusted level of claimant unemployment in each local authority district or parliamentary constituency is available from July 1983 and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Claimant unemployment rates are not available below the level of travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what EU schemes or projects to assist areas of unemployment have benefited Coventry and the west midlands; how much the United Kingdom has benefited from these schemes over the last five years; and what assessment he has made of whether the formulae used by France, Germany and Holland over the last five years to calculate unemployment would have increased the amounts of money coming in the form of grants to Britain to help the unemployed.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on funding from the European social fund from 1990 to 1993 is set out in the table. It covers Warwickshire, the west midlands and Great Britain. It is not possible to produce comprehensive figures below county level except at disproportionate cost. The 1994 figures at regional and county level are not yet available.

In so far as unemployment levels are a factor in determining allocations from ESF, the European Commission uses the International Labour Organisation measure of unemployment published by the Statistical Office of the European Communities. This is an international standard across all European Union countries. Allocations to the UK are thus made on the same basis as those to every other member state.

ESF funding in Warkwickshire, West Midlands and Great Britain, 1990–1993

£ pounds

Year	Warwickshire	West Midlands	Great Britain
1990	476,152	12,034,653	287,936,452
1991	489,787	22,878,238	361,623,462
1992	517,319	16,658,843	361,157,739
1993	614,524	24,795,153	494,417,781

Note:
(i) The figures cover payments made under all the EC Structural Fund Objectives but exclude payments made under Community Initiatives.
(ii) Warwickshire and West Midlands also benefitted over the period from ESF support for National Government training programmes, figures for which are included in the third column but not the first two.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the differences in calculating figures for unemployed people in the United Kingdom and in France, Germany and Holland; how Britain benefits by using a different calculation; and whether the use of a different formula for calculating the unemployed puts Britain at an advantage or disadvantage regarding assistance from European funds in the form of grants to fund schemes for unemployment.

Mr. Oppenheim: The United Kingdom, in common with most other European Union countries produces two official measures of unemployment: an administratively based count and a labour force survey measure based on the internationally standard measure of unemployment defined by the International Labour Organisation and which forms the basis for international comparisons. Details of the measures of unemployment used by the United Kingdom, France, Germany and Holland can be found in an article in the September 1992, Employment Gazette entitled, "How Unemployment is Measured in Different Countries".

The European Commission allocates money from the European social fund to member states using the ILO unemployment measure, published by the Statistical Office of the European Communities. This is an international standard across all EU countries. Allocations to the UK are, thus, made on the same basis as those to every other EU member state.

Trade Union Membership

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if employers are required to inform employees who do not re-authorise the renewal of their trade union membership subscriptions under the terms of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 that they will cease to be members of their trade union.

Mr. Oppenheim: No. An employee who does not authorise the continuance of deductions from pay for trade union subscriptions may have moved to another means of payment.

Labour Statistics

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, columns 769-70, if he will list for each region in the United Kingdom, since 1979, the number of persons in (a) full-time work and (b) part-time work earning (i) less than £1.50 an hour, (ii) between £1.50 and £2.50 an hour and (iii) between £2.50 and £3.50 an hour, also breaking these figures down by gender and the percentage each figure is of the work force.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on the distributions of hourly earnings of full-time adult workers in the regions of Great Britain is shown in table 115 of part E of the new earnings survey reports. Similar information on part-time women workers is shown in table 117 of part F. Copies of these reports are available in the Library.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the ratio between the UK activity rate and the UK unemployment rate for each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the ratio between the Welsh activity rate and the Welsh unemployment rate for each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what was the ratio between the UK female activity rate and the UK female unemployment rate for each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what was the ratio between the UK male activity rate and the UK male unemployment rate for each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what was the ratio between the Welsh male activity rate and the Welsh male unemployment rate for each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what was the ratio between the Welsh female activity rate and the Welsh female unemployment rate for each year since 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Job Opportunities

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to the oral answer on 10 January to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms Quin), Official Report, column 7, if he will list the international evidence in support of the assertion that more regulated economies are less successful in creating job opportunities; and what other information he has on this issue.

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms Quin) on 10 February 1995, Official Report, columns 473–74.

Unfair Dismissal

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the effect of the proposals to change the law on unfair dismissal for part-time workers and on those working fewer than eight hours per week.

Mr. Oppenheim: Following the coming into effect on 6 February of the Employment Protection (Part-Time Employees) Regulations 1995, all employees, including those working fewer than eight hours per week, qualify to bring complaints of unfair dismissal after completing two years' continuous service. The effect of this change on business and employment opportunities will be carefully monitored.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when Central London TEC will agree new contracts with the former providers of training and services to South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: CENTEC is currently drawing up its proposals to undertake training and enterprise council responsibilities in the boroughs of Lambeth and Southwark. If these negotiations go well, CENTEC should be able to complete contracting arrangements for the beginning of the new contract year on 27 March 1995.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who is responsible for paying the money owed by South Thames TEC to Community Industry in Peckham for work up to 7th November 1994.

Mr. Paice: All payments owed to providers by South Thames training and enterprise council prior to 7 November 1994 are a matter for the receiver.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the Grant Thornton report on the circumstances that led up to the failure of South Thames TEC.

Mr. Paice: The Grant Thornton work was commissioned on the basis that it was for the internal consideration of the Department only and was not intended as a public document. However, for the information and inspection of hon. Members, a copy of the report is available in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 243-46, if he visited Westminster Hall on 9 February; and if he will make a statement on the means of access and the facilities that were made available to disabled people attending the lobby by disabled people held on that day.

Mr. Ray Powell: I visited Westminster Hall during the course of the mass lobby and was satisfied that the arrangements for access to the hall itself were satisfactory. The Committee's proposals to improve access for disabled people to the Grand Committee Room from Westminster Hall are described in my answer to my hon. Friend on 8 February, columns 243-46. The facilities provided for the organisation of a mass lobby are a matter for the Administration Committee and my hon. Friend may wish to refer any specific matter of particular concern to that Committee.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number and annual cost of staff at Doncaster prison; and what are the figures in respect of the agreed tender.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 16 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of and annual cost of staff at Doncaster prison.

The Prison Service pays a fee to Premier Prison Services Ltd to manage Doncaster prison. It is not broken down into elements such as pay. It is therefore not possible for us to say how much the annual cost of staff is. This is a matter for the company.

The tender assumed a staffing level of 356 staff. The contract signed with Premier Prison Services Ltd anticipated that additional staff or other resources might be necessary and allowed for the employment of further staff. Costs of additional staff who are authorised by the Prison Service are borne largely by the Prison Service. The price paid by the Prison Service is, however, limited to the maximum permitted by the contract, which equates to the cost per place of £295 per week published at the time of contract award. The Prison Service has authorised the employment of a further 55 staff.

I understand that Premier Prison Services has employed a further 24 staff for whom they have not sought reimbursement from the Prison Service and the costs of whose employment are borne entirely by the company. This brings the total number of staff to 435.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has not yet provided the information about the next step agencies requested by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton in his question of 20 January.

Mr. Howard: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 9 February.

Sikhs (Refugees and Asylum Seekers)

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Sikhs have been granted exceptional leave to remain in each year since 1984.

(2) how many sikhs have been granted political asylum since 1984.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on Sikhs is not separately identifiable in the statistics. The number of Indian nationals recognised as refugees and granted asylum during the period 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1994 was five, and 30 were granted exceptional leave during the same period. Information for the years 1985 to 1993 is given in tables 3.1 and 3.2 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin: "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1993", issue 17/94 published on 14th July 1994, a copy of which is in the Library.

Long Lartin Prison

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the death in Long Lartin prison of Mr. Norman Manning; if he has established whether it was racially motivated; and if he will instigate further police investigations into the causes of his death.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 16 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the death of Mr. Norman Manning in Long Lartin prison on 29 September last year.

Mr. Manning's death was immediately reported to the police and their investigation started straight away. These inquiries are still in progress and as yet nobody has been charged with any offence. The conduct of the police investigation is a matter for the Chief Officer of the West Mercia Constabulary.

I am unable to say whether or not further inquiries may be necessary, nor in these circumstances can I comment on the motive for the killing.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, columns 896–98, (1) how many and what proportion of in-country asylum seekers who were refused both asylum and exceptional leave to remain in 1992 to 1994 have been removed; how many of the balance remain in detention; how many others are required to report regularly to the police or immigration authorities; and in how many cases their addresses are unknown to the authorities;

(2) how many and what proportion of those citizens of foreign countries, whose in-country application for asylum or exceptional leave to remain were refused in the years 1992 to 1994 have not been removed or left voluntarily; what assessment he has made of the reasons for this; what steps he proposes to take to secure their removal; what reasons underlie the exclusion of people in this category from the statistics published by his Department for inward immigration to the United Kingdom; and if he will now publish revised figures in respect of each of the past five years including those and other categories of illegal entrants known to his Department

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to his question on 3 February 1995, Official Report, columns 896–98, which provided the available information on the number of refusals of in-country applications for asylum in 1992–1994, and the number of removals and voluntary departures in 1992–94, of failed in-country asylum applicants. Information before 1992 is not available. Those removed are not necessarily included in the figures for those refused in the same time period and thus it is not possible to determine the proportion of refusals who were not removed.

In-country asylum applicants are included in the Department's statistics on the number entering the United Kingdom who are subject to immigration control, most of whom enter as visitors or students. These figures are published in table 3.1 of the Command Paper "Control of Immigration Statistics 1993". In addition, separate statistics on asylum applications are published annually in the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics UK 1993". Copies of both are available in the Library.

The available figures for departures relating to those refused asylum or exceptional leave to remain are for those removed or who embark voluntarily after deportation or illegal entry action has commenced against them. The difference in the published statistics between the number refused asylum or exceptional leave to remain and the number removed or who voluntarily departed in a given year will include persons who are awaiting the outcome of an appeal; are allowed to remain after a successful appeal; have withdrawn their claim for asylum; have left the country before steps had been taken to enforce their departure; and those granted permission to stay in another capacity, for example, marriage.

Removal of failed asylum seekers who fail to leave of their own volition is possible only after all rights of appeal in this country have been exhausted. At that stage, the immigration service will take the appropriate steps to trace and remove failed asylum seekers.

As at 30 January 1995, 225 persons who had applied for asylum in country were detained, pending the outcome of an appeal or awaiting removal. In addition, as at 13 February 1995, 1,773 persons who had applied for asylum in-country and had been refused asylum or exceptional leave between 1992 to 1994, were placed on restriction orders or granted temporary admission, requiring them to report to the police on a regular basis and/or restricting their place of residence. A further 220 persons are known to have absconded or are classified as missing.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, columns 896–98, by what date at the present rate of progress, he expects to clear the backlog of 55,255 applications for asylum dependants, outstanding at 31 December 1994; of these how many entered the United Kingdom claiming some grounds other than as asylum seekers; and how many are being detained under secure conditions.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The rate at which the backlog of undecided asylum applications can be reduced will depend in part on the number of applications received in the future. It is therefore not possible to give a reliable forecast of when it might be reduced to a minimum working level. Information is not available on the proportion of the backlog that applied in country for asylum.

As at 30 January 1995, 139 persons were detained who are awaiting an initial decision on their asylum applications.

Wild Birds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences against wild birds were alleged, and how many of these resulted in successful prosecutions, in each year since 1990;

(2) how many cases of the persecution of birds of prey have been recorded in each year since 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The number of cases of persecution of birds of prey is not recorded centrally.

The numbers of defendants prosecuted and convicted under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 from 1990 to 1993, latest available, for offences related to birds are given in the table. Information is not collected centrally as to the species involved.

Fire Service College

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present financial position of the Fire Service college; what assessment he has made of its future position and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Fire Service college became a next steps agency, operating as a trading fund on 1 April 1992. The published accounts for the financial year 1993–94 show a deficit of £2.7 million. A similar loss is predicted for 1994–95.

With the assistance of external consultants, a review is being undertaken of options for the college's future status and financial structure.

Football Offences

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal proceedings involving alleged offences contained in sections 2, 3 and 4 of the Football (Offences) Act 1991 were pursued in 1993 and 1994; and how many convictions were secured.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1992 and 1993 is given in the table below.

The 1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Number of defendants prosecuted and convicted of offences under The Football (Offences) Act 1991, 1992 and 1993
England and Wales

Metropolitan Police Committee

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the names of nominees to the Metropolitan police committee from the London Boroughs Association and the Association of London Authorities;

(2) which serving members of local authorities in London were appointed to the Metropolitan police committee; and what was the source of their nomination or recommendation;

(3) if the local authority associations for London were consulted on the composition of, or invited to submit nominations for the Metropolitan police committee: and if he will make a statement;

(4) how many nominations to the Metropolitan police committee submitted by the Association of London Authorities or London Boroughs Association were accepted.

Mr. Maclean: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for East Hampshire (Mr. Mates) on 9 February, columns 382-83. Two of the 11 members of the Metropolitan police committee whose appointment my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 9 February are also serving members of local authorities in London. Councillor Heaster was suggested by the leader of Wandsworth borough and Councillor Mrs. O'Neill applied directly. A large number of organisations with an interest in the policing of London, including the London local authority associations, were invited to suggest the names of people who might be invited to apply for membership of the Metropolitan police committee but we made it clear that members would be appointed individually, and not as representatives of any particular body. There was no system of nomination. The names suggested by the London Boroughs Association were Councillor Mrs Hanham, Councillor Tope and Councillor Ms Walker; and those by the Association of London Authorities were Councillor Sawyer, Councillor Harris, Councillor Colman and Councillor Ms Hughes. None were appointed.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many payments have been made to applicants to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in 1993–94; and how much was paid out;

(2) how many payments have been offered to applicants to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in 1994–95; and how much in total has been offered;

(3) what was the average time taken to make an offer under the criminal injuries compensation scheme in 1994–95: and what has been the average time taken to make an offer under the tariff scheme.

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board made 40,635 monetary awards in 1993–94, paying out £165.111 million in compensation.

In the period 1 April 1994 to 31 January 1995, approximately 33,000 offers of payment totalling £129 million were made under the old, 1990 scheme, and some 1,560 offers of award totalling £4 million were made under the tariff scheme.

Comparable information about the average time taken to make awards under the two schemes is not available.

Horseracing Betting Levy

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sums were raised by the off-course levy collected by the Horseracing Betting Levy Board in 1993 and 1994; and what sums were collected via the 0.25 per cent. duty reduction available to horseracing over the same periods.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The yield for the 32nd levy scheme was £51.6 million; figures for the previous two schemes were £46.9 million—31st levy scheme—and £36 million—30th scheme. The amount made available to the horseracing industry from the reduction in general betting duty in 1992 is not calculated centrally. The effect of the reduction was taken into account in determining the structure of the 31st levy scheme and in subsequent levy settlements.

British Greyhound Fund

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what receipts have been paid into the British Greyhound Fund for 1994, or to the latest available date: and if he will estimate the percentage that they represent of the total sum that would have been available if all off-course betting shops had contributed their 0.25 per cent. of betting duty during that period;

(2) what have been the main areas to benefit from the distribution of funds by the British Greyhound Fund since its establishment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that the fund received income of £1.9 million in 1993–94 as payments from bookmakers in respect of the voluntary agreement arising from the duty concession in the 1992 Budget. Figures are not available centrally for the sum which would have been raised if all off-course bookmakers were contributing in full to the fund.

I understand that the fund allocates money to benefit areas such as prize money, integrity services and improvements to tracks, including maintenance and lighting.

Mr. Habid Ur Rehman

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Habid Ur Rehman, the sponsor of his wife, Mrs. Amina Bibi, who has applied to the United Kingdom post in Islamabad to join her husband in the United Kingdom—Ref: IMM/C 3835—will be interviewed by immigration officials at Leeds/Bradford airport; when his Department recorded any request from Islamabad for Mr. Rehman to be interviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The request from the British high commission in Islamabad for an interview with Mr. Rehman was received by the Home Office on 7 November 1994 and the papers are, at present, in a queue at Leeds/Bradford airport awaiting the arrangements of an interview. There are other similar cases at Leeds/Bradford airport which have been awaiting a sponsor interview longer than Mr. Rehman and to offer him an earlier interview date would serve only to disadvantage others in the queue.

Prison Escapes

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 810, into which prison category escapes from prison in (a) 1979, (b) 1984–85 and (c) 1993–94 figures fell; and if the escapes include escapes from escorts to prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs Barbara Roche, dated 16 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question, pursuant to his Answer of 2 February, Official Report, Column 810, into which prison category escapes from prisons in (a) 1979, (b) 1984–85 and (c) 1993–94 figures fell; and if the escapes include escapes from escorts to prisons.

The tables below show the revised figures for the escapes from Prison Service establishments and prison escorts that occurred in the calendar year 1979, the period 1 January 1984 to 31 March 1985 and for the financial year ending 31 March 1994. The figures for 1979 and 1984–85 have been revised in line with my answer to your Question PO1470 I.

Prisoners

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what notice is given to prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons in the United Kingdom before a cell search takes place.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 February 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Elizabeth Peacock, dated 16 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the searching of prisoners' cells.

If a prisoner is available when a cell is to be searched, he or she will be informed that the search is to take place. He or she will be allowed to view the search from the cell doorway, under the observation of staff.

The Woodcock enquiry recommended that in future at all closed prisons prisoners should be excluded from the cell during search, to avoid intimidation. This was part of a wider recommendation on changes to searching procedures.

WALES

Local Government Employees

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) population, (b) number of employees, (c) number of employees per 1,000 population and (d) political party in control in each local authority; and if he will post the answer on his Department's pages on the Government's world wide web server, "www.open.gov.uk".

Mr. Redwood: The latest available information is shown in the following table. Local authority staffing figures are maintained by the Local Government Management Board. There are currently no arrangements for providing the information in the way requested.

Cadw

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when Cadw will reopen an office in Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the agency and I have asked the chief executive, Mr. John Carr, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from E. A. J. Carr to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 13 February 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question in which you asked when Cadw would re-open an office in Gwynedd.

The Agency has never had a public office in Gwynedd although it does have a Works management unit at Caernarfon. Our professional and field staff, however, travel frequently throughout Wales, providing a direct point of contact for members of public who may be potential grant applicants; offering advice to local authorities on statutory procedures and best practice in conservation; and also liaising with a range of bodies and organisations which have an interest in preserving and promoting the built heritage of Wales.

Cadw is committed to improving the standard of services it provides to the public generally and its customers, in particular, across the range of Agency activities. The views of customers on how well they feel we deliver those services, and suggestions for how we may better meet their needs, are always welcome and given careful consideration.

At present, however, the Agency has no plans to open a public office in the North Wales area.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will issue planning policy guidance on nature conservation in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Draft guidance is being prepared and I intend to consult Welsh interests before the summer.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish a Welsh Office equivalent of planning policy guidance 9, "Nature Conservation".

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Draft guidance is being prepared and I intend to consult Welsh interests before the summer.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if it is his policy to implement in Wales the United Kingdom strategy for sustainable development in January 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government's strategy for sustainable development, published in January 1994, covers all parts of the United Kingdom; and provides a framework for action. In line with this, on 31 January 1995, my right hon. Friend published "The Environmental Agenda for Wales" setting out our plans for striking a sensible balance between development and conservation needs in the Principality. A copy of the agenda is available in the Library of the House.

Environmental Agenda

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what is the status of his statement on the environmental agenda for Wales in the planning system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The agenda reflects existing planning policies and should be taken into account by local planning authorities, where relevant, together with detailed planning policy guidance.

Community Areas and Councils

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each county and district council area in Wales and for Wales as a whole the number of (a) community areas, (b) community and town councils and (c) community or town councils which have (i) ceased to exist or (ii) been established during each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested by the hon. Member at (c) can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information requested at (a) and (b) is set out in the following table.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of staff employed by his Department (a) in Cardiff and (b) the rest of Wales.

Mr. Redwood: At 1 February, my Department, including Cadw, employed 1,701 permanent full-time equivalent staff in Cardiff and 566.5 permanent full-time equivalent staff throughout the rest of Wales.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total budget of his Department in (a) 1979, (b) 1986 and (c) 1994.

Mr. Redwood: Public expenditure within the responsibility of the Welsh Office totalled £1,769 million and £3,028 million in 1979–80 and 1986–87 respectively and that for 1994–95 is estimated to be £6,585 million.

Quangos

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total remuneration paid to members of quangos in Wales in 1993–94.

Mr. Redwood: The remuneration paid to members of executive non-departmental public bodies in 1993–94 was £773,226.57—excluding national insurance and pension contributions—made up as follows:

Agricultural Wages Committees	992.95
Arts Council of Wales	nil
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation	102,000.00
Countryside Council for Wales	96,760.00
Curriculum and Assessment Authority	24,909.62

[2] £1,712 was paid to chairman prior to the board's inception as an executive NDPB.

Artificial Limb and Appliance Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter dated 31 January from the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association concerning the future management organisation of the artificial limb and appliance services Wales.

Mr. Redwood: With the agreement of the British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association, a copy of its letter of 31 January has been placed in the Library of the House.

Prescribing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answers of 23 January, Official Report, column 66, 26 January, Official Report, columns 379–80, and 30 January, Official Report, column 535, what was the aggregate cost of prescribing for each family health services area authority divided by generic and brand name prescribing and for the total of fundholding GPs and non-fundholders.

Mr. Redwood: Data for October 1993 and October 1994 are as follows:

	October 1993		October 1994
	Generic	Other	Generic	Other

Note:
Data for October 1992 are not readily available.

Child Abuse

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department was first informed in writing by a child care officer of allegations relating to wide spread child sex abuse at north Wales children's homes; and what steps his Department took to investigate the allegations.

Mr. Redwood: The Department received in June 1991 allegations from a child care worker formerly employed by Gwynedd county council, about sexual abuse of children in children's homes in north Wales. These matters became the subject of inquiries by the North Wales police.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the Queen's counsel to be appointed to read the papers relating to child sex abuse cases in north Wales from the files of the Clwyd and Gwynedd county social services departments and the North Wales police also to be given duties to interview individuals who wish to volunteer statements to the Queen's counsel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Details of the investigation will be announced as soon as possible.

Local Agenda 21

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take to promote the drawing up of local agenda 21s.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Action by councils in this general area is being taken forward under their local Agenda 21 initiative, co-ordinated at the United Kingdom level by the local authority associations. Although local strategies under agenda 21 are for individual councils to develop, the environmental agenda for Wales, recently published by my right hon. Friend, encourages Welsh councils, and others, to take a range of practical "green" measures.

Minerals Planning Guidance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest version of minerals planning guidance on aggregates provision which applies to Wales; when it went out of print; and what steps he intends to take to ensure that the guidance on this subject issued by his Department will be taken fully into account by local authorities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Minerals planning guidance note 6—MPG 6—"Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales", is extant in so far as it relates to Wales: it went out of print in July 1994, although Her Majesty's Stationery Office can still supply copies through an out-of-print service. In October 1993, my right hon. Friend wrote to the leaders of all local authorities in Wales reminding them that government guidance must be fully taken into account when discharging their planning responsibilities.

NHS Suppliers (Payment)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 377, if he will place a copy in the Library of the guidance issued on prompt settlement of bills to NHS organisations; if he will list which NHS organisations have been sent a copy of this guidance; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Redwood: The guidance has been placed in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Objective 1 Funding

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the projects that have been approved for European Union objective 1 funding for the highlands and islands in the first round of (a) the European regional development fund and (b) the European social fund; what was the expenditure approved for each project and what was the total expenditure; and if he will place this information in the Library;

(2) what limitations apply to Government Departments for applying for European Union objective 1 funding for projects in the highlands and islands;

(3) how much finance from objective 1 funds for the highlands and islands has so far been earmarked for (a) energy supply networks and (b) transport infrastructure; and if he will list the relevant projects;

(4) if he will list the projects that were not approved for European Union objective 1 funding for the highlands and islands in the first round of (a) the European social fund and (b) the European regional development fund;

(5) if he will list the successful applications for European Union objective 1 funding for the highlands and islands which are located in Argyll and Bute;

(6) what has been the total level of funding from objective 1 funds for the highlands and islands that has so far been earmarked for each Scottish Office Department; and what this is as a percentage of the total expenditure so far committed to projects.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Government Departments are able to compete for objective 1 funding on the same basis as other potential project sponsors.

To date, no funds have been allocated to the Scottish Office from the European regional development fund. Contributions from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund and the financial instrument for fisheries guidance of 47.08 million ecu, about £37 million, and 19.80 million ecu, about £16 million, respectively are expected over the life of the programme—1994 to 1999—in relation to schemes administered by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department for the benefit of farmers, crofters, food processors, fishermen, fish farmers, fishing industry organisations and local fishing port authorities and enterprises. Applications for support from the European social fund towards Government training programmes is made by Highlands and Islands Enterprise. These programmes will not take up any more than 40 per cent. of the European social fund resources.

In relation to the more specific questions on the first round of project consideration, as the information requested is lengthy, I shall arrange for copies of the tables to be placed in the House Library.

Cochlear Implants

Mr. Worthington : To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what calculation he has made of the numbers of profoundly deaf children who would benefit from cochlear implants;

(2) what is the cost of a cochlear implant operation for a profoundly deaf child; and how many children in Scotland have received this operation in the current financial year;

(3) what representations he has received from the surgeons carrying out cochlear implants in Scotland about the best age for carrying out this operation; and what he is doing to match funding to the number of children needing this operation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The national services division of the common services agency, which is responsible for purchasing this service, has commissioned an assessment of need for paediatric cochlear implantation in Scotland which will be published shortly. The findings of this report will inform future provision and funding levels for the service.

No representations have been received from surgeons carrying out cochlear implants in Scotland about the best age for undertaking the operation. A recent Medical Research Council evaluation study has indicated that, in general terms, cochlear implantation has favourable outcomes up to the age of seven years.

The cost of a paediatric cochlear implant operation is £28,725 in 1994–95. Five children have received this operation in Scotland in the current financial year. The numbers of children referred for operation to centres outwith Scotland is not held centrally.

Coastal Policy

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the expected publication date for the Scottish Office coastal discussion paper;

(2) what progress has been made on producing national planning policy guidance on the coast;

(3) what initiatives the Scottish Office is undertaking to promote coastal zone management in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: My officials are working on a discussion paper on coastal policy issues, which will be published as soon as possible. The paper will provide an overview of existing policies affecting the coast and will consider the need for planning guidance. It will also discuss the concept of coastal zone management as it applies to Scottish circumstances putting particular emphasis on partnership and the voluntary principle.

NHS Abortions

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS abortions were performed under 13 weeks of pregnancy on women resident in each health board in 1993; and of these operations, how many involved admission and discharge on the same day.

NHS therapeutic abortions performed in 1993 with an estimated gestation of under 13 weeks; by health board of residence

Health board of residence	Total	Number discharged on day of admission

Note:
Abortions performed on Scottish residents in England and Wales are excluded. All figures are provisional.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many abortions were performed on women resident in each health board in 1993; and, of these operations, how many were performed in NHS hospitals.

Therapeutic Abortions in 1993; by health board of residence

Abortions performed on Scottish residents in England and Wales are excluded. All figures are provisional.

Sheriff Court Houses

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Sheriff court houses in Scotland which do not satisfy the objectives set out in the justice charter for Scotland in respect of (a) accessibility for disabled people, (b) adequate and comfortable accommodation, (c) refreshment facilities and (d) services for defence witnesses and lawyers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Work is currently being undertaken to establish an independent assessment of the facilities provided in Sheriff court houses against the aims and objectives set out in the justice charter for Scotland. In recent years, a major programme of capital investment amounting to some £20 million per annum has been undertaken to improve facilities by providing new and refurbished court accommodation and this programme of work continues.

Scottish Avalanche Information Service

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase funding to the Scottish avalanche information service following the recent avalanche on Liathach, Torridon, Wester Ross; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish avalanche information service is administered by the Scottish Sports Council and is funded from the grant in aid total provided to the council by the Scottish Office. Any increase in funding is therefore a matter for the council in the first instance. The coverage of the scheme is reviewed regularly and at the end of this winter season, the council will be considering whether changes to the existing arrangements are necessary.

Local Authority Schools (Recruitment)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the local authority schools in Scotland that seek to recruit nationally.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. However, I am not aware of any local authority school that recruits nationally, either as regards staff or pupils, although education authorities do place advertisements from time to time.

Local Authority Schools (Funding)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the schools in Scotland that he directly funds independently of local authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office Education Department provides annual grants for the operation of the following schools:

Dornoch academy, Sutherland

Jordanhill school, Glasgow and provides grants towards the costs of operating the following schools:

Royal Blind school, Edinburgh

Donaldson's college, Edinburgh

Harmeny school, Balerno, Midlothian

East Park Home school, Glasgow

Stanmore House residential school, Lanark

Corseford residential school, Kilbarchan

Craighalbert centre, Cumbernauld

The New school, Butterstone, Dunkeld

The Scottish Home and Health Department provides occasional grants towards the capital costs of secure accommodation provision at St. Mary's Kenmure, Bishopbriggs and at Rossie school, near Montrose.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the special circumstances of the music school attached to Douglas academy in Milngavie will be fully taken into account when he decides the financial allocation to the new East Dunbartonshire council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the October 1992 consultation paper "Shaping the New Councils" made clear, the distribution of aggregate external finance to the new councils following local government re-organisation will be subject to consultation with Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in the distribution committee of the working party on local government finance. As at present, the distribution will be determined by the client group assessment methodology. The distribution committee will be considering during the course of this year the preparation of grant aided expenditure assessment for each of the new councils.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to the music school attached to Douglas academy in Milngavie and similar establishments; and what plans he has to give special financial help to such ventures when the new councils are set up.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government recognise the important contribution which the music school and other similar schools in Scotland make to the education system. It was following recommendations in a report by the Scottish Education Department in 1976 that these schools were set up.

The framework in the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 should ensure maximum continuity between the existing and the new authorities in terms of provision of education services.

Provisions already exist under section 23(2) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 to safeguard the financial position of an authority which, as in the case of Douglas academy, is providing education for pupils from another authority's area. Section 23(2) provides a mechanism whereby such an authority may recoup the costs incurred by so doing.

Procurator Fiscals

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many procurator fiscals or deputy procurator fiscals were attached to each procurator fiscal office in Scotland and if he will provide a breakdown of the average number of cases per procurator fiscal or deputy procurator fiscal in each office in (a) 1974, (b) 1984 and (c) 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Precise staffing figures for 1974 are not available. In any event, the procurator fiscal service took over prosecution in the district court between 1975 and 1976 and this makes comparison of staffing levels prior to then inappropriate. The figures requested are provided below for the years 1976, 1984 and 1994. Little significance can be attached to them, since scope for comparison between staffing levels and bare case numbers is restricted by differing degrees of complexity and duration of cases, geographical considerations, and inter-office assistance.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources were allocated to each procurator fiscal's office in Scotland for each of the last 10 years; and if he will break down this figure to show the average amount allocated per case dealt with by each office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Resources are not allocated to individual offices on a per-case basis; they are allocated and managed regionally for the departmental settlement on a basis of past performance, local factors and forecast work load. Allocations per case would be unreliable, there being no meaningful comparison to be made on such a basis because of differing degrees of complexity and duration of cases, geographical variations and inter-office assistance.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of cases dealt with by each procurator fiscal's office giving the numerical and percentage breakdown of cases which (a) were marked no proceedings, (b) were dealt with through fiscal fines, (c) proceeded to court, (d) resulted in charges being proved and (e) resulted in persons receiving a custodial sentence for the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: As the information requested is lengthy I have arranged for it to be placed in the Library of the House.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner fundholders in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole have over-run their budgets; and what was the average amount of the over-run in each of the last two years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 February 1995]: There are as yet no operational fundholders in Inverclyde area. In 1992–93, of a total of 10 GP fundholding practices in Scotland, one fundholding practice, located in the Grampian health board area, spent in excess of its allocated fund. The overspend was £4,754, approximately 0.5 per cent. of the allocated fund.

In 1993–94, 12 GP fundholding practices of a total of 70 throughout Scotland spent in excess of their allocated sum. One of these practices was located in the Argyll and Clyde health board area within Strathclyde region. The average overspend was £17,840 which represented approximately 1 per cent. of the average fund allocated by the health board.

In each case, the health board reviewed the reasons for these small overspends and considered them acceptable under the regulations governing the scheme.

Scottish Early Music Consort

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State of Scotland how much Scottish Office sources contribute to the Scottish Early Music Consort; and what help he will give the Glasgow International Early Music Festival in 1996.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 February 1995]: The Scottish Arts Council, which is the main channel of Scottish Office support for the arts in Scotland, will contribute £15,600 to the Scottish Early Music Consort in 1995–96. It is for the Scottish Arts Council to determine whether it should support the Glasgow International Early Music Festival in 1996.

M77

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place a copy of the informal letter of inquiry from the European Commission about the Ayr road route, M77, in the Library; and if he will make available the response to this letter.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 February 1995]: No. Correspondence between the European Commission and member states on infraction proceedings, including preliminary contacts of this sort, is regarded as confidential between the parties.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies he has undertaken in the Scottish water industry to compare build own and operate, and build own operate and transfer schemes with traditional methods of local government financing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. George Kynoch [holding answer 8 February 1995]: In November 1994, a commentary on the benefits of build own and operate schemes was prepared by the Scottish Office in response to a study produced by Strathclyde regional council. A copy of the commentary is in the Library. It concludes that the private sector should offer terms which compare favourably with public funding costs. Under current rules, build own operate and transfer schemes would count as public expenditure.

NORTHERN IRELAND

United Kingdom Integrity

10. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the policy of his Department in the maintenance of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ancram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold).

Public Bodies

11. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many non-departmental public bodies there are in Northern Ireland; how many people serve on two or more of them; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 6 February, Official Report, columns 44-5.

Criminal Justice

12. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to bring the criminal justice system into line with that elsewhere in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: We are preparing a range of measures to improve the working of the criminal justice system in Northern Ireland. They reflect Northern Ireland's circumstances, though drawing on experience in the rest of the United Kingdom, and elsewhere.

Town Centres

13. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance his Department is giving to regenerate town centres in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: In Belfast and Londonderry the urban development grant scheme encourages private sector investment in development projects. Regeneration in town centres other than Belfast and Londonderry is encouraged through grant assistance, totalling around £4 million annually, for comprehensive development, environmental improvement, pedestrianisation and conservation schemes. My Department also administers and co-funds with the international fund for Ireland, IFI, the community regeneration improvement special programme.

Benefit Applicants

14. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Social Security Agency offices located in Northern Ireland administer cases for applicants residing in Great Britain in addition to applicants from Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: None.

Peace Process

15. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further discussions he has had with the Dublin Government on the progress of the peace process.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I met Mr. Spring in Belfast on 14 February. This was a regular meeting of the intergovernmental conference and we discussed a range of issues.

22. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received about future prospects for peace and prosperity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for hon. Members to further the peace process in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had about furthering the peace process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Mayhew: I refer hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field).

Northern Ireland-Scotland Bodies

16. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to create joint Northern Ireland-Scotland bodies with executive powers.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Tourism

17. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the increase in tourism and visitor bookings in Northern Ireland since the ceasefire last year.

Mr. Ancram: It is estimated that since the ceasefire, visitor bookings have increased by 30 per cent. over the same period in 1993. During the period September to December 1994, hotel room occupancy figures rose by an average of 8 percentage points when compared with the same period in 1993. The occupancy figures recorded in October, November and December 1994 were the highest for those months since records began in 1973.

The Northern Ireland tourist board's Dublin office has reported a 155 per cent. increase in bookings since the ceasefire.

Figures for travel to Northern Ireland have also risen since the ceasefire. Sea passenger movements have increased by 6.3 per cent. over the same period in 1993. Belfast international airport and Belfast harbour airport reported inward passenger increases of 3 per cent. and 6 per cent. respectively on the figures for December 1993.

Local Government Employees

18. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are estimated to be currently employed in local government; in how many local authorities they are operating and at what overall cost per head of the population; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The total number of people employed by the 26 district councils in Northern Ireland at 31 March 1994 was 8,607. The average cost per head of the total population of the Province, based on the salaries and wages for the financial year ended 31 March 1994, was £61.12. It is not possible to compare this figure with the position of local authorities in Great Britain in any meaningful way because of the much smaller range of functions undertaken by district councils in Northern Ireland.

Framework Document

19. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how far the cross-border initiatives in tourism, health and the arts, announced by his Ministers in November last year, are a precursor for the all-Ireland bodies proposed in the framework document.

Mr. Ancram: The initiatives announced in November were made on their own merits. I will not be drawn on the proposals likely to be contained in the joint framework document, except to reiterate that they will be for the consideration and agreement of the parties. Obviously if there has already been a declared mutual interest, these might be suitable subjects for north-south co-operation.

Unemployment

20. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently unemployed; and what was the figure in December 1992.

Mr. Ancram: The latest available seasonally adjusted figures show that at January 1995 there were 91,100 people unemployed in Northern Ireland. The corresponding figure for December 1992 was 105,900.

Irish Republic

21. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding relations between his Department and the Government of the Irish Republic.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am glad to say that relationships are close and constructive.

Environment Protection Agency

23. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration is being given to the establishment of an environment protection agency in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The Environment Service of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has responsibility for the control of pollution, the conservation of the natural environment and the protection of the man-made heritage. The service is currently the subject of a prior options study. The Government will decide whether any proposals for change in the implementation of environmental policy in Northern Ireland should be made when the results of the study are known shortly.

Scottish Transport Links

24. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland about transport links between Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: In view of the satisfactory arrangements for discussing these matters at official level I have not needed to discuss the subject of transport links between Northern Ireland and Scotland with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Firearms

25. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the number of firearms currently illegally held by terrorist organisations in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: Terrorist organisations have access to a considerable quantity of weapons and equipment of various types; however, it would not, on security grounds, be appropriate to provide detailed estimates. The Government continue to regard substantial progress on the question of decommissioning paramilitary arms as a vital element in advancing the political process in Northern Ireland.

Housing

26. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are his priorities for action to improve housing conditions and prospects in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: The Government's housing priorities for Northern Ireland are set out in Command Paper No. 2516 "Expenditure Plans and Priorities", a copy of which is available in the Library.

The Government are committed to building on the significant progress made over the last 20 years in terms of increasing home ownership, improving housing conditions and meeting housing need.

27. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums he is making available for housing grants in Northern Ireland in the current financial year.

Mr. Moss: Government, through the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, is making £32.5 million available for housing grants to the private sector in this financial year.

Training Courses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list each training and tuition course with a total cost exceeding £5,000 paid for by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies during the last 12 months, showing the title and objectives of each course, the name of the organisations engaged, the total cost of each course, a summary of the responsibilities of staff members taking part and the process for course evaluation by the Department or agency.

Sir John Wheeler: The information has been placed in the Library.

Generating Companies

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the level of efficiency improvements achieved in generating companies since privatisation; and what consideration he has given to requiring these companies to absorb more costs rather than pass them on to electricity consumers.

Mr. Ancram: None. Following the privatisation of the electricity industry in Northern Ireland efficiency improvements achieved in generating stations are matter for the private company concerned. The absorption of the costs of generating electricity is a matter for negotiation and contractual agreement between the generating companies and Northern Ireland Electricity plc.

The Director General of Electricity Supply for Northern Ireland has responsibility for ensuring that consumers' interests as regards price and quality of service are protected.

Islander Marine

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the contracted crew from Islander Marine Strangford, on the Portaferry-Strangford ferry service, is operating to the satisfaction of the Marine Safety Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: Crewing arrangements on the Portaferry-Strangford ferry service have been approved by the Marine Safety Agency.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the postal address of Islander Marine in the village of Strangford; if the premises are occupied; and if he will make a statement about the contribution of Islander Marine to the operation of the Portaferry-Strangford ferry.

Mr. Moss: The registered postal address of Islander Marine (Ireland) Ltd is 1 the Slip, Strangford, County Down, BT30 7NE. The Department is not aware if these premises are occupied. Islander Marine (Ireland) Ltd provides part of the crew of the Strangford-Portaferry service.

Transport Companies

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the studies which have been conducted into the re-organisation of the transport companies in Northern Ireland including Northern Ireland Railways, Ulsterbus and Citybus; and when a report is due to be published.

Mr. Moss: My Department commissioned a study into the scope for introducing a private element into the management and operation of Northern Ireland Railways and I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Colchester, North (Mr. Jenkin) on 11 January, Official Report, column 146. In addition, the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company commissioned a study into the potential for the co-ordination of bus and rail services in Northern Ireland and any necessary restructuring required for this to be achieved.

Following consideration of a report of that study, and of the study into Northern Ireland Railways, I announced in Belfast on 17 January 1995 plans for co-ordinating bus and rail services; restructuring the boards of Northern Ireland Railways, Ulsterbus and Citybus on the basis of common membership; unifying the senior management structure of these companies; and selling their non-core services and applying market tests and contracting out where appropriate. There are no plans to publish reports of either study.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 400, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Seventy-five appointments have been made to Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service and Science public bodies in the last year. Of these, 57 were to the new research councils announced in the White Paper "Realising Our Potential".

Sick Leave

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 7 February, Official Report, columns 125–28, what factors underlie the disparity between the figure given for sick absence at the Department of Social Security in 1993 and the figure given in the answer from the Secretary of State for Social Security to the hon. Member for Eastleigh of 23 January, Official Report, column 85; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The figure given in my answer to the hon. Member for Eltham on 7 February represents the average number of days sick leave taken by staff in DSS headquarters—excluding staff in DSS agencies. The figure given in the answer of 23 January by the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People to the hon. Member for Eastleigh represents the average number of days sick leave taken by staff throughout DSS.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 7 February, Official Report, columns 125–28, what factors underlie the disparity between the figure given for sick absence at the Office of Public Service and Science in 1993 and the figure given in his answer to the hon. Member for Eastleigh of 2 February, Official Report, column 754; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The sickness absence figure given in my answer to the hon. Member for Eastleigh on 2 February inadvertently used an incorrect figure for staff in post. The correct figure for OPSS excluding any weekends and public holidays which occurred within a single period of sickness absence is as given in my answer of 7 February to the hon. Member for Eltham. I apologise for any inconvenience caused.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 7 February, Official Report, columns 125–28, what factors underlie the disparity between the figure given for sick absence at the Treasury Solicitor's Department in 1993 and the figure given in the answer from the Attorney-General to the hon. Member for Eastleigh on 27 January, Official Report, column 409; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The absence figure given in my answer to the hon. Member for Eltham on 7 February is based upon working days lost—excluding weekends and public holidays—solely due to sickness. The figure given in the answer of 27 January by the Attorney-General was calculated including weekends, public holidays and certain absences which were not attributable to sickness.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 7 February, Official Report, columns 125–28, what factors underlie the disparity between the figure given for sick absence at the Department of Transport in 1993 and the figure given in the answer from the Secretary of State for Transport to the hon. Member for Eastleigh on 31 January, Official Report, column 585; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The calculations which produced the figures given in the answer of 31 January by the Secretary of State for Transport inadvertently omitted one category of sickness absence. The correct figure for sickness absence at the Department of Transport in 1993 is given in my answer of 7 February.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 7 February, Official Report, columns 125–28, what factors underlie the disparity between the figure given for sick absence at the Department of Trade and Industry in 1993 and the figure given in the answer from the President of the Board of Trade of 30 January, Official Report, column 477; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The sickness absence figure given in my answer to the hon. Member for Eltham on 7 February is based on working days lost—excluding weekends and public holidays. The figure given in the answer of 30 January by the President of the Board of Trade to the hon. Member for Eastleigh was calculated using data which for reasons of administrative control, included both weekends and public holidays.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 7 February, Official Report, columns 125–28, what factors underlie the disparity between the figure given for sick absence at the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency in 1993 and the figure given in his answer to the hon. Member for Eastleigh of 2 February, Official Report, column 755; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The sickness absence figure given in my answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) on 7 February is based upon working days lost—excluding weekends and public holidays. The figure given in my answer of 2 February was calculated including both weekends and public holidays.

EDUCATION

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she keeps central statistics about the specific details of individual learning difficulties in accordance with the recommendations of the Warnock committee.

Mr. Forth: A key recommendation of the Warnock report in 1978 was that statutory categories of handicap should be abolished. Central statistics giving details of pupils' individual learning difficulties are not collected.

Departmental Employees

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) full-time employees and (b) part-time employees were employed in her Department in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The number of staff in post at 1 April was as follows:

	Full-time	Part-time	Total
1990	2,514	155	2,669
1991	2,607	182	2,789
1992	2,645	186	2,831
1993	1,962	148	2,110
1994	1,915	150	2,065

These figures include throughout staff in post in the Teachers Pensions Agency. The figures for 1990, 1991 and 1992 include HMI and staff responsible for science and sport. Those responsible for science and sport transferred respectively to the Cabinet Office and the Department of National Heritage in July 1992. The majority of Her Majesty's inspectorate and their support staff transferred to the Office for Standards in Education in September 1992.

Further Education Funding Council

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) full-time employees and (b) part-time employees were employed in the Further Education Funding Council for each quarter since it commenced operation.

Mr. Boswell: The questions raised by the hon. Member are matters for the funding council. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Funding Agency for Schools

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) full-time employees and (b) part-time employees were employed in the Funding Agency for Schools in each quarter since it commenced operation.

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked its chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Ministerial Travel (Hong Kong)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: None.

Schools, London

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the actual spending per child at (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the London boroughs of (i) Camden, (ii) Southwark, (iii) Westminster and (iv) Haringey for (i) 1993 and (ii) 1994.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows expenditure by these local education authorities on pre-primary and primary pupils combined, and on secondary pupils, for 1992–93, and provisional figures for 1993–94. Equivalent information on grant-maintained schools is not available.

Net institutional spending per pupil cash terms

	Nursery/ Primary 1992–93 £	Nursery/ Primary 1993–94 £	Secondary 1992–93 £	Secondary 1993–94 £
Camden	2,067	2,047	2,726	2,721
Southwark	1,846	1,806	2,506	2,421
City of Westminster	2,292	2,592	2,486	2,739
Haringey	2,102	2,236	2,897	3,041

School Teachers Review Body

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will estimate the cost to her Department's budget in 1995–96 of implementing in full the recommendations of the School Teachers Review Body, assuming no changes in staff numbers; and how much of the cost would be borne by (a) direct expenditure by her Department and (b) grants and loans to local authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: The School Teachers Review Body has recommended an increase of 2.7 per cent. in teachers' pay for 1995–96. The cost of this to local authorities in England is likely to be in the order of £275 million. There will be no costs borne directly by the Department.

Oxford and Cambridge Universities

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to change the system of the payment of college fees to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has been reviewing the experience of the last college fee settlement and expects to make an announcement shortly.

Teachers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the percentage increases for the main grades of local education authority school teaching staff for each year since 1989.

Mr. Robin Squire: The percentage increases in the main pay scales for heads and deputies and classroom teachers since 1989 are set out in the table:

Year	Heads and deputies	Classroom teachers
1989	7.5	6.0
1990	10.4	8.3
1991	12.75	9.5
1992	7.5	7.5
1993	1.5	1.5
1994	2.9	2.9
1995 (proposed)	2.7	2.7

Independent School Closures

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information her Department has of the number of independent schools which (a) opened and (b) closed in each year since 1988.

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of independent schools which have registered with the Department upon opening, and the number which have been removed from the register because of closure, are given, for each calendar year, in the following table:

Year	Number of independent schools opened	Number of independent schools closed
1988	40	30
1989	65	33
1990	50	45
1991	60	59
1992	56	68
1993	63	51
1994	67	79

Note: The numbers relate to England only and from 1990 include city technology colleges.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list, for each local education authority, the average amount of capital expenditure per pupil for 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not yet available.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her estimate of actual spending on education by local education authorities (a) nationally and (b) by individual local education authority in 1994–95; and what is the education standard spending assessment (i) nationally and (ii) by individual local education authority for 1995–96.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 10 February 1995]: Total current spending on education by English local authorities in 1994–95, as recorded on their revenue accounts returns, is estimated to be £17.510 billion. This figure includes expenditure funded by current education specific grants within aggregate external finance, but excludes expenditure funded by specific grants outside AEF. Education standard spending in 1995–96 is £17.204 billion; within that, education standard spending assessments, which include neither current education specific grants within AEF nor specific grants outside AEF, total £17.024 billion. The table gives for each local education authority budgeted spending in 1994–95, and its SSA for 1995–96.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

European Union Frontiers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he or his predecessor have received since 1991, concerning the legality of the opt-out negotiated by Her Majesty's Government to the Single European Act in 1985 relating to frontiers; what such representations he has conveyed to the Prime Minister; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: By convention, neither the advice of the Law Officers nor whether they have advised on a particular issue is normally disclosed.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Museums Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to announce the results of his Department's review of museums policy.

Mr. Dorrell: I am currently considering the results of the consultation process undertaken last year.

Oflot

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member of Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) of 2 February, Official Report, columns 779-80, what are the extra costs for consultancy, professional and legal advice associated with the grant of licences by Oflot; and which firms have provided the advice.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a matter for the Director General of the National Lottery. I have therefore asked him to write to the hon. Member, placing copies of his letter in the Library of the House.

Radio Broadcasts (Monitoring)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what monitoring he carries out of radio broadcasts to ensure that they comply with the Race Relations Acts or Public Order Acts;

(2) how many staff are employed in monitoring radio broadcasts to consider whether they are racially offensive or incite racial hatred.

Mr. Dorrell: None. These are matters for the Radio Authority or the BBC.

Hotel and Tourism Industry

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to tackle low motivation in the hotel and tourism industry caused by low pay.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no such proposals; pay and personnel issues are a matter for the industry itself.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to encourage investment in the tourist industry to offset jobs lost in the manufacturing industry in (a) Coventry and (b) the west midlands.

Mr. Dorrell: Funding is made available to the Heart of England tourist board through the English tourist board to undertake marketing and development activities in its regions, which includes Coventry and the west midlands. In the 1994–95 financial year, the HETB will receive £364,000—indicative figure. In addition, RTBs may bid for funding from the ETB's £2.25 million tourism development fund for specific projects. The public funds made available to the RTBs lever in substantial funding from the private sector.

Local authorities and the regional tourist boards are also eligible to bid for support from the European structural funds and the single regeneration budget. The Government office for the west midlands has allocated £28.4 million—indicative figure—from the European regional development fund for projects in the cultural, media and tourism industries in its programme for 1994–96.

English Tourist Board

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment his Department has made of the impact of reduced funding for the English tourist board on the number of holidays taken in Britain.

Mr. Dorrell: Recent changes, upward and downward, in funds provided to the ETB and British Tourist Authority reflect the Government's view of spending priorities in the tourism sector.

Muslim Community Radio

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has on the connection between Muslim Community radio and Hizb ut Tahir.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will bring forward proposals to authorise the increase in the television licence fee.

Mr. Dorrell: Regulations to bring into force from 1 April the new fees which I announced on 1 December of £86.50 for a colour licence and £28.50 for a black and white licence—Official Report, column 805, will be laid before the House at the beginning of March.

Television (Digital Licences)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he is required to bring forward proposals to allocate digital licences for television channels.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government intend to ensure that television broadcasters are in a position to take advantage of new digital technology, and are seeking their views before bringing forward proposals.

Channel 4

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he is next required to review Channel 4 funding.

Mr. Dorrell: The Broadcasting Act 1990 does not require me to review Channel 4 funding. However, the threshold percentages in the funding formula may be amended by order, but not before the end of 1997.

Football Transfers

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with the Australian Government in respect to the Australian inquiry into football transfers, with particular reference to transfers affecting English clubs.

Mr. Sproat: None.

Millennium Commission

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if the promotion of environmental education falls within the remit of the Millennium Commission.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, the Millennium Commission may make grants to such projects as it considers appropriate to mark the year 2000 and the beginning of the third millennium. More detailed information on the kinds of project which the commission will fund can be found in the commission's guidelines for applicants, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Arts Grants, Wales

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 619, if he will list the sponsor company which made the corresponding application to the Association for Business Sponsorship for the Arts for each of the cultural organisations or events listed in the answer.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is in the following table:

Organisation	Award £	Sponsor company
Theatr Bara Caws	4,000	Cwmni'r Castell
	7,200	Penadur

Welsh Television Channels

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what measures he will take to enable television viewers in Clwyd to receive the Welsh television channels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: It is for the BBC, the Independent Television Commission and the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority to determine their own engineering priorities for the coverage of their television services in Wales within the resources they have available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of television viewers in (a) Alyn and Deeside and (b) Clwyd can receive (i) BBC Wales, (ii) Harlech TV and (iii) Granada TV; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available in the form requested. The BBC, the Independent Television Commission and the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority respectively have responsibility for coverage of their television services in Wales. The Government have no independent figures.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 February 1995]: Since it was established in April 1992, neither my Department nor its agencies have taken legal action against a consultancy firm.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 587, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 February 1995]: In 1994, my Department made 82 appointments. In addition, the Prime Minister made 40 appointments and Her Majesty the Queen made 23 appointments on the recommendations of my Department.

Concessionary Television Licence Scheme

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to extend the concessionary television licence scheme to cover all housing schemes which have the services of a warden who is either residential or on call.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 14 February 1995]: As indicated in paragraph 5.17 of the White Paper "The Future of the BBC" (Cm 2621) published in July 1994, the Government considers that any review of the concessionary scheme aimed at removing perceived anomalies would most likely have the effect of creating fresh ones. We therefore have no plans for any amendments to the concessionary scheme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mortgage Protection Insurance

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the average duration of cover received after claiming against a mortgage protection policy; and what discussions his Department has had with the insurance industry in respect of proposals to extend coverage of benefits beyond the present normal fixed period following Government plans to compel all new mortgagees to take out protection policies.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Government have no intention to compel purchase of mortgage protection insurance but wish to encourage personal responsibility wherever possible.

There have been no specific discussions with the insurance industry on extending maximum duration of mortgage protection benefit beyond what is currently available—commonly, a total of 12 months, but up to 24 months in some cases. New, more flexible products are anticipated to arise from wider take-up of the insurance.

The Government do not collect information on average claims duration. However, soundings taken by the Association of British Insurers suggest average claim payment periods, in excess of a typical 60-day waiting period, of six to eight months for unemployment, four to six months for sickness and five months for incapacity following an accident.

Television Channels (Access)

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last discussed conditional access to television channels with another EU member state; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: At the EU Telecommunications Council last November, conditional access was discussed in the context of the draft directive on standards for TV transmission. Agreement was reached on the regulation requiring all conditional access systems used with digital broadcasts to use a standardised scrambling algorithm.

Steel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the level of investment in the United Kingdom steel industry.

Mr. Eggar: The figures for treaty of Paris products are as follows:

Investment in the UK steel crude industry

(SIC 221 Iron and steel industry treaty of Paris definition)

Net capital expenditure

In addition, and perhaps more important, the industry has invested in its people and British Steel now spends some 5 per cent. of its employment costs on training. The United Kingdom has a world-class steel industry, but one which is far from complacent and is working with my Department to tackle a whole range of competitiveness issues.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what was the level of steel in (a) tonnes and (b) percentage terms imported into the United Kingdom from (i) the EU, (ii) east Europe, (iii) the Russian Federation, (iv) Turkey, (v) North America, (vi) Latin America and (vii) Asia in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The information is in the table.

Mr. Whitney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about his Department's plans for strengthening the enforcement of European Coal and Steel Community rules on the provision of subsidies to steel producers.

Mr. Eggar: I am determined to fight for a level playing field for the United Kingdom steel industry. The exceptional granting of state aid to steel producers in countries such as Italy, Spain and Germany must be rigorously monitored. The Commission has the central role of ensuring that state aid is used only for the agreed purpose of restructuring, but this is a considerable task. It is also important to watch developments which have not yet been considered in the European Council, such as those in Ireland and Germany. I am therefore setting up the steel subsidies monitoring committee to help gather information—including any evidence of illegal subsidies—and to pass this on to the Commission for action. The committee will include representatives of British Steel, the British Iron and Steel Producers Association, Department of Trade and Industry and other Government Departments.

Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Acts

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when a consultative document will be published on the review of the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Acts.

Mr. Eggar: A consultative document on the review of the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Acts is published today. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House, and further copies can be obtained from my Department.

As I announced to the House on 2 December 1993, Official Report, columns 735–36, the review has a remit to establish what amendment, revision or reform is needed to the powers to grant compulsory access to minerals in order to provide an integrated regime for all minerals for the next century. Following the privatisation of the coal industry, the special procedures which are available to opencast coal operators—and not to other operators—will expire on 31 December 1999. Subsequently, the procedures for opencast coal are to be unified with the general regime contained in the mines (Working Facilities and Support) Acts. In considering the issues, the review is to have regard to the need to exploit the country's mineral resources, to the perception that the current general procedures are expensive and time-consuming and to the need to protect the rights of landowners.

The consultative document takes into account representations received following the announcement of the review. It puts forward options on a number of issues which are of concern to those involved in, or likely to be affected by, mineral development activities. It covers the need for rights of compulsory access, and their nature: the system that should be used to determine applications for the grant of such rights; the criteria to be employed; the compensation to be payable; the relationship with the system for determining land planning applications; and a number of subsidiary issues.

Views on the issues and options set out in the consultative document, and any others relevant to this review, are requested to reach my Department by 31 July 1995.

Insurance

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress towards the implementation of the third Council directive on non-life insurance, 92/49/EEC and the third Council directive on life assurance, 92/96/EEC by the other states of the European Economic Area.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: According to information currently available Finland, Greece, Iceland, Italy, Norway, Spain, Sweden have still to complete their implementation of the directives. To the extent that these states have not fully or substantially implemented the directives, the provisions of regulation 71 of the Insurance Companies (Third Insurance Directives) Regulations 1994 or regulation 15 of the Insurance Companies (Amendment) Regulations 1994 will apply to any insurance company whose head office is in one of these states. Such companies will continue to require authorisation under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 to carry on direct insurance business in the United Kingdom. They will also still be required to submit returns to the Department, in accordance with the Insurance Companies (Accounts and Statements) Regulations 1983, in respect of their UK business.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 15 February 1995]: No central records are kept, but as far as I can ascertain, on no occasion during the last five years has my Department or its agencies taken legal action against a firm providing consultancy services to the Department.

ENVIRONMENT

Single Regeneration Budget

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the expected expenditure under the single regeneration budget in 1995–96 and what was the annual expenditure in each of the last five years for each of the schemes that have been incorporated into the single regeneration budget (a) nationally and (b) in Birmingham; and what proportion of those budgets has been spent and will be spent on housing investment.

Mr. Curry: Planned single regeneration budget expenditure in 1995–96 is £1,331.5 million. Expenditure nationally and in Birmingham in each of the last five years for each of the programmes brought together in the SRB is set out in tables A and B.

The proportion spent each year on the specific housing programmes—estate action and housing action trusts—which are now part of the SRB is set out in table C. Housing investment is also achieved through the urban development corporations, city challenge, English Partnerships and from 1995—96 new SRB partnership schemes, although the proportions of these programmes' total budgets spent on housing investment cannot easily be separated out.

The whole purpose of the SRB is to promote an integrated approach to development with the local parties defining their priorities.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the Rural Development Commission advised on bids made under the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Curry: Government offices for the regions were responsible for making recommendations to Ministers on SRB bids taking account of comments from the Rural Development Commission as appropriate. Where, for example, the Rural Development Commission was a party to the bid, it was not consulted.

Construction Industry Board

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the conclusions of the meeting with the standing strategic group for construction on 7 February on legislation to enact the Latham report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State and I agreed with representatives of the construction industry and their clients on 7 February to set up a construction industry board. The first task of the board—which will be chaired by Sir Michael Latham—will be to take forward proposals of the Latham report for restructuring the construction process.

We have noted the extent of industry support for legislation, on the basis of which we intend to move to the next stage of full public consultation on detailed proposals. The board will provide a channel to Government for industry and client comment on any legislation proposals.

Local Plan, Plymouth

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his planning inspector's report from the public inquiry into the City of Plymouth local plan first alteration 1992 will be published.

Sir Paul Beresford: The inspector's report on objections to the Plymouth city council local plan—first alteration—was issued to the council on 30 December 1994. I understand that the council is currently considering when to publish the report. I have asked the Planning Inspectorate's chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Gary Streeter, dated 14 February 1995.

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to reply to your question about the Inspector's report from the public inquiry into the City of Plymouth local plan first alteration 1992.

The report was issued to the Council on 30 December 1994 and I understand that the Council is currently considering when to publish it.

Housing

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many households currently on social housing waiting lists have been waiting for more than (a) six months, (b) a year, (c) two years, (d) three years, (e) five years and (f) 10 years in each region of England;

(2) what is the total number of households currently on social housing waiting lists in each region of England.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities in England report the number of households on their council housing waiting lists in their annual housing investment programme returns.

Figures for each region, as at 1 April 1994, can be found in section B of the "1994 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

Information on the length of time households have been on waiting lists is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much of the 1994–95 approved development programme funding was allocated to (a) each region and (b) each housing authority area in England and Wales; and what is the allocation for 1995–96;

(2) how much of the 1994–95 housing investment programme funding was allocated to (a) each region and (b) each housing authority area in England and Wales; and what is the allocation for 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested for England is in the Library. For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the Government's total 1994–95 housing budget was allocated to (a) each region and (b) each housing authority area in England and Wales; and what is the allocation for 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: For housing investment programme and approved development programme allocations in England, I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to her questions earlier today. Housing investment programme allocations comprise local authority credit approvals and resources for private sector renewal.

The Department is providing additional credit approvals in 1994–95 for the housing partnership fund, £30 million, the cash incentive scheme, £30 million, and the flats-over-shops scheme, £10 million. I have placed in the Library copies of the Department's press notices which announced allocations by English local authority area for these schemes for 1994–95. In 1995-96 the housing partnership fund will again provide £30 million and the cash incentive scheme will provide £60 million. Individual allocations have not yet been made for 1995–96.

The estimated cost of housing revenue account subsidy for England in 1994–95 is £4.1 billion. Final claims for the year will not be received by the Department until early in 1996, but I have placed in the Library a list of the latest provisional claim figures for each authority and region. all of these are still subject to validation.

The estimated cost of housing revenue account subsidy in 1995–96 is £4.2 billion. No claims have yet been received from authorities.

The remainder of the Government's housing resources for England is allocated through a wide range of smaller programmes, and further information can be found in chapter A6 of the Department's "Annual Report 1994", published in March 1994, and in its "Annual Report 1995" which will be published shortly.

Housing in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mrs Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in respect of how many social housing units work was started during the last 12 months for which figures are available in (a) each region and (b) each housing authority area in England and Wales.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The publication "Local Housing Statistics" shows estimates of housebuilding starts for each region and each local authority area in England and Wales. It shows starts by sector, including activity by housing associations and by local authorities. Figures for 1993 and provisional figures for the first quarter of 1994 are in issue No. 110, March quarter 1994.

A copy of this publication is in the Library.

North Yorkshire County Council

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he requested an estimate from North Yorkshire county council of the cost to it changing the name of the county council prior to his announcement on 1 February; and what estimate he has now made.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has concluded that the county's name should not be changed.

Homelessness

Mrs Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were found to be homeless during the most recent 12 months for which figures are available in (a) each region and (b) each housing authority area in England and Wales.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have today placed in the Library a table giving the numbers reported by each local authority in England of homeless households for which they had accepted responsibility to secure permanent accommodation in the year ending September 1994, under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act. The table includes grossed regional totals which include estimates for missing data.

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mrs Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of homelessness and living in temporary accommodation on children's education.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

HM inspectors published "A Survey of the Education of Children Living in Temporary Accommodation" in 1990. It considered the effect of homelessness on the educational attainment of a sample of individual children and the response of the schools and local education authorities to their educational needs. It identified ways in which the educational arrangements for pupils who lived in temporary accommodation could be improved and noted that the national curriculum should ensure greater continuity and progression.

Woodspring District Council

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of Woodspring district council under the draft Avon (Structural Change) Order; if it will have the functions currently exercised by (a) county or (b) district councils; how it will be treated for ceremonial purposes; and what assessment he has made as to the effect of the proposed changes on public understanding of local government arrangements.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Under the Avon (Structural Change) Order, Woodspring district council will be a continuing district council on its existing boundaries, but will be renamed North West Somerset district council and will have both county and district functions. The order makes no provision for ceremonial functions in north-west Somerset but the Government's intention is that the area of north-west Somerset will be deemed to be part of Somerset for ceremonial purposes. I believe the creation of a unitary local authority will improve the accountability of local government in the area.

North West Somerset

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for a county council covering north-west Somerset.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None.

Avon (Structural Change) Order

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers are to be given under article 20 of the draft Avon (Structural Change) Order to Bristol city council and Woodspring district council additional to those available to Northavon, Kingswood, Bath or Wansdyke district councils or Avon county council before the preliminary period.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None.

Debt

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority (a) the total level of debt and (b) the level of debt expressed in pounds per head of the local population.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have today placed the information requested in the Library of the House.

Council Houses

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been built in each local authority in the northern region in each year since 1980.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Revenue Support Grant

Sir David Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average amount of revenue support grant for 1995–96 per dwelling for (a) Bedfordshire county council and (b) each of the four Bedfordshire district councils.

Mr. Curry: The average amount of revenue support grant for 1995–96 per chargeable dwelling is as follows:

(a) Bedfordshire County Council	757
(b) Bedford	114
Luton	164
Mid Bedfordshire	56
South Bedfordshire	81

The amounts are determined by the relative needs, taxable capacity, and population of each authority, as measured by each authority's standard spending assessment, RSG council tax base, and resident population as at 30 June 1993, respectively.

Review Bodies

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will estimate the cost to local authorities' self-financed expenditure in 1995–96 of implementing in full the recommendations of (a) the School Teachers' Review Body, (b) the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration and (c) the Review Body on Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors, and Professions Allied to Medicine, assuming no changes in staff numbers;

(2) if he will estimate the cost to his Department's budget in 1995–96 of implementing in full the recommendations of (a) the School Teachers' Review Body, (b) the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration and (c) the Review Body on Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors, and Professions Allied to Medicine, assuming no change in staff numbers; and how much of the cost would be borne by (i) direct expenditure by his Department and (ii) grants and loans to local authorities.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The School Teachers' Review Body has recommended an increase of 2.7 per cent. in teachers' pay for 1995–96. The cost of this to local authorities in England is likely to be in the order of £275 million. The recommendations of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration and the Review Body on Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine will not directly affect local authorities' budgets. There will be no direct cost to my Department's other programmes.

The Government took account of a range of possible pay settlements for all local authority employees, including teachers, in deciding the overall level of the local government settlement.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the amount of government support to county councils in England in the local government financial settlements for 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 compared with the rate of inflation in each year.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Under the local government finance system in operation prior to 1 April 1993 both revenue support grant and non-domestic rates for an area were paid into the collection funds administered by the charging authorities in that area. It is therefore not possible to provide a figure for the amount of RSG and NDR for county councils for 1992–93.

The total of RSG and NDR entitlements for county councils in England was £13,287.431 million in 1993–94 rising to £13,641.681 million in 1994–95, an increase of 2.7 per cent.

The GDP deflator is a general measure of domestically-generated inflation in the economy. In 1994–95 it is estimated to be 2 per cent. higher than in 1993–94.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what increase took place in the amount of government grant offered to Surrey in the local government financial settlement for 1995–96 as a result of representations received during the consultation period, and for what specific reasons the increase was made.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Surrey county council, in common with a number of other local authorities, made representations that the number of pupils involved in the calculations in the consultation paper was inaccurate. In each case we have incorporated the new figures where they were notified prior to the settlement being laid before the House.

The effect on Surrey was to increase the revenue support grant by £2.934 million.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, columns 910–11, if he will set out by council the value of the bid for redundancy and new building costs.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 15 February 1995]: The bids for redundancy and staff compensation and for accommodation costs, which may include new building costs, are as follows:

	Redundancy and compensation costs £000s	Accommodation £000s
Isle of Wight

Note:

A *Nil entry indicates an authority that is to be abolished and that is therefore ineligible under the transitional costs scheme to bid for accommodation costs.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what bids he received from local authorities in the Isle of Wight, Avon, Cleveland, North Yorkshire and Humberside for supplementary credit approvals for 1995–96; and what allocation by service block had been made for each authority.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 15 February 1995]: The bids to which the hon. Member refers are set out in the answer I gave on 3 February, Official Report, columns 910–11. The allocations—which I shall announce very shortly—are not hypothecated to specific services.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the usable capital receipts as at 31 March 1994, for each local authority, and in total for England.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 9 February 1995]: The total of usable capital receipts held by English local authorities at 31 March 1994 was £2.1 billion. The information for each local authority has been placed in the Library of the House. It is open to authorities to spend these receipts or to use them to repay debt. The gross debt of English authorities at 31 March 1994 was £38 billion.

Century House

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1994, Official Report, column 249, what has been the cost of maintenance of Century house, Westminster Bridge road since 24 November, and what progress has been made in negotiations over the short-term and long-term future of the building.

Sir Paul Beresford: The cost of maintenance at Century house since 24 November 1994 amounts to £13,000 plus fees and VAT. The majority of expenditure relates to security cover.

Property Holdings arranged with the landlord for the building to be offered for use as a winter shelter in 1994–95 as part of the Government's rough sleeper's initiative in central London. The planning application was refused by London borough of Lambeth and the proposal did not proceed. The interest in re-use by a Government Department is no longer current and a marketing campaign is being produced. As an interim measure short-term car parking lettings are under consideration.

Discussions with the landlord and freeholder about the future of the building are continuing. Progress is hampered by the substantial negative value of the Secretary of State's lease.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources he will make available to authorities that are to be reorganised on 1 April 1995 or 1996 for reorganisation costs incurred by them in 1995–96, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I announced on 2 December 1994, Official Report, column 921, that I was inviting authorities in the county areas of Avon, Cleveland, Humberside, North Yorkshire and the Isle of Wight to submit estimates of the amount of expenditure they expect to incur on reorganisation in 1995–96. On the basis, inter alia, of the information provided by the authorities, I have decided the maximum amounts that it would be appropriate to allocate at this stage towards eligible costs incurred in 1995–96.

I propose to make further allocations during the course of 1995–96 to shadow authorities when they are elected; to all eligible authorities in the light of revised estimates to be submitted at the end of September, especially in respect of redundancy and staff compensation costs; and to some authorities who are being asked to look again at certain expenditures that they are proposing to incur, especially on accommodation. Authorities for whom reorganisation orders are made under section 17 of the Local Government Act 1992 during the course of 1995–96 may also qualify under the scheme. I propose to hold back £27 million out of the total provision of £50 million for these purposes. The balance of £23 million will be allocated to authorities as set out. Authorities will be notified within the next few days of their maximum amount and of the considerations underlying my decision. The amounts are as follows:

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what provisions a local authority which is due to change its name may use powers assigned to the authority under the new name before the date of the change.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 15 February 1995]: Where a local authority's name is changed, this does not affect the authority's legal status and provisions apply to that authority regardless of its name.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the estimates he has received from the Local Government Commission for transitional costs connected with proposed reorganisation in the Isle of Wight, Avon, Cleveland, North Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 15 February 1995]: The Local Government Commission's estimates of transitional costs of reorganisation are:

	Transitional costs £ million
Isle of Wight	4–5
Avon	13–18
Cleveland	13–18
North Yorkshire	3–4

Note:
They did not publish a separate estimate for Humberside.

Unitary Authorities

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that no further orders will be laid before Parliament under section 17 of the Local Government Act 1992 until he has responded to the letter dated 26 January from the chair of the Association of County Council's regarding the disqualification of new unitary authorities.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 15 February 1995]: I replied to this letter yesterday.

Tyre Dumping

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has undertaken of the dumping of tyres, with particular reference to (a) their environmental impact and (b) the means to combat the practice.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 13 February 1995]: The Government are aware that a large number of used tyres need to be disposed of each year and that without proper disposal they can create environmental problems. Used tyres are controlled waste and as such are subject to stringent controls under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Section 34 of the Act places a duty of care on everyone with a responsibility for waste to ensure that it is properly managed from production to disposal.

In addition to these controls on the handling and disposal of controlled waste, the Government are supporting a number of initiatives designed to reduce the quantity of used tyres requiring disposal. These have the potential significantly to reduce the problem of scrap tyres in the future.

A consultation draft of "A Waste Strategy for England and Wales" was published by the Department of the Environment and Welsh Office in January this year. The issue of used tyres is discussed in greater detail in this document. A copy is being sent to the hon. Member.

Gas Safety Regulations

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue clear and detailed guidelines on the responsibility for costs to private landlords in the implementation of the requirements of the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1994 in both cases where gas appliances were bought and installed by the landlord or bought and installed by the tenant.

Mr. Oppenheim: I have been asked to reply.

No. However, the Government and the Health and Safety Commission considered the costs to landlords of the specific duties placed upon them by the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1994, and concluded that these would not be significant, and were justified by the benefits that the duties were designed to secure in reduced incidents of carbon monoxide poisoning from dangerous gas appliances. These specific duties do not apply to tenants.

New Forest Committee

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the 1994–95 budget of the New Forest committee; and how it is funded.

Mr. Atkins: The New Forest committee budget for 1994–95 is £114.500, of which £20,000 is provided by the Department of the Environment and a contribution of up to £18,900 is paid by each of the Forestry Commission, English Nature, the Countryside Commission, New Forest district council and Hampshire county council.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the actual expenditure of the New Forest committee in 1993–94.

Mr. Atkins: A total of £109,300.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the boundaries of the proposed New Forest heritage area have now been decided; and if he will place definitive maps in the Library.

Mr. Atkins: The boundary of the proposed wider New Forest heritage area will emerge from the preparation and adoption of local plans. Proposals to define the boundary are being carried forward in four local plans in the New Forest district—the Avon valley, the Forest and Downlands villages and the New Forest, east—together with the Salisbury district plan and the Test valley borough plan.

Copies of the local plans will be deposited in the Department of the Environment's library.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will define the duties of (a) the New Forest committee and (b) the New Forest consultative panel.

Mr. Atkins: The New Forest committee's terms of reference include the promotion of the conservation of the traditional character of the New Forest heritage area; the review of action to maintain the balance of natural and socio-economic forces which determine its character; and the preparation and promotion of a strategy for co-ordinated management of the area.

The New forest consultative panel has a membership of 71 organisations to include representatives from the whole of the wider New forest heritage area. It is administered by the New Forest Committee, and contributes to the committee's task of ensuring that its members are working together to promote the conservation of the traditional character of the forest. It encourages monitoring of the practical effects of policies or initiatives carried out in the forest.

HEALTH

NHS Appointees (Payments)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by health authority and NHS trust for 1993 payments made (a) to chairmen, (b) to chief executives and (c) to directors.

Mr. Malone: Information will be placed in the Library on the remuneration of members of the boards of individual regional and district health authorities and national health service trusts, as extracted from their annual accounts for 1993–94. The figures need to be treated with caution. The payments listed represent remuneration in respect of the total gross salary, bonus payments, monetary value of benefits in kind, taxable expenses allowances and compensation payments in relation to the offices described—rather than to an individual. Thus, payments listed for chairmen and chief executives could well refer to more than one individual.

Private Patients

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage change in the number of finished consultant episodes on private patients on NHS premises between 1990–91 and the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Davies) on 14 February, column 640.

Embryos

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evaluation she has conducted on the research into the effects of freezing the human embryo on its DNA and the molecular interactions within its cells;

(2) what contact her Department has had with its French counterparts to study the long-term effects of freezing human embryos in the last two years;

(3) what research has been undertaken by her Department into the long-term effects of freezing human embryos following test tube baby treatments in the last two years.

Mr. Sackville: Recent research at Cambridge on embryo freezing has been reported in a paper entitled "Birth characteristics and perinatal outcome of babies conceived from cryopreserved embryos" by I. Wada et al, published in Human Reproduction Vol.9 No.3, pages 543–546. A research project entitled "Outcome in children from cryopreserved embryos" at Manchester university has been completed and publication is expected soon. Research under way at the university of York includes consideration of whether biochemical changes accompany human embryo freezing.

The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority keeps developments in research and treatment under review, including reports of work undertaken in other countries. The authority set up a working group on embryo freezing in 1993 to consider the social and ethical issues in this field. The outcome of its work was reported in the authority's 1994 annual report, copies of which are available in the Library.

GP Fundholding

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many total purchasing general practitioner fundholding practices have been given the ability to purchase residential nursing home care.

Mr. Malone: There are four existing national total purchasing pilots, in which general practitioner fundholders purchase all hospital and community health services for their patients. A further 49 sites are now to join the national evaluation programme. The pilot sites are listed below. Fundholders and health authorities working in partnership are demonstrating what can be achieved, and have made clear their commitment to this important project.

[1] Existing Projects

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the north of England are registered with fundholding general practitioners.

Mr. Malone: Some 34 per cent. of the population in the north of England as defined by the area covered by the Northern, and Yorkshire, and North West regional health authorities and Barnsley, Doncaster, Rotherham and Sheffield family health services authorities, are served by a fundholding general practitioner.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the research her Department has done or commissioned in each of the last eight years, on fundholding.

Mr. Malone: Research on fundholding has been carried out by the Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development, King's Fund Institute and individual researchers. No research has been carried out internally.

Abortions

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were performed on women resident in each district health authority and each regional health authority in England and Wales in 1993; and of these operations, how many were performed in NHS hospitals, and how many in private clinics under agency arrangements.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be published in April 1995 in the Office of Population Censuses surveys monitor AB 95/2, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS abortions were performed under 13 weeks on women resident in each district health authority and each regional health authority in England and Wales in 1993; and of these operations, how many involved admission and discharge on the same day.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not yet available.

Regional Health Authority Finance

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the outturn figures for each regional health authority of the revenue and capital expenditure for each year since 1992; and what were the revenue and capital allocations.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Waiting Lists

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were removed from hospital waiting lists in each regional health authority in each year since 1991.

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table. Removals are patients removed from a waiting list for in-patient or day-case treatment for any reason other than admission for treatment from that list. They include patients who have been admitted for treatment as emergencies for the same condition or at hospitals other than those on whose waiting lists they were originally placed.

Childhood Leukaemia

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of childhood leukaemia were treated as in-patients at Birmingham children's hospital in each of the last five available years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Bryan Stoten, chairman of South Birmingham health authority for details.

Junior Doctor Ratios

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the ratio of junior doctors, defined as house officer, senior house officer, registrar and senior registrar to consultant posts in each year since 1991.

Mr. Malone: The ratio of junior doctors to consultants in England at 30 September each year is as follows:

1991: 1.53:1
1992: 1.52:1
1993: 1.53:1

Note: The figures above are based on numbers

Minimally Invasive Treatment

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the surgical procedures now carried out by minimally invasive treatment; and what was the average length of hospital stay for patients undergoing these procedures in each year since 1991.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

HIV/AIDS London

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of AIDS and HIV per 1,000 population in the London boroughs of (a) Southwark, (b) Hammersmith, (c) Wandsworth, (d) Haringey, (e) Sutton, (f) Kingston, (g) Waltham Forest and (h) Ealing in each year since 1991.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the incidence of HIV and AIDS per 1,000 population is not collected by the Public Health Laboratory Service. Currently the PHLS does not make public numbers of cases of HIV and AIDS below regional health authority level to protect the confidentiality of individuals with HIV/AIDS and in order not to deter people from coming forward for testing.

Transaction Costs

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total budget allocated to health authorities for transaction costs rather than the clinical treatment and care for each year since 1991; and what proportion of health authority spending these costs represented.

Mr. Sackville: There is no specific allocation to health authorities for transaction costs and the proportion of health authority spending which these costs represent is not available centrally.

Pregnancy (Screening Tests)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, (1) what guidance her Department has on the provision of the triple test as a screening test for abnormalities in pregnant women;

(2) if she will indicate the percentage of purchasers and hospitals who are providing the triple test for abnormalities in pregnancy.

Mr. Sackville: A report by a working party of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists into maternal serum screening for the detection of fetal Down's Syndrome, including the triple test, was published in 1993 to assist those in the national health service who are considering the introduction of such a screening programme, or who are already running one.

Information about the percentage of purchasers and hospitals providing the triple test is not available centrally. The provision of ante-natal screening for abnormalities remains a matter for individual health authorities, which decide what tests are offered as part of antenatal care in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Patients Charter

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the organisations with whom she consulted about the new patients charter before its publication; what were the methods of consultation with these organisations; what account was taken of their views in the final document; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Consultation on the new patients charter has taken place since spring 1994. Organisations we consulted on the draft patients charter are as shown in the table. These consultations were both written and oral and all comments were carefully considered in finalising the text.

Private Finance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those NHS projects involving private finance initiative which (a) have been completed and (b) are in progress.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) on 3 November 1994, column 1269, for the latest information available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those projects that Newchurch has advised her Department are suitable for private investment.

Mr. Sackville: Newchurch and Co. does not advise the Department on the suitability of projects for private investment.

It was engaged to set up and operate a database and inquiry point. This database provides market intelligence on both new and existing private finance experience in the national health service.

Colchester General Hospital

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many geriatric beds and psychiatric beds were available in the district health authority area containing Colchester general hospital in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: The number of geriatric beds and mental illness beds in the North Essex district health authority area is shown in the table:

Average available beds, wards open night and day

	Geriatric	Mental illness
1989–90	876	698
1990–91	708	643
1991–92	666	598
1992–93	668	580
1993–94	626	532

Note:
For 1991–92 and earlier years, figures are for three district health authorities Mid Essex, North East Essex and West Essex. In 1992–93 Essex Rivers Healthcare trust was formed 1993–94 figures are for Mid Essex Hospital Services trust, Essex Rivers Healthcare trust, Essex and Herts health services, and Mid-Essex mental health services.

Bed numbers have declined because of the move from secondary care to care in the community, through for example nursing home contracts and general practitioner managed beds.

Mixed Wards

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on mixed wards containing acute medical, geriatric and psychiatric patients; and what guidance she issues on the mix of such patients.

Mr. Bowis: Hospital doctors are responsible for making decisions about the appropriate placement of individual patients, based on what is best for the patient's condition and in the light of available beds.

General Practitioner Savings

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the advertisement placed in the East Anglian Daily Times on 4 February by the Brett-Stour non-fundholding consortium in respect of savings it claims to have achieved for public funds.

Mr. Malone: None.

Drug Addiction

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate what percentage of general practitioners provide a comprehensive service for patients with drug addiction problems.

Mr. Bowis: General practitioners are contracted to provide general medical services to all their patients, including those with drug addiction problems.

Core Values

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on care values in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: I understand the question refers to core values. The core purpose of the national health service is to secure through the resources available the greatest possible improvement in the physical and mental health of the people of England by promoting health, preventing ill health, diagnosing and treating injury and disease and caring for those with long-term illness and disability.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the cash allocations for hospital and community health services in total and for each district health authority and health commission purchase trust and special health services authority for (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) subsequent financial years.

Mr. Sackville: The 1994–95 initial revenue cash allocations for each district health authority and in total will be placed in the Library. From 1994–95, the postgraduate special health authorities acquire the status of provider, and we no longer make allocations to them, beyond the specific funding for research and development. The 1994–95 initial revenue cash allocations for the remaining special health authorities are:

National Blood Authority—£5,185,000

UK Transplant Support Services Authority—£3,706,000

Information for 1995–96 has not been collected yet and for subsequent years decisions have not been taken.

Trusts and health commissions receive no direct allocations: trusts because they must earn all their income; and health commissions because they exist only as a managerial arrangement for some district health authorities and family health services authorities, and are not statutory bodies.

Pay Awards

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the cost to her Department's budget in 1995–96 of implementing in full the recommendations of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors, and Professions Allied to Medicine, assuming no changes in staff numbers; and how much of the cost would be borne by (a) direct expenditure by her Department, (b) national health service trusts and (c) grants and loans to local authorities.

Mr. Malone: The cost in England of implementing in full the recommendations of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors, and Professions Allied to Medicine amounts to between £105 million and £211 million for national health service trusts and health authorities, of which between £800,000 and £1.6 million is direct expenditure by the Department. The costs represent the upper and lower levels of the range of improvements expected by the review body. Information is not available centrally in respect of grants and loans to local authorities.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the cost to her Department's budget in 1995–96 of implementing in full the recommendations of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration, assuming no changes in staff numbers; and how much of the cost would be borne by (a) direct expenditure by her Department, (b) national health service trusts and (c) grants and loans to local authorities.

Mr. Malone: The cost in England of implementing in full the national recommendations of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration amounts to £120 million for national health service trusts and health authorities of which £160,000 is direct expenditure by the Department. Information is not available centrally in respect of grants and loans to local authorities.

Residential Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if she will review her policy on local authorities making top-up payments towards the cost of residential or nursing home care for residents with preserved entitlements to Department of Social Security benefits; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We have no plans to bring forward legislation to amend local authorities' current powers to provide financial support for people with preserved rights to the higher levels of income support. Levels of benefits to which preserved rights apply are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Residential Child Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will establish a formal inquiry into residential child care provision run by Buckinghamshire county council social services department; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what reports she has received from the social services inspectorate with regard to child care provision in Buckinghamshire; what action has been taken as a consequence; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I have not received any reports from the social services inspectorate with regard to child care provision in Buckinghamshire. I have received a copy of a letter from Buckinghamshire social services to the editor of The Independent in response to newspaper stories in that paper, which I understand has been copied to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett).

The social services inspectorate will be carrying out one of its regular inspections in Buckinghamshire in the next few months and will, no doubt, report back to me if it has any concerns.

If the hon. Gentleman has any evidence of which he thinks it or I should be aware, I should be grateful if he would forward this to me without delay.

Generic Prescribing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to her answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 874, if she will give the aggregate cost of (a) generic and (b) brand named prescriptions for each year for each family health service authority, broken down by fundholders and non-fundholders.

Mr. Malone: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the total surpluses and deficits made by trusts in each region in 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: This information is shown in the table.

Total Surpluses and Deficits made by Trusts in each Regional Health Authority in 1993–94

Regional health authority[1]	Total surpluses £000s	Total deficits £000s

TRANSPORT

Security Services

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what precise proportion of the posts identified in the efficiency savings exercise for security services provided by Transec is currently engaged on inspectorial and investigatory duties.

Mr. Norris: Forty three per cent. The reduction in posts is part of my Department's general drive for increased efficiency, and will be achieved through a combination of more efficient working practices and the fact that several projects are nearing completion. It is the responsibility of industry to provide front-line security staff and equipment, the level of which will not be affected by these changes.

Tyre Pressure Gauges

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring he is carrying out of the accuracy of tyre pressure gauges at garages and service stations.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have been asked to reply.

None. Under Council directive 86/217/EEC on tyre pressure gauges, some garage forecourts may be equipped with gauges carrying the mark of EEC initial verification, in which case their performance would be monitored by trading standards officers.

DEFENCE

Tendering Process

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to give greater weight to the assessment of the quality of bids during the tendering process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We would expect tenderers to present their proposals in the format requested in the invitation to tender, and to a standard commensurate with a professional organisation. Tender evaluation takes into account all relevant factors and the quality or standard of a tender would be one such factor. In a close competition in which bidders' proposals were evenly matched, the quality of a proposal could offer an indication of the commitment and management capabilities of the competitors and assist in final selection.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking so that tendering procedures are improved by allowing greater flexibility in the choice of procurement route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: To secure the best value for money, taking account of quality, performance, delivery, risk and cost, it has been our practice with market testing exercises positively to encourage tenderers to submit solutions which, through a reasonable relaxation of the terms of the invitation to tender, or the adoption of an alternative approach to meeting the essential requirement, might prove cost effective. We are now extending that approach to equipment procurement to ensure contractors are aware of our willingness to consider innovative bids in this area also.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to streamline tendering procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A number of initiatives from a comprehensive review of contractual policy and procedures carried out in 1992, and more recently the defence costs study, are in the course of implementation. These include the use of pre-qualification procedures to reduce the number of tenderers to those best qualified to meet the requirement; providing greater visibility of tender evaluation criteria; and making increased usage of the "Possible Future Purchases" section in the "Defence Contracts Bulletin".

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to improve the standard of specifications in tendering procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We recognise the importance of stating our requirements in clear and unambiguous terms and will continue to work to improve the quality of specifications and related material such as acceptance criteria and configuration control arrangements, supported by taut contractual terms. This can include consultation with industry on draft specifications to encourage innovation and optimise possible trade-offs between performance and price. We have also taken steps to improve training for staff in the preparation of specifications.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to restrict tender lists to no more than three companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Our aim in producing tender lists is to select a field that is likely to lead to the keenest competition between firms which are considered capable of meeting all the obligations set out in the invitation to tender. To achieve this aim, and reduce the cost of the competitive process to both the Department and industry, we would normally develop tender lists of around six bidders for each competition. We consider that this approach, which was agreed in consultation with industry, strikes the right balance.

Rhine Forces (Returning Personnel)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what arrangements are being made in respect of married quarters in the United Kingdom for service personnel formerly serving in the Rhine forces and posted to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

(2) how many married families will return to Britain from the Rhine forces in the next 12 months.

Mr. Soames: An estimated 7,500 Army families will return from Germany this year, and around 1,400 RAF families are expected to return between 1 April 1995 and 31 March 1996. There are at present no significant numbers of naval personnel serving in Germany.

A number of accommodation options are open to service personnel returning to the United Kingdom on posting from Germany. They may either move into their own homes or seek to purchase their own property; move into vacant service families accommodation at or near their place of duty; or, if no suitable vacant SFA is available, they may claim excess rent allowance which will allow them to rent a property in the private sector. A number of SFA properties have been held vacant to accommodate returning families.

Three Para

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long the mock-up from of the Vauxhall Astra car involved in the incident for which Private Lee Clegg was jailed was on display in the mess of Three Para; why it was removed; what disciplinary action was taken against (a) the soldiers who made it and (b) the officers who allowed it to be displayed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The mock-up of the Vauxhall Astra was put up in the cookhouse shortly before the battalion's Christmas lunch. It was noticed by officers in the battalion during the lunch and it was immediately ordered to be removed. No disciplinary action was taken against the soldiers involved in making it, but the officer who should have taken steps to prevent the mock-up from being displayed was not permitted to convert his short service commission to become a regular officer.

Nuclear Programme

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work is carried out by (a) the Sandia National Laboratories, (b) the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratories and (c) the Los Alamos National Laboratories on behalf of the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom defence nuclear programme benefits from some of the work carried out in these laboratories by virtue of technology exchanges under the 1958 United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement.

Agreement

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the exchange of information and visit reports that have occurred in the last five years as part of the 1958 United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement, the Polaris sales agreement and the Trident sales agreement.

Mr. Freeman: This information could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British personnel are stationed in the United States as part of (a) the 1958 United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement, (b) the Polaris sales agreement and (c) the trident sales agreement; and where they are located.

Mr. Freeman: The number of British personnel stationed in the United States as part of the 1958 United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement is five; they are located in the United Kingdom embassy, Washington DC. There are 20 British personnel stationed in the United States as part of the Polaris sales agreement, as amended for Trident; they are located as follows:

	Number of Personnel
Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory	—1
Crystal City, Arlington, Virginia	—15
King's Bay, Georgia	—1
New London, Connecticut	—1
Laurel, Maryland	—1
Dahlgren, Virginia	—1

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel were employed in the renegotiation of the 1958 United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement; and what was the total cost of the renegotiation.

Mr. Freeman: A number of officials were involved in the amendment to the 1958 United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement. It is not possible to identify separately the costs of this work.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the joint working groups that are at present operating as part of the 1958 United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement, the Polaris sales agreement and the Trident sales agreement.

Mr. Freeman: The joint working groups are the means for technical exchanges under the 1958, United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement. Full details of their activities are classified, but I can confirm that the current programme of exchanges includes the following subject areas:

Neutron Sources
Irradiation Effects on Materials and Components
High Explosives for Nuclear Weapons
Chemistry and Compatibility of Materials
Test Diagnostics
Test Monitoring
Metallurgy of Weapons Materials
Non-Nuclear Components
Underground Effects Testing
Non-Metallic Materials
Weapons Material Management
Nuclear Weapons Engineering
Physics Design
Weapons Hydrodynamics
Computational Technology
Penetration Aid Technology
Aircraft Hardening
Nuclear Weapons Physics
Nuclear Forces and Counter Proliferation Studies
Manufacturing Technology
Experimental Activities
Nuclear Warhead Accident Response Technology
Nuclear Weapon Computer Code Development
Nuclear Weapon Environment and Damage Effects

There are separate arrangements for exchanges under the Polaris sales agreement, as amended for Trident.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have visited (a) the Pantex plant in America, (b) the Sandia national laboratories, (c) the Los Alamos national laboratories, (d) the Lawrence Livermore national laboratories, (e) the Nevada test site and (f) the Rocky Flats plant on behalf of the United Kingdom Government in each of the last five years as part of the 1958 United States/United Kingdom Mutual Defence Agreement.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Atomic Co-ordinating Offices

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed in the atomic co-ordinating offices in London and Washington; and what are their civil service grades.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table below:

Grade	Number
Atomic control office (London)—(6 staff)
Senior Executive Officer	1
Executive Officer	1
Administrative Officer	2
Administrative Assistant	1
Atomic co-ordinating office (Washington)—(5 staff)
Unified Grade 6	1
Unified Grade 7	1
Executive Office	1
Administrative Officer	1
Personal Secretary	1

It should be noted that all staff employed in the atomic control office, London have additional duties as members of the assistant chief scientific adviser, nuclear's organisation.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual running costs of the atomic co-ordinating offices in London and Washington; and out of which budget they are taken.

Mr. Freeman: Running costs of the atomic co-ordinating office, Washington, are £300,000, under the budget of the vice-chief of the defence staff. Running costs of the atomic control office, London, fall within the assistant chief scientific adviser, nuclear's intermediate higher level budget, and are not separately identified.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role and function of the atomic co-ordinating offices in London and Washington.

Mr. Freeman: The staff of ACO(L) and the administrative staff of ACO(W) are responsible for the transmission of information, documents and material, arrangements of visits and submission of clearances as required by the 1958 United States/United Kingdom mutual defence agreement. Professional staff of ACO(W) represent UK interests in technical and procurement matters pertaining to the UK defence nuclear programme by liaison with the United States Department of Defence, Department of Energy, and their contractors.

Defence Export Service Organisation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which (a) foreign Governments and (b) British companies were the source of the DESO administrative receipts shown in the supply estimates for 1993–94 under the headings vote 1, section ABC, vote 2 subhead A2 and vote 2 subhead H4 and H2(1).

Mr. Freeman: There are no DESO receipts shown in the supply estimates 1993–94 under the headings quoted. DESO receipts are shown in table 2.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the administrative expenses of the DESO shown in the supply estimates for 1986–87 and 1987–88 are a net figure; and what was the expenditure on an expenses and receipts basis.

Mr. Freeman: The administrative expenses shown in the supply estimates for 1986–87 and 1987–88 gross expenditure figures. The DESO receipts are included within paragraph 6 of table 4.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the receipts in respect of administrative expenses for the DESO were generated in 1994–95.

Mr. Freeman: The receipts for administrative expenses shown in table 2 of the supply estimates 1994–95 are generated by fees paid by overseas customers to cover project management work undertaken on their behalf.

C-130J Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what export licences in respect of 130J purchases have been granted by the United States of America.

Mr. Freeman: The United States Department of State has granted Lockheed Aeronautical Systems Co. an exception to the 1994 export licence suspension in respect of the C-130J programme.

Dispersal Programme, Glasgow

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost to public funds of the dispersal programme to Glasgow between 1982 and 1989, inclusive of redundancy, early retirement and relocation costs.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers and grades of civil servants relocated to Ministry of Defence, Glasgow during the dispersal programme.

Mr. Freeman: Some 1,400 posts relocated to Glasgow as part of the dispersal programme by 1987, of which over 1,000 were filled by local recruitment. Records of the numbers and grades of staff relocated are not kept centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost to public funds of the current proposals to relocate existing Ministry of Defence jobs in Glasgow, away from the city.

Mr. Freeman: Plans to collocate support staff throughout the United Kingdom where it is most sensible and cost-effective to do so are an integral part of the defence costs study. Among other things, present plans include moves of posts into as well as out of Glasgow. Although final costs are not yet known, they are expected to be outweighed significantly by the savings in running costs which will accrue.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers and grades of posts in the Glasgow headquarters buildings, after the establishment of the Army personnel centre.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers and grades of posts at present in Glasgow headquarters is set out below. The exact staffing of the Army personnel centre requires further work before it is finalised and it would not be possible at this time to say how the expected substantial increase in staff will affect these figures.

Number of non-industrial posts in Glasgow as at 31 December 1994

Departmental Employees, Scotland

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees of his Department are located in Scotland; and what that figure will be when the full effect of the defence costs study is implemented.

Mr. Freeman: As at 1 January 1995, more than 10,900 of my Department's 117,450 UK-based civilian staff were located in Scotland. Although these figures can be expected to reduce as a result of the defence costs study, the implementation of the study is not complete and its full effects cannot be judged at this stage.

Courts Martial

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set up an inquiry into the courts martial system of justice.

Mr. Soames: No. The system of discipline in the armed forces, including courts martial, is provided for in the Service Discipline Acts approved by Parliament. The quinquennial Armed Forces Bills are an opportunity to review the Service Discipline Acts. The next such Bill is due to be introduced in the 1995–96 Session.

Chemical Warfare Agents, RAF Llandwrog

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 562, what was the chemical composition of the chemical warfare agents which were stored at RAF Llandwrog.

Mr. Soames: The chemical warfare agent stored at RAF Llandwrog was the nerve agent Tabun. The chemical composition of this agent is Ethyl N, N—Dimethylphosphoramidocyanidate.

Helicopter Accident, Llanberis Lake

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the progress that has been made on the inquiry into the fatal accident involving a helicopter which crashed into Llanberis lake in August 1993; what changes in safety regulations have been made following the inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The board of inquiry process into the accident is continuing. RAF boards of inquiry are necessarily comprehensive and exhaustive to ensure all circumstances are investigated. The board has been protracted by the complex nature of the technical investigation carried out by the air accident investigation branch. In the meantime, a number of precautionary engineering inspections have been introduced. As explained in the letter from the then Under-Secretary of State for Defence of 13 August 1993, an advance copy of the military aircraft accident summary will be sent to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Pay Awards

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the cost to his Department's budget in 1995–96 of implementing in full the recommendations of the Review Body on Armed Forces Pay, assuming no changes in staff numbers.

Mr. Soames: We estimate that the cost of implementing in full the recommendations of the Review Body on Armed Forces Pay will be some £140,000,000.

Service Accommodation

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 10 February to the right hon. Member for Fareham (Sir. P. Lloyd), Official Report, columns 465–67, if he will publish in the Official Report, the full list of residences where significant failures of budgetary control were found; and if he will make a statement on the two occasions when wrong information was provided to Parliament.

Mr. Soames: The relevant information on residences where significant failures of budgetary control were found are contained in paragraphs 5 and 11 to16 of the paper on official service residences, which I have placed in the Library of the House.

The two occasions on which the House was provided with incorrect information on this subject were in the answers given by the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces, first to the hon. Member on 9 February 1994, Official Report, columns 362–63, which put the figure at some £250,000 and, subsequently to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) on 29 March, Official Report, column 732, which gave a figure of around £260,000. In his answer to the hon. Member for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer) on 4 July 1994, Official Report, column 85, the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces provided the revised figure of £387,000 and expressed his regret that an incorrect figure had been given in the preceding answer.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Fareham (Sir P. Lloyd) of 10 February, Official Report, columns 465–67, if he will provide a full breakdown of expenditure at the official residence known as Air house, Rheindahlen in Germany during the financial years 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Mr. Soames: The figures are as follows:

£000s

	1991–92	1992–93
Maintenance	34	17
Improvement	6	8
Furnishings and Equipment	33	3
Security	115	38
Utilities	17	18
Total	205	84

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the reasons that led him not to publish the full text of the KPMG Peat Marwick report into service accommodation for senior officers;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Fareham, (Sir P. Lloyd), Official Report, columns 465–67, if he will specify the name of those people who were shown an advance copy of the KPMG Peat Marwick report into service accommodation; and what assurances of confidentiality were made to them;

(3) what assessment he has made of the legal implications in relation to the publication in full of the KPMG Peat Marwick report into official accommodation for senior officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The report by KPMG Peat Marwick on the outcome of its investigation into expenditure at Haymes Garth is a confidential report that was prepared for the use of senior management and Ministers, not for publication. That was the clear basis on which, as I explained in my reply of 27 January, Official Report, columns 445–46, those named in it were shown in confidence draft extracts to enable them to comment on the passages that dealt with their involvement. I have no intention either of naming the individuals concerned or of publishing the full report. The question of legal implications does not therefore arise.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if Mr. David Hart was shown an advance copy of the KPMG Peat Marwick report into service accommodation for senior officers; and what undertakings he was required to give in respect of the report;

(2) on what occasions Mr. David Hart briefed journalists on the KPMG Peat Marwick report into service accommodation for senior personnel.

Mr. Soames: Mr. David Hart was not shown a copy of the KPMG Peat Marwick report into Haymes Garth, and he has not briefed journalists on it.

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Sir Peter Cazelet will be provided with an unedited copy of the KPMG Peat Marwick report into official accommodation for senior personnel.

Mr. Soames: Sir Peter Cazalet has been provided with a copy of the Ministry of Defence paper on the maintenance of official service residences which was issued last week. The terms of his study, which cover the requirement to entertain and how this entertainment is to be carried out, do not require him to have further detailed knowledge of the KPMG Peat Marwick report.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the report by Sir Peter Cazelet has cost to date; and what is the estimated total cost of the report.

Mr. Soames: Sir Peter Cazalet is generously undertaking his study into representational entertainment in the armed forces without reimbursement. Costs for travel and accommodation during the study for Sir Peter and for MoD officials accompanying him, amount to some £3,000.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to hold investigations into expenditure at official residences of senior officers which were not part of the audited sample in the KPMG Peat Marwick report.

Mr. Soames: Twelve residences, accounting for some 40 per cent. of expenditure in the relevant period, have been audited to evaluate systems and control. A comprehensive programme of measures to improve control over expenditure on official service residencies has been set in motion, but there are at present no plans for further audit work.

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Mr. David Hart will be providing advice for the report by Sir Peter Cazelet.

Mr. Soames: Sir Peter Cazalet has not consulted Mr. David Hart during the preparation on his report.

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department's attention was brought to the allegations concerning expenditure at the official residence known at (a) Haymes Garth and (b) Air house, Rheindallen.

Mr. Soames: The question of expenditure at Haymes Garth was raised in the summer of 1993—after completion of most of the work. The extent of the problem only became clear, however, when the results of an internal audit investigation started to become available in the spring of 1994. KPMG Peat Marwick was then commissioned to undertake a high-level independent external investigation. In parallel, a separate audit of expenditure on other official service residences was set in hand, and Air house was one of a sample of residences chosen for examination. The results of both investigations were reported to Parliament on 10 February 1995.

Mr David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which consultants are being used on the report by Sir Peter Cazelet; and what is the total cost of these services.

Mr. Soames: No consultants have been employed on Sir Peter Cazalet's report into representational entertainment in the armed forces.

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Fareham, (Sir P. Lloyd) of 10 February, Official Report columns 465–67, if he will specify the exact date on which he received the KPMG Peat Marwick report into service accommodation for senior officers.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and I first received the report by KPMG Peat Marwick on the results of its investigation into expenditure at Haymes Garth on 16 December 1994.

Air Chief Marshall Sir Andrew Wilson

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the full terms and conditions of the early retirement settlement for Air Chief Marshal Sir Andrew Wilson; and what is the total cost of the settlement including pension rights.

Mr. Soames: In accordance with standard regulations, precise details of individual pension benefits are confidential between my Department and the recipient. He will, however, receive the normal benefits of an officer of his rank who seeks voluntary retirement.

The scale of retired pay for an Air Chief Marshal currently runs from £41,875 at 30 years' service to a maximum of £46,099 at 34 years' service. The terminal grant is three times the annual rate of retired pay.

Land Mines

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will urgently make an assessment of the report, "The Military Utility of Landmines: Implications for Arms Control", published by the United States Department of Defence; and if he will publish his findings;

(2) for what reasons he has not made an assessment of the report published by the United States Department of Defence in June 1994 entitled the "Military Utility of Landmines: Implications for Arms Control".

Mr. Freeman: We have noted that the basic conclusion of this report—which was carried out by the Institute for Defence Analyses—is that issues of military utility need not preclude further consideration of any form of land mine arms control. That is the United Kingdom's position: we are at the forefront of international efforts to introduce tighter restrictions on the use and export of anti-personnel land mines.

My Department intends to assess the report later in the year as part of its continuing review of our military requirements for land mines. Following completion of this review, I will consider what information might be published.

Millbay Docks

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police have been deployed at Millbay docks recently during protests against live animal exports; and what cost; and for what purpose.

Mr. Soames: Up to 14 Ministry of Defence policemen have been deployed in the vicinity of Millbay docks during recent protests against live animal exports. Their purpose was to assist Devon and Cornwall police with particular regard to the protection of adjacent Ministry of Defence property. Provision for this was made from existing resources and no additional costs were incurred.

Drug Offences

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will update the figures referred to in his answer of 5 February 1993, Official Report, columns 371–72, for the number of service personnel who have been discharged for drugs-related offences.

Mr. Soames: In 1992, 229 personnel were dismissed from the services following court martial, summary proceedings or civilian court conviction for importing, supplying or possessing drugs. Figures for 1993 and 1994 are not yet available. Updated figures for Army and Royal Air Force personnel discharged administratively for drug offences are as follows:

1992–93: 333

1993–94: 200

1994–95: 122 (to date)

Flag Officer Scotland, Northern England and Northern Ireland

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of Flag Officer Scotland, Northern England and Northern Ireland's operational headquarters based at the Maritime Headquarters, Pitreavie.

Mr. Freeman: A consultative document was issued on 21 October 1994 setting out proposals to transfer the operational headquarters of Flag Officer Scotland, Northern England and Northern Ireland from Pitreavie to Faslane. Having given careful consideration to all the views expressed on these proposals during the consultation period, I have decided to proceed with the relocation of FOSNNI's operational headquarters to Faslane by April 1996. This measure will save some £22 million over the next 10 years. Of the service and civilian posts affected some 70 service and 52 civilian posts will no longer be required. We will continue to consult with staff and the trade unions about the detailed implementation of the measure and its implications. The move of FOSNNI's operational headquarters will entail the closure of the maritime headquarters at Pitreavie which is expected to become surplus to defence requirements. My officials have been in close contact with the Scottish Office and Fife Enterprise concerning the future development of the site, and I am pleased to be able to announce that the opportunity has arisen for MOD to make available to Fife Enterprise a 5.5 acre site to the south of the Pitreavie estate that is needed by the BSkyB company in connection with its inward investment project on an adjacent site. This area can be released in advance of the remainder of the Pitreavie site which will also be sold to Fife Enterprise, at open market rates, when MOD finally withdraws from Pitreavie in 1996.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Discipline Procedures

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his proposals for the reform of police discipline procedures in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I issued a consultation paper on police discipline procedures on 26 August 1993. The consultation paper proposed a new system for dealing with unsatisfactory performance, as well as suggesting improvements to existing disciplinary procedures. I have carefully considered the responses which I received, the majority of which were supportive of the reforms.

The changes which I have decided to make will create a more streamlined and up-to-date system for dealing with unsatisfactory performance and instances of misconduct. The reforms will take the form of new regulation-making powers on the conduct, efficiency and effectiveness of police officers and the maintenance of discipline, and will not prevent the pursuit of disciplinary action, when appropriate, if an officer has been acquitted of a criminal charge. There will be a new appeals tribunal, to replace the right of appeal to the Secretary of State. The right of officers to be legally represented when facing the most severe penalties will continue. Consistency will be maintained with Great Britain on the standards of proof for police disciplinary breaches.

These changes will establish a flexible framework for reform in this important area and maintain consistency across the United Kingdom.

Emergency Provisions Act

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now publish the report of Mr. J. J. Rowe's fundamental review of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991; and what arrangements he has made to review the operation of the Act in 1994.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I announced on 24 May 1994 that Mr. J. J. Rowe QC would be undertaking a fundamental review of the provisions of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991. This review would assist the Government in reaching decisions about what to do when the present Act reaches the end of its life in August 1996. Mr. Rowe's report is being published in full today as a Command Paper. I am most grateful to Mr. Rowe for his valuable work.

As Mr. Rowe himself makes clear, most of his work was completed before the Provisional IRA cessation of violence and it was wholly completed before the Loyalist cessation. His recommendations do not, therefore, take full account of the new situation which these events created, nor of the Government's working assumption that the ceasefires are intended to be permanent. The Government's hope is that a lasting peace will prove to be established and that the need for the exceptional powers provided by this Act will accordingly be removed. In the meantime, the Government will keep the need for such powers under continuing review.

Mr. Rowe has also accepted my invitation to prepare a report on the operation of the Act during 1994. As the temporary provisions of the Act will lapse on 15 June 1995 unless continued in force by order, I have asked Mr. Rowe to submit his report in sufficient time to facilitate Parliament's consideration of the Emergency Provisions Act.

At the same time, and as part of the Government's continuing review of the use of powers under emergency legislation, I have concluded on the basis of security advice that there is no longer a need to maintain those exclusion orders for which I am responsible and which are in force under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts. I have, therefore, directed the revocation of those orders. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary will announce in due course the outcome of a review of the 56 exclusion orders for which he is responsible.

Planning Applications

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what requirement there is for alterations in the number of dwellings in a planning application from that first advertisment to be advertised in the press.

Mr. Moss: There is no requirement to advertise alterations to planning applications. However, where an amended proposal would significantly alter the character or description of the original proposal, it would normally be the practice to re-advertise.

Belfast Urban Area Plan

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many trees have been removed from the sites identified as site 8 Beechill in the document, "Belfast Urban Area Plan 2001: development of suburban housing sites: Development Control Guidance Note. DOE (NI), June 1991", since June 1991;

(2) how many healthy trees identified as to be protected in site 8 Beechill in the document entitled, "Belfast Urban Area Plan 2001: development of suburban housing sites: Development Control Guidance Note. DOE (NI)", dated June 1991, have been removed.

Mr. Moss: The information requested is not immediately available. I will write to the right hon. Gentleman once it is.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the estimated total cost of producing the document, "Belfast Urban Area Plan 2001: development of suburban housing sites: Development Control Guidance Note DOE(NI)", dated June 1991;

(2) if he will make a statement of the place of the document entitled "Belfast Urban Area Plan 2001: development of suburban housing sites: Development Control Guidance Note DOE(NI), June 1991" in the Belfast urban area plan 2001;

(3) what is the legal status of the document entitled, "Belfast Urban Area Plan 2001: development of suburban housing sites: Development Control Guidance Note DOE(NI), June 1991"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The cost of producing the document is not available. The BUAP 2001 committed the Department to the publication of this document. The document is a material planning consideration.

Child Abuse and Rape Allegations

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) child abuse and (b) rape allegations have been made against teachers in each of the last five years; how many cases have not been proceeded with; and in how many cases the teacher has been found guilty.

Sir John Wheeler: The RUC does not hold any statistics relating to allegations as there may be many which are never investigated because no formal complaint is made.

In cases where a prosecution ensues, RUC statistics show persons proceeded against but, in normal circumstances occupation is not recorded.

Housing Executive

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the policy of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive on allocating grant aid as regards religious belief, what considerations underlay the questions as to the religious and political affiliation of households; and if he will ban the practice of seeking to obtain this information

Mr. Moss: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by its chief executive that completion of the religious affiliation question on the Executive's preliminary inquiry form for grants is optional and has no bearing whatsoever on either the executive's decision to accept or reject an application or the payment of any grant aid, which is made entirely on the basis of house condition and other eligibility factors. The question was introduced following a recommendation by the Standing Advisory Committee on Human Rights that the executive should monitor the impact of its policies and practices on each of the main sections of the community. The collection of this information has a valuable and important role to play in the promotion of equality of opportunity and equity for all the people of Northern Ireland. There are no questions about an applicant's political affiliation on the form.

Water and Sewerage Service

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were employed by the water and sewerage service in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Moss: The information, at 31 March of each financial year, is as follows:

Number of Water Executive Employees

Year	Number
1989–90	2,569
1990–91	2,598
1991–92	2,633
1992–93	2,543
1993–94	2,533

HEALTH

999 Telephone Calls

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measure her Department is taking to reduce the number of non-urgent 999 telephone calls.

Mr. Sackville: The new patients charter, launched on 18 January, advises the public on how they can help the national health service by remembering that the emergency ambulance service is there for people in the most urgent need of hospital treatment. Improvements in primary care should reduce the incidence of non-urgent calls. Further action is best taken by local initiatives.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account is taken of the closure of the accident and emergency departments at St. Bartholomew's, Guy's and other units within their operational area in the financial provisions for the London Ambulance Service recommended in the report to her from the chairman of the South Thames health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The future work load and configuration of accident and emergency departments are taken into account in the forward planning of the London Ambulance Service. The funding of the LAS is a matter for the purchasers of its services.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has that desirable standards in respect of London Ambulance services can be achieved by (a) unified and (b) fragmented service with equivalent resources.

Mr. Sackville: I look to the London Ambulance Service to improve its performance to the standards achieved by other ambulance services and believe that it should remain as a single unit provided it does so.

Anti-Malarial Tablets

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if anti-malarial tablets are available on prescription on the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Anti-malarial tablets for prophylaxis when travelling to endemic areas are available from travel clinics or from general practitioners on private prescription. Anti-malarial drugs may be prescribed on the national health service if they are being used for the treatment of malaria or for other medical conditions, such as rheumatoid arthritis.

Female Circumcision

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many girls have been admitted to hospitals in England suffering from complications following female circumcision in each year since such records were kept.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she proposes to assist younger people suffering from Alzheimer's disease; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Purchasers have been advised in "The Health of the Nation" key area handbook to take account of the needs of particular groups and conditions; this includes those suffering from pre-senile dementia.

Abortions

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by age the numbers of women who become pregnant within 12 months of abortions performed upon them in the latest year for which such figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not collected.

Organ Donor Register

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the NHS organ donor register was launched; and when the first advertisements appeared inviting potential donors to register;

(2) how many people have registered with the NHS organ donor register since its launch;

(3) when the NHS organ donor register will be fully operational;

(4) when the registration forms for the NHS organ donor register were first available.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service organ donor register was launched on 6 October 1994. Registration forms were available from that date. Over 4 million have been issued since that date and have been available in main post offices, libraries, chemists and other public places. The first advertisements appeared in the national press the following week. About 250,000 people have registered with it at present and numbers are growing rapidly.

Correspondence

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 843, when she now expects to respond to the open letter from the Islington Gazette, about the planned closure of St. Bartholomew's hospital and the future of health services for the people of Islington, a further copy of which was sent to her on 10 February.

Mr. Malone: A reply from the chairman of Camden and Islington health authority was printed in the Islington Gazette on 2 February. I have nothing further to add to that reply.

Prescribing Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to her answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 874, what was the average prescribing costs per 1,000 patients in (a) fundholding and (b) non-fundholding practices on each of dates specified; and what comparable information she has on the prescribing costs of non-fundholding practices participating in incentive prescribing schemes at those dates.

Mr. Malone: Available information is shown in the table. Practice-based prescribing incentive schemes did not commence until 1993–94; comparable information is not available centrally.

Average prescribing cost per 1,000 patients (net ingredient cost)

	1991–92 £	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
Fundholders:	51,000	56,000	61,000
Non-fundholders:	54,000	61,000	67,000

Note:
Net ingredient cost refers to the cost of the drugs before discounts and does not include any dispensing costs or fees.

GP Training

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what are the numbers of GP doctors currently in training who are from a member state of the European Union beside the United Kingdom; how their training costs are being met; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 30 January 1995]: Figures are not available centrally on the number of general practitioner doctors from European Union member states training in this country. The costs of training both in the general practice setting and in hospitals are met by the national health service.

NHS and Departmental Staff

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give the number of general and senior managers in (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) family health services authorities, (d) trusts, (e) general practitioner practices, (f) the national health service executive and (g) her Department in each year since 1989–90.

(2) if she will give the salary costs of general and senior managers in (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) family health services authorities, (d) trusts, (e) general practitioner practices, (f) the national health service executive and (g) her Department in each year since 1989–90.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 30 January 1995]: The available information is shown in the tables.

The increase in the number of managers in health authorities and trusts and therefore in costs, is largely due to the reclassification of administrative and professional staff—including many senior nurses—as general and senior managers. In family health services authorities, the increase is due to new or greater managerial responsibilities for primary care development, including medical audit advisory groups, budgetary control and health promotion monitoring, and developments in community care.

Information is not available centrally on general practitioner practice managers. The national health service executive and the Department of Health do not categorise staff in terms of general and senior managers in any way which permits comparison with those defined in this way in health authorities and trusts. Numbers of general and senior managers for 1991 and 1992 cannot be provided because the figures were collected on an aggregate basis and it is not possible to identify such staff in regional and district health authorities and FHSAs separately. The number of general and senior managers in DHAs cannot be provided for 1989, 1990 and 1993 because the aggregate figures collected for those years do not identify such staff in DHA headquarters separately. Information on salary costs is not available centrally for managers in FHSAs because their accounts and financial returns do not contain any breakdown of expenditure between staff groups.

Notes to tables:
1. The number of general and senior managers in trusts in 1993 differs from that published in October 1994 in table E of the Statistical Bulletin—the latter erroneously included some 280 staff from Wales.
2. Salary costs are based upon gross pay costs including employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions.
3. Salary costs for 1992–93 differ from those given previously due to validation work carried out in 1994.
4. Salary costs for 1993–94 are provisional.
5. First wave trusts did not become operational until 1 April 1991.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Illegal Residents

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the main provisions of the specimen treaty produced by the K4 group of the European Union; when he approved this specimen treaty; when he intends to report his approval of the specimen treaty to the House; if he will place a copy of the specimen treaty in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The standard bilateral readmission agreement adopted by the Justice and Home Affairs Council at its meeting on 30 November and 1 December 1994, provides a standard format and text as a basis for the negotiation of bilateral agreements between individual member states and third countries governing the readmission to their country of origin of those found to be illegally resident in the territories of the contracting parties. A copy of the document has been placed in the Library.

Prevention of Terrorism

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the report from Mr. J. J. Rowe QC on the operation in 1994 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Howard: I have today arranged for copies of Mr. Rowe's report to be placed in the Library. The Government are considering Mr. Rowe's recommendations on the future of the legislation and will shortly be arranging for debates in both Houses.

Firearms Licensing

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the report by the Association of Chief Police Officers on firearms licensing.

Mr. Maclean: A copy of the report on firearms administration produced by the Association of Chief Police Officers has been placed in the Library.

Bulgarian Vessel (Detention)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that the crew of the Rotalia are fed by the Bulgarian state while the vessel remains under Marine Safety Agency detention in United Kingdom waters in Lerwick harbour.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The provision of food for the crew of the Rotalia is a matter between them and their employers and not something in which the immigration service can become involved. However, it is my understanding that the crew are in possession of sufficient provisions on board the vessel.

Mr. Neil Jones

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries he has commissioned into the circumstances which led to Mr. Neil Jones being placed on probation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I understand that Mr. Jones was sentenced to probation on 21 July 1994 at Chester magistrates court. It was for the court to decide on the appropriate sentence in the circumstances of that case, and I cannot comment on that decision.

Anthony Charles Jeffs

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimated date of release has been given to Anthony Charles Jeffs; when he is to be released on licence; and what warnings have been given to him to avoid making statements after release which may be offensive to the victim's family or colleagues.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No estimated date of release has been given to Anthony Charles Jeffs. My right hon. and learned Friend has no power to consider the release of this prisoner unless the Parole Board so recommends. The next review of Mr. Jeffs's case by the Parole Board is not due to begin until March 1996.

Mr. Jeffs is detained in closed prison conditions where specific attention is being paid to his attitude and behaviour towards his victims' families or their colleagues.

Prisoners, Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of convicted and remand prisoners resident in Wales who were detained in prisons outside Wales in (a) 1994 and (b) 1993; if he will express (a) and (b) as a percentage of the prison population who were, prior to their incarceration, residing in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 17 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, if he will give the number of convicted and remand prisoners resident in Wales who were detained in prisons outside Wales in (a) 1994 and (b) 1993; if he will express (a) and (b) as a percentage of the prison population who were, prior to their incarceration, residing in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

No information is available centrally regarding the principal address of those committed to custody. The available information on where prisoners originate from is for the court first committing to custody. The table shows the provisional number of receptions recorded centrally into Prison Service establishments in England who were first committed into custody by a Welsh Court in 1993 and 1994.

Receptions[1] into a Prison Service establishment in England from a Welsh Court, 1993–1994

Type of custody	Number committed to an establishment in England	As percentage of total committed by Welsh courts
1993
remand[2]	1,400	40
sentenced[3]	1,000	34
1994
remand[2]	1,900	49
sentenced[3]	1,150	33

[1] Provisional figures.
[2] Includes convicted unsentenced prisoners.
[3] Excludes fine defaulters and person held in police cells; includes some prisoners previously held on remand.

Prisons

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the International Labour Organisation convention on forced labour in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on what representations he has received concerning the International Labour Organisation convention on forced labour in prisons.

We have received from the International Labour Organisation's (ILO) Committee of Experts observations on representations submitted by the Trades Union Congress (TUC) concerning ILO Convention 29 on forced or compulsory labour.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the technical and practical difficulties of compulsory drug testing in Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 February 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question concerning representations received on the technical and practical difficulties of compulsory drug testing in prisons.

No specific representations have been received on this matter by the Secretary of State. Two organisations raised issues concerning the potential operational and practical difficulties associated with drug testing within prisons at routine meetings with Ministers last year. I have received recently one letter which highlights similar concerns.

The difficulties associated with drug testing within prison have been examined in depth by the project team set up to implement mandatory drug testing for prisoners. Procedures developed for this are currently being introduced initially in eight prison establishments. Lessons learnt during this phase will help ensure the effective implementation of the drug testing programme in the remaining establishments.

Commercial Gambling (Advertising)

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to relax the press and other media advertising restrictions on licensed bingo clubs in line with recent relaxation of restrictions in the broadcast media for football pools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We are currently reviewing restrictions on the advertising of bingo and other forms of commercial gambling and hope to go out to consultation in May.

Prisoners (Tariffs)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were sentenced pursuant to (a) section 53(1) and (b) section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 have now been notified of their tariff; how many of them have been given tariffs of (i) five years or less, (ii) six to 10 years,

(iii) 10 to 15 years, (iv) 15 to 20 years, (v) over 20 years and (vi) life; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Some 217 persons in Prison Service custody and sentenced under section 53(1) have been notified of their tariff. The details are as follows:

	Number
Five years or less	2
Six to nine years[1]	33
10 to 14 years[1]	139
15 to 20 years	43
Over 20 years, less than whole life	0
Whole life	0

[1] These bands have been given to avoid the double counting of 10 and 15 year tariffs.

Some 21 persons in Prison Service custody and sentenced under section 53(2) have been told the relevant part—the tariff—of their sentence. The details are as follows:

	Number
Five years or less	7
Six to nine years[1]	8
10 to 14 years[1]	6
15 to 20 years	0
Over 20 years, less than whole life	0
Whole life	0

[1] These bands have been given to avoid the double counting of 10 and 15-year tariffs.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the functions for which further orders will be required to give full effect to structural change in Cleveland, together with when these orders will be laid before the House.

Mr. Curry: No further orders are required to give full effect to structural change in Cleveland. Depending on our decision on the county area of Cleveland, there may be further provision to redefine the county area and to address ceremonial functions, such as the Lord Lieutenancy. My right hon. Friend and colleagues in other Government Departments may wish to make regulations or issue guidance in due course in relation to the provision of services where there is to be unitary local government.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which bodies have commented on the draft Avon, Humberside and North Yorkshire (Structural Change) Orders and the Selby District (Boundary Change) Order; and if he will place copies of those comments in the Library.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My answer to the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) on 3 February 1995, Official Report, column 911, listed the bodies consulted on the draft orders. We have also received comments from other bodies such as parish councils as well as individuals. We will make available copies of comments from official bodies on request unless we are asked not to do so.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the provision for a transferor authority affected by structural change under the Local Government Act 1992 to seek information from a transferee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We intend that the individual orders made under section 17 of the Local Government Act 1992 will provide for transferor and transferee authorities alike to co-operate with one another so as to facilitate the implementation of structural change.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether article 20 of the draft Avon Structural Change (Order) grants powers to district councils transferring functions to South Gloucestershire which it does not grant to the county council also transferring powers to the new authority.

Mr. Curry: No.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he announced his decision to create new counties in Avon and Humberside.

Mr. Curry: Our decision to abolish the counties of Avon and Humberside was announced on 25 October 1994. In accordance with the Local Government Act 1972, when we abolish the counties of Avon and Humberside, we must at the same time provide for their areas to be included in other counties.

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role he envisages for the Local Government Commission once the current set of reviews is completed.

Mr. Curry: The Local Government Commission is responsible, under the Local Government Act 1992, for undertaking periodic electoral reviews of local government areas in England, as well as for conducting structural and boundary reviews at the direction of the Secretary of State. I expect that, once the current round of structural reviews is complete, its main business will be with the periodic electoral reviews.

Audit Commission

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what considerations underlay his decision to appoint a serving local authority chief executive to the membership of the Audit Commission; and what assessment he has made of the impact of this appointment on the independence of the Audit Commission from those bodies it supervises.

Mr. Curry: The Secretary of State appoints to the Audit Commission those whom he considers have the most appropriate skills and experience. Mr John Foster was appointed on this basis. Members do not represent particular interests, and the independence of the Audit Commission is not affected by the appointment of a serving chief executive, any more than it has been by the appointment in the past of serving local authority members.

Council Houses

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for the number of council houses without tenants for each local authority in England.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities in England report the numbers of their dwellings that are vacant at 1 April in their annual housing investment programme returns. Data for individual local authorities for 1994 can be found in section A of the "1994 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) of 13 February, Official Report, columns 514–15, what funding his Department has (a) set aside from current funds and (b) negotiated as extra funds from Her Majesty's Treasury to give to the Energy Saving Trust after it is designated under section 153 of the Environment Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I shall decide on any appropriate contribution to the costs of the Energy Saving Trust once it has reviewed its plans and discussed them with my officials.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he plans to make any changes to the provisional capping criteria which he announced on 1 February.

Mr. Curry: Following representations, I have concluded that the six metropolitan fire and civil defence authorities outside London face unique circumstances: as single service authorities with relatively small budgets, operating within detailed requirements governing minimum service provision, their flexibility is exceptionally constrained. I therefore propose to revise the provisional capping criteria that will apply to them.

My original proposals would have limited single service fire and civil defence authorities that are budgeting above their standard spending assessment to an increase in budget compared to 1994–95 of a 0.5 per cent. I now propose to revise the provisional capping criteria that apply to the metropolitan fire and civil defence authorities. The effect of my intended criteria is:

i. any increase in budget of more than 2 per cent. over 1994–95 would be considered excessive if it gives rise to a budget requirement above the authority's SSA;

ii. any increase of more than 1.25 per cent. would be considered excessive if it gives rise to a budget requirement over 5 per cent. above SSA;

iii. any increase of more than 0.5 per cent. would be considered excessive if it gives rise to a budget requirement over 10 per cent. above SSA.

The capping criteria are necessarily provisional. We cannot take decisions on capping until authorities have set their budgets for 1995–96.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what is the cost of legal aid awarded to Mr. Bryce Taylor.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No money has been paid on account to the solicitors acting for Mr. Bryce Taylor under legal aid, and no final bill has been received.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what steps he plans to take to ensure that every individual wishing to complain about treatment at the hands of the Legal Aid Board is automatically given the board's leaflet about its complaints procedures as soon as the complaint is drawn to the board's attention.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board does not require that complaints are lodged with it on a particular form. On receipt of a complaint—whether by telephone, letter, or on the form included in its complaints leaflet—the board takes immediate steps to resolve the problem. Where appropriate, a copy of the complaint leaflet is sent to the complainant but this would not be appropriate in every case—for example where the complaint has been satisfactorily resolved immediately over the telephone.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what mechanisms exist for setting and ensuring that Legal Aid Board staff responsible for assessing expert medical and other reports possess the necessary scientific or professional expertise.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board ensures through its quality management system, which includes detailed work allocation, supervision procedures and quality control mechanisms, that all work is allocated to staff with the appropriate degree of training and experience to deal with it.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what mechanisms exist for setting and ensuring minimum standards for quality of expert medical and other reports in legally-aided cases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Individual solicitors are responsible for obtaining expert medical and other reports in legal aid cases. The Legal Aid Board does not, itself, commission such reports. The board has introduced its franchising arrangements to ensure that there is a quality assured legal aid service available to clients. It is a mandatory requirement of franchising that all franchisees have documented procedures for using experts which include, among other things, clear criteria for selecting experts which must be followed and arrangements for checking opinions and reports when they are received to ensure they adequately provide the information sought.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what mechanisms exist to ensure that, where a legally aided individual makes a complaint about a particular Legal Aid Board official or office, that individual's application for legal aid will not be prejudiced.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board has adopted "justifiability of decision-making" as one of its guiding principles and seeks to ensure that all decisions are taken objectively and are uninfluenced by prejudice of any kind. To ensure that it meets this objective, it has obtained accreditation as a quality assured organisation under BS EN ISO 9002, formerly BS 5750. The board uses its quality management system—which includes detailed and comprehensive supervision, work allocation and quality control procedures—to ensure that decisions in individual cases are made objectively.

EMPLOYMENT

Trade Union Membership

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many employees have not given re-authorisation for their trade union membership subscriptions to be renewed, as laid down by the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993;

(2) if he will list the abuses of the process of employer check-off of trade union membership subscription remedied by the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993;

(3) if he will issue guidance to employers regarding information that they should give to employees about whether their trade union membership has been cancelled under the terms of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 because of failure to re-authorise;

(4) how much the process of seeking re-authorisation of trade union membership subscriptions under the terms of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 by trade unions has cost so far in terms of (a) labour costs, (b) administrative costs and (c) overall, breaking the information down by every trade union;

(5) what is the consequence for any individual who does not re-authorise the renewal of trade union membership subscriptions as laid down by the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993;

(6) if he will make a statement on the outcome of the first three-yearly exercise of re-authorisation of trade union membership subscription renewal laid down by the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993.

Mr. Oppenheim: There is no statutory requirement for re-authorisation of union membership subscriptions. Provisions in the 1993 Act require prior written consent from the worker, and renewed consent at least every three years, if an employer is lawfully to make check-off deductions from a worker's pay for union membership subscriptions.

The Department has no information on how many workers have consented to such deductions since these provisions came into force.

The case for changes to the law on check-off as it then stood was set out in the 1991 Green Paper "Industrial Relations in the 1990s". Paragraphs 6.18-6.27 of the Green Paper identified the potential problems which could arise for individuals, as well as particular instances of concern about the operation of check-off arrangements.

Guidance on the law is given in the Department's published "Guide to the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993"—Ref: PL 945—and in the booklet "The Payment of Union Subscriptions Through the Check-off"—Ref: PL 944. Both were published when the provisions came into force.

How employers may have responded to these requirements, and the consequential costs that they, or trade unions, may have incurred, are matters for them. No employer is required to offer check-off facilities.

If an employee does not authorise the continuance of such deductions, it will be unlawful for the employer to continue to make them.

I am unaware of any complaints having been made to industrial tribunals about unlawful deduction of check-off since the provisions came into effect. This may indicate that employers are complying with the law.

Labour Statistics

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by occupation, the work force in (a) full-time employment and (b) part-time employment in Islwyn in each year since 1979, also expressing the information by gender.

Mr. Oppenheim: Occupational information is not available for Islwyn.

Youth Training

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's responsibility for ensuring that non-employed status YT trainees are paid their basic weekly allowance; who is responsible for reimbursing training providers who make such payments in advance but who are not paid by their local training and enterprise council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: The Department contracts with training and enterprise councils for the delivery of youth training. The contract requires TECs to ensure that non-employed YT trainees are paid a regular training allowance at least to the level specified by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The arrangements TECs make with training providers is governed by the contracts agreed between the parties. Recovery of any ensuing debts is subject to the law of contract.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance he has issued to TEC directors about (a) their legal liability for the activities of their TEC and (b) the availability and advisability of taking out personal indemnity insurance to cover such liabilities; what information he has about the number of TECs and TEC directors who have insured themselves against such risks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: None. Training and Enterprise Councils are private companies. It is for TEC directors to take such advice as they consider appropriate as to their liabilities and the advisability of personal indemnity insurance. The TEC operating agreement requires a TEC to take out and maintain adequate insurance against any losses and damages arising from fault or negligence on the part of the TEC including, but not limited to, employers' liability; public liability; directors' and officers' liability; professional indemnity and damage to property. Information relating to indemnity insurance is not collected by the Department.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what is the liability of the directors of South Thames TEC for the losses incurred before the official receivers were appointed; how these directors will be asked to account for their actions as directors for the year up to the appointment of the receivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: South Thames training and enterprise council is a private company limited by guarantee. The liability of the directors will be determined in accordance with company law. I understand that the directors are preparing a statement on the companies affairs for the receiver in accordance with the requirements of the Insolvency Act 1986.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 619, what was the total number of redundancies at South Thames TEC from December 1994 to date.

Mr. Paice: I understand from the receiver that 68 employees of South Thames training and enterprise council have so far been made redundant. This include employees of Routeways, a wholly owned subsidiary of South Thames TEC.

Greenwich Training Company

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from hon. Members and others regarding the future of the Greenwich Training Company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about the future of the Greenwich Training Company. I understand that a meeting was held on Wednesday 15 February at which the directors of the Greenwich Training Company agreed to continue trading. The decision was made after the directors received assurances from South London training and enterprise council that it will contract with the company for 1995–96 if its proposals for assuming TEC responsibilities in the London borough of Greenwich are successful.

Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list the costs of legal aid made available to complaintants by the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action, broken down by (a) those relating to arrangements for legal aid, (b) legal representation to complainants, (c) legal advice given to inquirers and (d) sundry costs associated with cost of proceedings and preliminary activities associated with the preparing for those proceedings, for each year since 1993;

(2) how many complainants provided their own legal representatives or advisers and were reimbursed by the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action, broken down by (a) nature or category of complaint and (b) category of company, organisation or individual for each year since 1993;

(3) how many of the inquiries and complaints made to the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action were from (a) trade union members, (b) executive members of companies or organisations and (c) non-executive members of companies or organisations, broken down by (i) managerial and professional grades and (ii) manual and non-manual workers for each year since 1993;

(4) how many applications made to the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action were withdrawn for each year since 1993;

(5) how many cases were brought to the courts by the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial action for each year since 1993, broken down by (a) the number of cases lost and (b) the number of cases successfully brought by the commission on behalf of complainants for each year since 1993;

(6) if he will list the costs of legal aid and legal advice made available to complainants, broken down by (a) nature or category of complaint and (b) category of complainant or inquirer paid for by the Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for each year since 1993;

(7) how many (a) formal applications and (b) inquiries have been received by the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action in each year since 1993;

(8) if he will list the formal applications made to, and inquiries received by the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action in each year since 1993 broken down by the categories of applicant and inquirer;

(9) if he will list the previous legal, industrial relations or labour law work experience of Gill Rowlands, prior to her appointment as Commissioner to the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action;

(10) if he will give a breakdown of all income received by the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for each year since 1993;

(11) if he will give a breakdown of the nature of complaints made to the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for each year since 1993;

(12) if he will list those organisations in the private and public sectors who received a mailshot letter from the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for (a) 1993 and (b) 1994;

(13) if he will list the overseas visits and activities undertaken by the Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for each year since 1993;

(14) if he will list United Kingdom visits and activities undertaken by the Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for each year since 1993;

(15) if he will list the request for information regarding the role of the Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action from overseas countries in each case giving a summary of the nature of the information provided for each years since 1993;

(16) if he will list the costs of the overseas and United Kingdom visits made by the Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for each year since 1993 breaking down the individual costs incurred for each country visited;

(17) what are (a) the salary costs and (b) the number of hours worked in respect of the Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for each year since 1993;

(18) how many staff currently work for the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action; and what are the direct and indirect pay costs and operating expenses associated with the provision of his service, for each year since 1993.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answers 15 February 1995]: There is no Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action. The independent Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action can provide material assistance to individuals contemplating or taking certain proceedings against trade unions.

The present commissioner, Mrs. Gill Rowlands, has also, since 1988, been the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members. Prior to her appointment, she was chairman of the Liverpool and Manchester industrial tribunal from 1978 to 1988, and was for 12 years a justice of the peace on the Wirral bench. She read law at Kings college, London and was called to the Bar at Gray's Inn in 1952.

The salary costs of the Commissioner for the relevant years are:

1993–94 £8,299.00 (August 1993 to March 1994)
1994–95 £15,213.44 (April 1994 to date)

The Commissioner is contracted to work for seven and a half hours, one day per week.

I understand from the Commissioner that:

One formal application for assistance was made in 1994 which was withdrawn in the same year. The application was made on the basis that the National Union of Teachers was organising industrial action without the protection of the statutory immunities.

Some 140 inquiries were received by her office in 1993–94, and 476 in the 1994–95 year (to date).

No legal costs have been incurred or paid.

No information on the occupations or union membership of those making inquiries or complaints to the Commissioner is held.

Apart from grant in aid from my Department, no income has been received by the commissioner.

No mailshots were carried out in 1993. In 1994, mailshots were sent to:

Advice centres
Citizens advice bureaux
Employment Service offices
Training and enterprise councils
Solicitors
Libraries
Law centres
ACAS offices
All Members of Parliament

No overseas visits or activities have been undertaken.

It is not possible to list all the visits and activities undertaken in the United Kingdom as to do so would, in certain instances, breach the Commissioner's guarantee of confidentiality. However, they include meetings with lawyers, Government Departments, academics and others, presentations, public speaking engagements and media interviews.

Requests for information regarding the role of the commissioner were received from the following overseas countries:

1993

Kenya

Request for information on the commissioner's role and on any other United Kingdom industrial relations matters. A copy of the commissioner's guide and a selection of Employment Department leaflets were provided.

1994

Japan

A guide and annual report were requested by a student at Shimane university. They were provided.

Spain

A guide and annual report were requested by the Director of Documentation, Council of Social and Economic Affairs. Copies were provided.

France

General information was requested by a student. Copies of the commissioner's annual report and guide were sent together with a selection of Employment Department industrial relations leaflets.

Greece

General information requested by a professor at Athens—University. Copies of the guide and annual report were provided.

Information regarding the commissioner's travel costs is not held separately. The costs of domestic travel and subsistence for the Commissioner's office for the relevant years are as follows:

1993–94 £1,503.00 (August 1993—March 1994)
1994–95 £1,492.68 (to date)

Five staff provide support for both the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members and the Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action. The pay and operational costs apportioned to the latter's office have been:

1993–94 (August 1993—March 1994)
Staff salaries: £19,151.00
Accommodation: £3,737.00
Fuel and Utilities: £1,454.00

1994–95 (to date)
Staff salaries: £33,309.00
Accommodation: £8,108.33
Fuel and Utilities: £1,585.33

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what were the costs of all overseas and United Kingdom visits made by the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989 broken down by individual country;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of the income received by the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989;

(3) if he will list all United Kingdom visits and activities undertaken by the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989;

(4) if he will list the costs of legal aid made available to complainants by the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members, broken down by (a) those involving arrangements for legal aid, (b) legal representation to complainants, (c) legal advice given to inquirers and (d) sundry costs associated with the cost of proceedings and preliminary activities associated with preparing for those proceedings for each year since 1989;

(5) of the inquiries and complaints made to the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members how many were from (a) trade union members, (b) executive members of companies or organisations and (c) non-executive members of companies or organisations, broken down by (i) managerial and professional grades and (ii) manual and non-manual workers for each year since 1989;

(6) how many cases were brought to the courts by the Commission for Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989 broken down by (a) the number of cases lost and (b) the number of cases successfully brought by the commission on behalf of complainants for each year since 1989;

(7) if he will list (a) the formal applications made to and (b) inquiries received by the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989 broken down by category of applicant and inquirer;

(8) if he will list the legal, employment and industrial relations work experience of Gill Rowlands, prior to her appointment as Commissioner to the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members;

(9) if he will list (a) the salary costs of and (b) the number of hours worked by the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989;

(10) if he will list those organisations in the private and public sectors who received a mailshot letter from the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members for (a) 1993 and (b) 1994;

(11) if he will list all overseas visits and activities undertaken by the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989;

(12) if he will list the conclusions contained in the evidence provided by the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members to Mr. Fujikawa from the University of Tokyo in respect of his research project on United Kingdom industrial relations conducted in 1994;

(13) if he will place in the Library a copy of the papers delivered to (a) the International Conference of Labour lawyers at Lodz university and (b) the lecture given to Torun university in Poland in 1994 by the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members;

(14) if he will list the requests from overseas countries for information regarding the role of the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members; and if he will give a summary of the information provided to these countries for each year since 1989;

(15) how many complainants who provided their own legal representatives or advisers were reimbursed by the Commission for Rights of Trade Union Members, broken down (a) by nature or category of complaint and (b) by category of company, organisation, or individuals, for each years since 1989;

(16) how many applications made to the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members were withdrawn for each year since 1989;

(17) if he will list the cost of legal aid and legal advice made available to complainants paid for by the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members broken down by (a) nature of category of complaint and (b) category of complainant or inquirer for each year since 1989;

(18) how many (a) formal applications and (b) inquiries were received by the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989;

(19) if he will give a breakdown of the nature of complaints made to the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members for each year since 1989;

(20) how many staff are employed by the Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members; and what were (a) the direct and indirect pay costs and (b) the operating expenses associated with the provision of this service for each year since 1989.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answers 15 February 1995]: There is no Commission for the Rights of Trade Union Members. The independent Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members can provide material assistance to individuals contemplating or taking certain proceedings against trade unions, their officials or trustees.

Prior to her appointment, the present Commissioner, Mrs. Gill Rowlands, was chairman of the Liverpool and Manchester Industrial Tribunal from 1978 to 1988, and was for 12 years a justice of the peace on the Wirral bench. She read law at Kings college London, and was called to the Bar at Grays Inn in 1952.

The salary paid to the Commissioner has been as follows:

1989–90	£18,795.00
1990–91	£23,265.00 (12 month period)
1991–92	£31,174.00 (13 month period)
1992–93	£29,400.00
1993–94	£32,715.00
1994–95	£30,426.50 (to date)

The commissioner is contracted to work two days per week, seven and a half hours per day.

I understand from the Commissioner that the total travel and subsistence costs for herself and her staff have been as follows:

1989–90	£3,200.00 (all within the UK)
1990–91	£7,147.00 (all within the UK)
1991–92	£8,332.00 (all within the UK)
1992–93	£19,121.00 (all within the UK)
1993–94	£5,580.00 (UK and two visits to Poland)
1994–95	£6,052.80 (to date—all within the UK)

The total cost of the Commissioner's only overseas visits—to Poland on a lecture tour organised by Torun university and for a presentation to the International Conference of Labour Lawyers at Lodz university during 1993–94—was £1,265.00. The papers delivered by her on these visits will be placed in the Library.

Other than grant in aid from my Department, the Commissioner receives no "income" other than receipts representing the return of legal costs. These receipts, all of which have been returned to the Consolidated Fund, have been as follows:

1989–90	nil
1990–91	nil
1991–92	£32,477.00
1992–93	£5,462.00
1993–94	£35,643,00
1994–95	£4,427.04 (to date)

To list the Commissioner's visits and activities in the form requested would, in certain instances, breach the guarantee of confidentiality which the Commissioner provides to those who contact her. Visits within the UK have involved meetings with lawyers, Government Departments, trade union members and others, as well as presentations, speaking engagements and media interviews.

The Commissioner is not involved in the provision of legal aid, nor does she offer legal advice to inquirers. The assistance made available to enable applicants to obtain legal advice and—if necessary—bring proceedings has been as follows:

1989–90	£17,893.00
1990–91	£75,803.00
1991–92	£85,588.00
1992–93	£193,265.00
1993–94	£93,763.00
1994–95	£108,002.00 (to date).

No statistics about inquirers' background or status are available before 1991–92. Even then, a number of inquirers were not prepared to release information about themselves. The number who have identified themselves as trade union members is as follows:

1991–92 277
1992–93 237
1993–94 234
1994–95 190 (to date)

No further information is available about the status of inquirers.

While the Commissioner herself does not bring cases to court, proceedings brought with her assistance have been as follows:

	Won by assisted person	Lost by assisted person
1988–89	Nil	Nil
1989–90	Nil	2
1990–91	Nil	Nil
1991–92	5	Nil
1992–93	4	1
1993–94	1	Nil
1994–95	3	[1]Nil

Note:
The majority of complaints for which assistance was granted were settled without the need to bring cases to court.
[1] To date.

The subject matter of formal applications for the Commissioner's assistance has been as follows—where no figure is given, there were no relevant applications in the year concerned; complaints about breaches of certain union rules have been in scope of the Commissioner's assistance only since the 1990–91 year:

Union failure to ballot on industrial action
1988–89 1
1989–90 6
1990–91 1
1991–92 1
1994–95 1 (to date)

During 1993 and 1994, the Commissioner issued a mailshot to everyone attending the Institute of Personnel Managers Conference and Exhibition in 1992 and 1993 respectively. In 1993, she issued a mailshot to all members of the North West Law Society, and in 1994 to all Members of Parliament. All mailshots were to individuals.

The Commissioner provided neither conclusions nor evidence in her discussion with Mr. Fujikawa, but outlined how her office considers applications for assistance, and supplied him with copies of her annual reports and guides.

All requests from overseas have been for information about the Commissioner's activities and role. In all cases, the individuals making such inquiries were supplied with a copy of the Commissioner's annual report(s), or guides. Inquiries were received from individuals from the following countries:

1989–90 Japan, Canada, Malaysia, Greece, USA, Romania
1991–92 Denmark, Netherlands, Sweden, Japan, Taiwan, USA
1992–93 Netherlands
1993–94 USA, Germany, Jamaica, Japan, Malaysia.

No applicant awarded assistance has been reimbursed by the Commissioner. Legal costs are paid direct to the applicant's solicitor on behalf of the applicant. Assistance has been provided only to individuals. The basis of applications assisted in particular years has been as follows:

Member's right to a ballot before official industrial action
1989–90 2
1991–92 1
1994–95 1 (to date)

Right of access to union accounting records

The number of applicants for the Commissioner's assistance who failed to progress their applications is as follows:

1989–90 4
1990–91 2
1991–92 7
1992–93 2
1993–94 1
1994–95 2 (to date).

The costs of assistance provided to particular applicants cannot be allocated to particular operational years. Relevant expenditure by nature of the complaint is as follows:

Member's right to a ballot before official industrial action—£17,627
Right of access to union accounting records—£16,268
Use of union funds to indemnify unlawful conduct—£3,760
Unlawful use of union property by trustees—£103,566
Union failure to comply with statutory duties for election to certain offices—£148,475
Breach of union rules for appointment or election to office—£104,569
Breach of union rules for disciplinary proceedings—£9,793
Breach of union rules on balloting of members—£1,022
Breach of union rules on application of funds or property—£12,441

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what was the financial provision from grants in aid from the Employment Department's Supply Estimates to (a) the Commission for the Rights of Individual Trade Union Members for each year since 1989 and (b) the Commission for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action for each year since 1993.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 15 February 1995]: The estimates provision for grant in aid, and grant in aid actually received from the Department, have been as follows:

Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members

Year	Provision (£)	Actually received (£)
1989–90	800,000	246,000
1990–91	280,000	263,000
1991–92	500,000	291,000
1992–93	514,000	431,000

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mobile Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what backing he is giving to the development and use of mobile abattoirs.

Mrs. Browning: All slaughterhouses, including mobile abattoirs, must meet the structural and hygiene standards set out in the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 and have to be licensed by the appropriate Agriculture Department. Officials of the State Vetrinary Service have given, and will continue to give, advice and encouragement to any project to design and establish a mobile abattoir. At present, there are no mobile abattoirs in use in England.

Cheese Production

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the fall in UK cheese production since the demise of the Milk Marketing Board; and what action he plans to take to reverse it and restore the production of quality speciality cheese.

Mr. Jack: Figures for cheese production since 1 November 1994 are not yet available. However, one of the biggest problems for cheese makers under the old milk marketing arrangements was the withdrawal of milk supplies by the MMB at short notice. They now enjoy greater security of supply for their milk.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ministerial Visits

Mr. MacShane: (1) To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

(2) To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans he has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

Mr. Hunt: We have no present plans to do so.

SCOTLAND

M77

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the formal notice of complaint No 95/40005 SG(95)/A/287 from the European Commission, relating to the Ayr road route M77 was received by his Department; and what response has been made.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The Government have received no formal notice of complaint from the Commission.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when was the last occasion upon which advice was received on the matter of civil eligibility for legal aid from the Scottish Legal Aid Board;

(2) if he will implement advice given by the Scottish Legal Aid Board in 1991 in its response to his Department's consultation paper on eligibility for civil legal aid in Scotland to the effect that the fixed upper limit should be abolished and replaced by some other form of universal eligibility or flexible upper limit;

(3) what representations he has received from the Scottish Legal Aid Board following implementation of the new financial limits for eligibility for legal aid.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from the Scottish Legal Aid Board on the question of eligibility for civil legal aid since the advice on proposed changes to eligibility for advice and assistance referred to in my reply to the hon. Members question of 12 February 1993, Official Report, columns 849-50. In setting eligibility limits, the Government must make a judgement as to the correct level, having regard on the one hand to providing access to legal services to those unable to afford them, and on the other to the need to control the level of public expenditure. Against this background, the Government have no plans to abolish the fixed upper eligibility limit.

Abortions

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many abortions were performed in England and Wales, on women resident in each health authority in 1993; and, of these operations, how many were performed in NHS hospitals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested for 1993 is not yet available. Information on abortions performed in England and Wales is provided by the Office of Population Census and Surveys. This data will be available within the next few months.

Scottish Health Common Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what consultations he had with the Welsh Health Common Services Authority concerning W. S. Atkins' part in designing Ysbyty Gwynedd hospital, Bangor, Gwynedd, prior to the decision to sell Scottish Health Common Services to the company;

(2) what information he has concerning the level of compensation paid by W. S. Atkins and Partners in 1988 to the Welsh Health Common Services authority in cognisance of the design faults at Ysbyty Gwynedd hospital, Bangor, before his decision to sell Scottish Health Common Services to the company.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 February 1995]: None. The decision to sell the building division of the Common Services Agency for the NHS in Scotland to W. S. Atkins Ltd. followed an extensive competitive tendering exercise.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the occasions during the last five years when his Department or its agencies has taken legal action against a consultancy firm; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 February 1995]: On no occasion during the last five years has my Department or its agencies taken legal action against a consultancy firm.

Health Care International

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who were the members of the Scottish Industrial Development Advisory Committee when Government support for HCI in Clydebank was confirmed; and what is the industrial or commercial background of those members.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 23 January 1995]: The provision of regional selective assistance for Health Care International was considered and approved by the Scottish Industrial Development Advisory Board, first in April 1988 and subsequently in February 1990.

Listed below are the SIDAB members at the relevant dates:

The members represented a range of backgrounds including industry and commerce, banking and finance, and the trade unions.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies House (Sickness)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, columns 552–53, if he will restate the Companies House sickness absence level on the management control basis.

Mr. Heseltine: Sickness absence rates, expressed as a percentage of contracted hours for each member of staff, were as follows:

Year	Per cent.
1991	4.9
1992	5.4
1993	5.3
1994	4.9

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the contingent liabilities and interest generated under section 2 of the Export and Overseas Investment Guarantees Act 1978 and charged to the Consolidated Fund accounts in each year since 1981.

Mr. Needham: ECGD's liabilities under section 2 of the 1978 Act, as notified in the Department's statutory return, were as follows:

Year Ending	£ thousands
31 March 1983	21,286
31 March 1984	22,590
31 March 1985	23,641
31 March 1986	21,043
31 March 1987	20,326
31 March 1988	19,442
31 March 1989	20,737
31 March 1990	16,767
31 March 1991	15,096

No record is held of the figure prior to March 1983. Likewise no information is available after March 1991 as the section 2 category lapsed when the 1978 Act was superseded by the 1991 Export and Investment Guarantees Act.

ECGD's accounting records have been maintained on a basis which allows interest earned or charged to the notional section 2 Consolidated Fund balance to be detailed only up to the 31 March 1987. The amounts were as follows:

Year	£ Million
1981–82	+53.7
1982–83	+32.3
1983–84	+14.7
1984–85	–3.4
1985–86	–17.4
1986–87	–37.1

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much interest support payments from the Ministry of Defence are shown in the annual accounts of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Needham: The level of contributions from the Ministry of Defence towards interest support payments, as shown in the appropriation accounts of the Export Credits Guarantee Department, are as follows:

Year	£
1986–87	894,000
1987–88	972,000
1988–89	1,119,000
1989–90	993,000
1990–91	1,058,000
1991–92	920,000
1992–93	797,000
1993–94	597,000

The above totals relate to the interest support scheme reported under ECGD's export finance assistance vote.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to travel to Hong Kong in 1995.

Mr. Heseltine: At present I have no plans to visit Hong Kong during 1995. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade is hoping to make a trade promotion visit to Hong Kong in the autumn.

Lebanon

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the involvement of the British Government in the promotion of British business interests in the reconstruction of central Beirut.

Mr. Needham: Working in close collaboration with the British embassy in Beirut we have, through a series of promotional events and other activities, ensured that United Kingdom business is fully aware of the opportunities arising from the reconstruction of Beirut. This has included support for trade missions, the "Rebuild Lebanon", and other exhibitions, which have the reconstruction of Beirut as one of their themes. British commercial interests have also been promoted during ministerial visits which have included business men from the UK construction sector.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on economic relations between the UK and Lebanon.

Mr. Needham: Since the end of the civil war, our trade and economic links with the Lebanon have grown steadily; in 1994 our exports reached £138 million. The Lebanese Prime Minister visited the UK in January 1994 and there are regular contacts at ministerial and official level involving economic and trade issues. I look forward to the continuing and mutually beneficial growth in these links.

Inward Investment

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much inward investment there has been in Britain by Taiwanese firms in the past five years by value, number of projects and number of jobs created; and how much has gone to Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Eggar: All but one of the manufacturing investments by Taiwanese companies in Europe are in the UK. Since 1990, four companies have set up manufacturing operations in Britain creating or safeguarding nearly 700 jobs. All these investments are located in England. Two further companies have announced their intention to invest in Northern Ireland and one in Wales.

I am unable to release the figure for the value of the investments as it is commercially sensitive.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 557, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 15 February 1995]: I am currently responsible for a total of over 630 public appointments. In 1994, a total of 212 appointments, including re-appointments were made.

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 13 February 1995]: Expenditure on advertising from my Department's central publicity budget since 1979–80 at 1994–95 prices is as follows:

Year	£000
1979–80	3,892
1980–81	7,677
1981–82	7,546
1982–83	6,105
1983–84	6,701
1984–85	8,219
1985–86	7,797
1986–87	45,769
1987–88	15,256
1988–89	27,061
1989–90	13,166
1990–91	7,601
1991–92	1,056
1992–93	1,197
1993–94	800

I have asked chief executives of DTI agencies to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Hobday to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 February 1995:

I refer to your question to the President of the Board of Trade concerning expenditure on advertising.

The Accounts Services Agency have spent £995 exclusive of VAT during the current financial year. This is the first year since the Agency's creation in October 1991 in which expenditure has been incurred.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 February 1995:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking about the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by Departments and Agencies since 1979, in 1994 prices.

Following the answer given by the President of the Board of Trade, I am replying as Chief Executive of Companies House which became an Executive Agency of the Department of Trade and Industry in October 1988.

Companies House Executive Agency advertising expenditure at 1994/95 prices is as follows:

1989–90 £380,265
1990–91 £260,288
1991–92 £207,670
1992–93 £348,932
1993–94 £206,040
1994/95—£174,000 year to date

These figures include expenditure on advertising to raise the awareness of Late Filing Penalties and inform and remind companies of the due dates for filing.

I hope this is helpful to you.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 February 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Question about Insolvency Service expenditure on advertising.

The Insolvency Service, which became an Executive Agency in March 1990, does not place advertisements of its business. Official Receivers of The Service are required to place in newspapers and other journals notices concerning specific matters relating to individual insolvencies, for example notice of the making of a bankruptcy order. The cost of these notices are a charge on the estates of bankrupts and companies in compulsory liquidation.

Letter from R.D. Worswick to Mr. Malcolm Bruce dated 15 February 1995:

PQ ON ADVERTISING

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to write to you about the advertising spend by the Laboratory of the Government Chemist (LGC).

LGC's spend on external advertising is concentrated in the trade press to promote seminars and other similar scientific events. We also spend modest amounts on recruitment advertising but this is not included in the figures below.

Information before 1991 is not readily available but I am not aware of any reason to believe that the spend over the last couple of years is not typical of our expenditure in earlier years. In 1991/92 we spent £3,000, in 1992/93 we spent £6,000 and in 1993/94 we spent £4,000 on all forms of advertising (all figures in 1994 prices).

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Malcolm Bruce dated 17 February 1995:

I refer to your question to the President of the Board of Trade on the subject of the expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry and its Agencies on all forms of advertising. The expenditure by year in 1994 prices since the vesting of NEL as an Agency on 6 October 1990 is as shown on the attached schedule.

I trust you will find this information satisfactory for your purposes.

Expenditure by Nel on all forms of advertising

	£(1994)
FY 90/91	[illegible]932
FY 91/92	[illegible]745
FY 92/93	23,796
FY 93/94	10,511
FY 94/95 (to date)	5,844

Letter from Peter Clapham to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 February 1995:

I am writing in response to your question to the President of the Board of Trade about expenditure by his department and its agencies on advertising.

NPL became an Executive Agency in July 1990, but advertising (other than recruitment advertising) was covered by the department's central publicity budget until 1991/92. Since then expenditure (including recruitment advertising) has been as follows (including VAT) in 1994 prices:

1991–92 £82,000
1992–93 £46,000
1993–94 £45,000.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 February 1995:

EXPENDITURE ON ADVERTISING

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about expenditure on advertising.

While NWML takes every opportunity to bring its activities to the attention of interested parties, the use of paid advertising is rare and there has been no such expenditure since 1992. Expenditure in previous years, for which figures are not readily available, was limited to occasional advertisements in specialist journals.

Letter from P.R.S. Hartnack to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 February 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to provide you with information relating to the Patent Office, as part of the reply to your question on advertising expenditure in the DTI and its agencies since 1979.

The figures for advertising expenditure by the Patent Office are supplied below, covering the years 1990/91–1993/94 (at 1994/95 prices and inclusive of VAT) since the Patent Office became an Executive Agency in 1991. Any advertising expenditure on intellectual property prior to 1990/91 will have been subsumed in general Departmental advertising.

Advertising expenditure in the Patent Office

1990–91 £57,000
1991–92 £54,000
1992–93 £410,000
1993–94 £417,000

I hope this information is helpful to you.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 February 1995:

ADVERTISING COSTS

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about advertising costs for this Agency.

Since becoming an Agency in 1990 the Agency has spent the following on publicity:

1990–91 £171,426
1991–92 £216,166
1992–93 £289,222
1993–94 £244,953

Publicity includes a wide range of information distributed by the Agency which is not wholly 'advertising'. Although we do not have separate figures for advertising as such we estimate this represents around 30 per cent. of the annual outturn figures above.

Prior to 1990, the then Radio Regulatory Division's advertising costs would have been contained within the overall DTI figures which you have.

EDUCATION

Secondary Schools (Spending)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what the average spending per pupil is in secondary schools in the northern region; and what the figure was in 1978 at current prices.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table below shows expenditure by 32 LEAs in the north of England on secondary pupils, for 1978–79 and 1992–93, the latest year for which final information is available, in 1994–95 prices. The average is an increase in real terms in 54 per cent.

Schools, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money is held in reserves by schools in Bolton.

Mr. Robin Squire: Some £2.291 million, net, at the end of the financial year 1993–94. This figure relates to schools then covered by the local education authority's scheme for the local management of schools. Information relating to financial balances held by grant-maintained schools is held by the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Incorporated Colleges

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the proportion of spending on staffing of the total of each incorporated college's expenditure; and what is the proportion of total expenditure on teaching staff for each college, in the first accounting period.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not collected by the Department.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for many pupils (a) in the Northern Region of England and (b) in each school in the region received assistance under the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: There were 9,382 pupils holding assisted places in the Northern Region of England in academic year 1993–94, the latest year for which complete figures are available. The number of assisted pupils in each school in the region is given in the following table.

Higher Education Institutes

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether provision exists for higher education institutions that under-recruit on planned student numbers due to exceptional circumstances to be given exemption or relief from fiscal penalisation by the Higher Education Funding Council for England.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Higher Education Funding Council for England and I am asking the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances the habitual residence test is applied to asylum seekers.

Mr. Roger Evans: It was and remains Government policy that the habitual residence test should not apply to asylum seekers. The independent adjudicating authorities considered that the test applied to all income support claimants since its introduction in August 1994, including asylum seekers, but have now revised their position and concluded that the test does not apply to claimants who are already defined as "persons from abroad" in the income support rules.

Income Support

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the net gain for a person who is on income support and has worked at £3.20 per hour for (a) eight hours and (b) 16 hours, showing calculations in each case.

Mr. Roger Evans: Information for a single person is shown in the table.

As part of our plans to make work pay, we aim to pilot new help similar to family credit, but aimed at couples and single people without children. This in-work benefit will be tested in eight pilot locations over a three-year period from October 1996. A consultation document in April will provide more information on the scheme and the proposed pilot locations. If the pilot shows that a national scheme would be effective, the gain from work would increase for childless people with low or modest earnings.

Gain from work at £3.20 per hour

Hours worked	Pay	Income Support	Rent	Housing Benefit	Council Tax	Council Tax Benefit	Total Net Income	Net Income after payment of rent and council tax when in work	Net Income after payment of rent and council tax when not in work	Net gain from work
8	25.50	25.10	30.91	30.91	6.60	6.60	88.21	50.70	45.70	5.00
16	51.20	—	30.91	30.59	6.60	6.50	88.29	50.78	45.70	5.08

Notes:

1. The person is assumed to be single, aged 25 or over, living in local authority accommodation and liable for average council tax and local authority rent.
2. The person is assumed to take-up full entitlement to income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit.
3. Tax and national insurance contributions are not payable at the earnings levels shown.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of non-employed youth trainees who currently receive a top-up on their allowance and who are (a) liable for income tax, (b) liable for national insurance and (c) credited with national insurance contributions.

Mr. Roger Evans: Non-employed young people participating in youth training are eligible for an income support top-up if their allowance is less than benefit levels. The youth training allowance does not attract income tax or national insurance deductions; neither does income support paid to someone who is not required to register for work.

For retirement pension and widows' benefits purpose, all young people are automatically awarded class 3 national insurance credits in the tax year in which they attain their 16th birthday, and the two succeeding tax years.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, if Irish nationals are eligible to receive income support during the child benefit extension period; and what are the eligibility requirements.

Mr. Roger Evans: Income support may be claimed by unemployed young people aged 16 or 17 during the child benefit extension period if they have good reason for living away from the family home and they are registered for employment/youth training.

Unemployed Irish nationals aged 16 or 17 who are forced to live independently, with no established entitlement to child benefit in Great Britain, can claim income support under the severe hardship provision if there is no other means of support and providing they are registered for work/youth training.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for the last five years for which figures are available the number of claims for severe hardship payments which have been (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful following review of an unsuccessful claim.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many YT trainees living away from home receive an income support top-up.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, columns 820–21, if he will list the sub-headings under which the Child Support Agency reports monthly performance to Ministers on (a) targets, (b) recovery plan implementation and (c) other issues.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Frank Field, dated 17 February 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the sub headings under which the Child Support Agency returns data to Ministers.

The sub-headings are as follows:

a) Targets; maintenance arrangements, accuracy of assessments, benefit savings, age of cases, speed of clearance, maintenance collected, fees received, and milestones (for example improving information systems).

b) Recovery Plan Implementation; generic Child Support Agency (CSAC), improved management information systems, extending information technology (IT) to Field offices, centralisation of CSAC telephone services, improved IT effectiveness, improved key processes, recruitment and deployment of additional staff, centralisation of appeals, reduced intake, Parliamentary business improvements, and review of operational accounting.

c) Other issues; specialist tracing, paternity, requirement to co-operate, and special payments.

I hope this is of help.

TREASURY

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 595, how many appointments to public positions have been made by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 February 1995]: Some 84 appointments were made in 1994.

European Central Bank

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much the United Kingdom has agreed to pay towards the establishment costs of the European central bank and what is the value of this sum in pounds sterling; and what legal requirement there was for the United Kingdom to make this contribution under the provisions on monetary union in the treaty of Maastricht;

(2) if he will make a statement about the basic purpose of the proposed European central bank;

(3) under what legislative provision he intends to make a payment towards the establishment costs of the European central bank; and if the decision will be subject to the approval of the Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Nelson: The UK has made no contribution towards the establishment of a European central bank. Nor would any contribution by any member state be made unless there were a decision to move to stage 3 of EMU as set out article 1091(1) of the EC treaty.

The objectives and tasks of a European system of central banks—comprising the ECB and the member states' national central banks—and the arrangements for subscribing capital, are set out in articles 2 and 6, and 28 to 29, of the protocol on the statute of the ESCB and of the ECB, annexed to the EC treaty.

Cuba (Debt)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Cuba's external public debt; and how much is owning to Her Majesty's Government or agencies thereof.

Mr. Nelson: We have no reliable estimate of Cuba's total external public debt. The OECD estimates Cuba's total external debt at $35 billion—end 1993.

A total of £54.6 million is currently owed to HMG under four bilateral debt rescheduling agreements. A further £17.1 million, plus late interest, remains outstanding under contracts insured by HMG through the Exports Credits Guarantee Department.

Government Expenditure

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 1200, if he will give a break down of the identifiable Government expenditure per head in 1993–94 in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Aitken: A detailed breakdown of the identifiable Government expenditure per head in 1993–94 in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland will be published in the statistical supplement to the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96" on 24 February 1995.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total expenditure on all forms of advertising by his Department and its agencies for each year since its establishment in 1994 prices.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 13 February 1995]: The estimated annual spend, in 1994 prices, on all forms of advertising for my Department and its two agencies is shown in the following table.

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £	1994–95 £
DNH	[1]32,902	37,539	14,388
Historic Royal Palaces	548,299	710,750	527,238
The Royal Parks	[2]—	244	15,827

Notes:
[1] DNH took on responsibility for its own expenditure in August 1992 and this figure represents the period August 1992 to March 1993.
[2] The Royal Parks was established as an agency in 1 April 1993.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Zaire

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much food is currently needed for the Rwandan refugee camps in Zaire; and how much is currently being delivered.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 16 February 1995]: Emergency food needs for Rwandan and Burundian refugees in Goma, Bukavu and Uvira in eastern Zaire are estimated by the World Food Programme to be 24,200 metric tons per month. Approximately 26,000 metric tons of food was delivered to the camps in January 1995. This supplemented stocks of approximately 5,000 metric tons already available in the camps at the beginning of the year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what difficulties are being experienced by the World Food Programme in crossing Rwandan territory on their way to Rwandan refugees in Zaire.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 16 February 1995]: We understand that the Rwandan authorities are imposing limits on axle loads at Gatuna on the Uganda/Rwanda border and are delaying trucks crossing at Gisenyi on the Rwanda/Zaire border. The World Food Programme is currently in discussion with the Rwandan authorities to try to resolve these matters.

WALES

Cycling Accidents

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many accidents between cyclists and pedestrians occurred in 1994; and how many prosecutions there were for cycling on the footway.

Mr. Redwood: Road accident data is not yet available for the whole of 1994. Provisional data shows that there were seven accidents between cyclists and pedestrians in Wales between January and September 1994. Details of prosecutions for cycling on the footway during 1994 are not yet available.

Rail Freight

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (i) what grants are available for rail freight infrastructure development in Wales; and how much was given for each year since 1990; (ii) what incentives are currently offered for freight users to use rail as opposed to road transportation.

Mr. Redwood: The freight facilities grant scheme provides financial assistance towards the cost of providing rail freight facilities. This is an environmental grant available from the Welsh Office to encourage firms to take heavy lorries off the roads. Grant assistance of up to 50 per cent. of the capital costs of rail freight equipment is available although schemes of exceptional environmental benefit may attract a higher rate. The amount of grant paid since 1990 is as follows:

	£ million
1990–91	nil
1991–92	nil
1992–93	0.4
1993–94	0.7
1994–95	1.6

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if stone may be transported from the Tonfanau quarry into England by train using the Cambrian line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I understand from the railway operators that while it is technically feasible to transport stone on the line, the track will not bear high axle weights and loading figures would be poor.

Rail sidings which would also be required may be eligible for assistance under the Department's rail freight facilities grant scheme.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been taken to employ load-spreading techniques on trains and tracks in Wales since 1990.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that British Rail has not used such techniques.

I hope that the privatised freight companies will consider all technologies which will enable them to expand the opportunities for attracting more freight off the roads.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals or plans he has to improve rail freight services in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Freight services in Wales will benefit by measures provided for under the Railways Act 1993. These include improved rail freight grants, the transfer of freight services to the private sector and open access to the network for private operators. In addition, the Welsh Development Agency has been asked to consider providing a rail freight option at industrial estates, wherever practicable.

Rail Infrastructure

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what infrastructure work is currently being done on Welsh railways.

Mr. Redwood: Infrastructure works are an operational issue for Railtrack, which has a programme of investment to maintain and improve the quality of the rail infrastructure in Wales.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will implement to locate and assist younger people who suffer from Alzheimer's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Local and health authorities have responsibility for assessing the needs of their residents and to plan services with the resources available to them. This includes individuals who have Alzheimer's disease.

Organ Donor Register

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the NHS organ donor register was launched in Wales; and when the advertisements inviting donors to register first appeared.

Mr. Richards: The NHS organ donor register was launched on a UK-wide basis on 6 October 1994. Advertisements inviting potential donors to register appeared the following week.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the registration forms for the NHS organ donor register were made available in Wales.

Mr. Richards: A bilingual version of the new organ donor card is being produced and will be dispatched as soon as possible. In the meantime, registration forms can be obtained from the United Kingdom Transplant Support Services Authority in Bristol or alternatively it is possible to register with Lifeline Wales.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals in Wales have registered with the NHS organ donor register since its launch.

Mr. Richards: Facilities do not currently exist for extracting complete lists of the nationality of potential donors from the NHS organ donor register. Details of registrants from Wales are not currently available.

Prescribing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 535, which Glamorgan health area is referred to in the figure of 53.53.

Mr. Redwood: South Glamorgan.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on the introduction of incentive prescribing schemes for non-fundholding practices; which family health service authorities have incentive prescribing schemes in place or definitely due to start on 1 April; and how many practices and list patients will be covered.

Mr. Redwood: All Welsh FHSAs now have prescribing incentive schemes in place. The number and list sizes of practices participating in the scheme is a matter for individual FHSAs. Payments are being authorised on an extra-statutory basis to those practices who succeed in meeting their targets. The total amount paid on this basis—estimated at £40,000 in 1994–95—will be included in FHSA summarised accounts.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales pursuant to his answers of 23 January, Official Report, column 66, 26 January, Official Report, columns 379–80 and 30 January, Official Report, column 535, if he will give for each of the dates specified (a) the aggregate numbers of practices in the fundholding and non-fundholding categories, the total numbers of general practitioners in each category on a full time equivalent basis and the number of list patients covered, (b) the average prescribing costs per 1,000 patients in (i) fundholding and (ii) non-fundholding practices and (c) the aggregate percentage figure for all fundholders and non-fundholders in respect of brand name and generic prescribing.

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows:

(a) Aggregate numbers of practices

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
GP Fundholders	26	74	117
Numbers of list patients	294,442	706,634	967,346
Non-Fundholders	519	471	428

Welsh Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of companies which have previously provided services to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority and which his Department has instructed the authority not to use (a) at all and (b) except in exceptional circumstances; on what date each company was listed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Health Common Services Authority has not been instructed to avoid using any companies which had previously provided services to it. It was advised on 22 September 1988 that it should notify my Department before appointing W. S. Atkins and Partners to any major contract. On 4 January 1991, this instruction was revoked. No other companies have been subject to such notification.

Toy Libraries

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local authority the toy libraries for which he (a) provides and (b) does not provide specific grants.

Mr. Richards: No toy libraries are currently funded directly through the Department's child and family services grant scheme. Grant awards in respect of 1995–96 under this scheme will be announced shortly.

Toy libraries may apply for funding to county voluntary bodies, to which the Department awarded £59,850 in 1994–95 under the "small grant" element of the child and family services grant scheme.

Financial Allocation

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the financial allocations made by his Department to each of the health authorities in Wales in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is as follows. It is not comparably based for the reasons explained in the footnotes to the table.

DEFENCE

Christina Menzies

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Military police are looking for anyone else following the not guilty verdict on Corporal Fisher in respect of the murder of Christina Menzies in 1993; what the victim's father has been told and for what reasons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Without a conviction in this case, the inquiry cannot be closed. Any new evidence or avenue of inquiry has been and will continue to be thoroughly pursued, although at present neither the German civil police nor the special investigation branch of the Royal Military police are conducting active inquiries in connection with Christina's murder. Staff Sergeant Menzies has been advised accordingly.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will call for an inquiry into the conduct of the prosecution in the murder case against Corporal Fisher cleared of the murder of Christina Menzies.

Mr. Soames: No inquiry is considered necessary or appropriate. The prosecution was properly brought and conducted by an experienced senior legal officer of the Army legal services.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made as to the propriety and competence of the military police investigation into the murder of Christina Menzies at RAF Gütersloh in 1993.

Mr. Soames: The body of Christina Menzies was found at Spexard, approximately 10 k south-east of RAF Gütersloh, now Princess Royal barracks Gütersloh. The Home Office forensic pathologist confirmed that Christina was killed at the scene where her body was discovered. The investigation by the special investigation branch of the Royal Military police into the murder of Christina Menzies was one of the most comprehensive inquiries ever mounted by the SIB in Germany: a major incident inquiry team was established, and worked in close liaison with the German civil police; wide-ranging and extensive avenues of inquiry were rigorously pursued; more than 300 service personnel, dependants and civilians were interviewed; and extensive searches, forensic examinations and appeals for information were made. The investigation team included several Home Office-trained individuals with a wide experience of such serious investigations.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many prosecutions for serious crimes had been undertaken by the military prosecutor who conducted the case against the man accused of the murder of Christina Menzies on a British military base in Germany in 1993; and what verdicts were returned on those cases.

Mr. Soames: The Army senior legal officer who prosecuted at this general court-martial has prosecuted at 12 general courts-martial and 19 district courts-martial since February 1989. A total of 21 accused were found guilty.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military police inquiries are ongoing into the murder of Christina Menzies at RAF Gütersloh in Germany in 1993.

Mr. Soames: None at present. Although some avenues of inquiry were pursued following the trial, in the absence of further evidence which would implicate anyone other than the then prime suspect who was originally brought to trial, no active inquiries are being made. The case is subject to review, however, and any new evidence will be investigated.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make available, without charge, the full transcript of the trial of the case of the murder of Christina Menzies, to the lawyers of Staff Sergeant and Mrs John Menzies.

Mr. Soames: If Staff Sergeant and Mrs Menzies' lawyers require a transcript of the trial they should apply to the office of the Judge Advocate General, 22 Kingsway, London WC2B 6LE.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the German police requested that they should conduct the investigations into the murder of Christina Menzies in Germany in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The body of Christina Menzies was discovered in a German civil area and the German police were properly involved at the beginning of the inquiry. Once her identity was established as that of a British forces dependant, joint inquiries between the German civil police and the special investigation branch of the Royal Military police were conducted. Subsequently, a British service man was arrested on suspicion of Christina's murder. In view of the status of both the victim and the suspect, prime jurisdiction for the prosecution of the service man was passed by the Germany civil authorities to the British military authorities.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who decided that the British military police and not the German civilian police should investigate the murder of Christina Menzies in Germany in June 1993.

Mr. Soames: Although the German civil police were involved in the investigation into Christina Menzies' murder, jurisdiction was passed to the British service authorities after the suspect's arrest. The NATO status of forces agreement and supplementary agreement permits the German public prosecutor to waive the primary right of jurisdiction, which then passes to the sending state. In this case it was decided between the chief police adviser of the British service liaison organisation, the German public prosecutor and the service authorities that the case would proceed to court-martial.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the competence of military police to handle complex forensic and scientific investigation into serious crime.

Mr. Soames: Royal Military police special investigation branch major inquiry teams include Royal Military police and Home Office-trained investigators and scenes of crime officers of the highest competence. Special investigations branch investigators may on occasion be required to work alone, unsupervised and without immediate support and therefore are well trained in a wide range of investigative techniques.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the military police investigation into the murder of Christina Menzies on the base of RAF Gütersloh in Germany in June 1993.

Mr. Soames: A large-scale joint investigation was carried out by the German civil police and the Royal Military police, involving the most senior and experienced special investigation branch investigation officers. Given the complexity of the investigation, which involved every conceivable avenue being pursued and the deployment of all available resources, it is concluded that the Royal Military police investigation was carried out thoroughly.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will call for a report from the officer commanding the military police into the police investigation of the murder of Christina Menzies, at RAF Gütersloh, Germany, in 1993.

Mr. Soames: No. On completion of inquiries into this case, a comprehensive report detailing the action taken by the investigation team was prepared. In view of the verdict of not guilty, the procedures were reviewed by the special investigation branch, Royal Military police and were found to be sound. No further report is considered necessary.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many prosecutions for (a) murder and (b) other serious crimes have been prosecuted by military prosecutors in courts martial over the last 20 years; and what verdicts were returned.

Mr. Soames: Since February 1989, 146 accused have been tried by Army general courts-martial and have been prosecuted by legal officers of Army legal services, including 11 prosecutions for murder and five for manslaughter. At these courts-martial, 116 accused have been found guilty and 30 have been acquitted. Statistics for earlier years could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the competence of military prosecutors to prosecute serious crimes involving forensic and scientific dimensions at courts martial.

Mr. Soames: The competence of the officers in question is not in doubt. The findings and conduct of Army courts-martial are continually reviewed by the director of Army legal services, by the Judge Advocate General and, where an appeal has been lodged, by the Courts-Martial Appeal Court.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations his Department has carried out on those service-personnel who took part in the Gulf War and who are now suffering from the so-called desert-fever syndrome in respect of possible damage to the immune system resulting from the precautions they were instructed to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The only such precautionary measure service personnel in the Gulf were instructed to take was the self-administration of one 30mg pyridostigmine bromide tablet every eight hours from their nerve agent pre-treatment sets on order from the local chain of command as a protection against the threat of nerve agent attack. The body of medical evidence from over four decades of medical use of pyridostigmine, the specific research into pyridostigmine as a nerve agent prohylaxis and the Department's current Gulf war medical assessment programme all indicate that pyridostigmine does not damage the immune system. Nor is there any biologically plausible rationale to suggest that it could do so.

Various vaccines were administered during the Gulf war on a voluntary basis. Again, the body of medical evidence shows that vaccines do not produce immune system dysfunction.

The Department's Gulf war medical assessment programme uses well-established screening investigations, which include a full blood count, differential white cell count and erythrocyte sedimentation rate. Any individual patient with suspected immune dysfunction undergoes immunoglobulin assay, tests for autoantibodies and a variety of imaging investigations. If this whole screening process reveals a possible immune system abnormality, more detailed investigations are ordered.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if complete medical records, including all substances and innoculations administered during the Gulf war to any member of the armed forces, will be made available to him or her or their general practitioner on request.

Mr. Soames: Service medical records are the property of the Department but, in common with civilian medical records, individual access to them by the patient concerned is allowed in accordance with the Access to Health Records Act 1990. Under the provisions of this Act, medical records are normally released to the individual concerned only if they were compiled after 1 November 1991, which post-dates the end of the Gulf conflict. However, for service medical records of former personnel compiled before this date, it has long been my Department's policy to release them upon request to the individual's general practitioner when they are required for the management of a particular case. These records include details of the medications and vaccinations given to the patient. However, in the operational situation pertaining during the Gulf conflict it is possible that not all such details were transcribed from field records on to personal medical records. The Defence Medical Services is happy to give advice to GPs in individual cases of doubt. Nerve agent pre-treatment sets were issued to all personnel in the Gulf but are not recorded on personal medical records as they are self-administered on order from the local chain of command, depending on the assessed threat of nerve agent attack, and not given as a medicinal product.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what terms of reference the members of the Royal College of Physicians are conducting their independent verification of his Department's Gulf war veterans medical assessment programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The purpose of obtaining the assistance of the Royal College of Physicians is to gain an independent opinion of our Gulf war medical assessment programme. It is for the Royal College of Physicians to determine the terms of reference.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will identify by name the members of the Royal College of Physicians who will oversee examinations under his Department's Gulf war veterans medical assessment programme.

Mr. Soames: The purpose of obtaining the assistance of the Royal College of Physicians is to gain an independent opinion of our Gulf war medical assessment programme. The selection of members to oversee the programme is a decision for the Royal College of Physicians.

Phoenix Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the technical problems which have developed with the Phoenix remote-controlled surveillance aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: MOD flight trials held in the course of last year highlighted a number of areas requiring further work, including the degree of damage sustained by air vehicles on landing, sensor focus drift, propeller performance and supportability issues.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what other options his Department is considering in relation to the Phoenix remote-controlled surveillance aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: The way ahead on the Phoenix project is currently under consideration. The Department also continues to review the capabilities of alternative systems, in accordance with normal procurement practice.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the original estimated cost of the Phoenix remote-controlled surveillance aircraft at current prices; and what is the total amount spent to date at current prices.

Mr. Freeman: The original estimated cost of the Phoenix project at current price levels is £218.2 million, including VAT. The total amount spent to 31 December 1994 is £168.99 million, including VAT at current price levels.

Lieutenant Commander Chris Parke

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if Lieutenant Commander Chris Parke of the Royal Navy pensions and payroll department, HMS Centurion, Portsmouth, sought permission from the civilian management and conditions of service division within his Department to permit him to join the data supply company Informix;

(2) on which date Lieutenant Commander Chris Parke, of the Royal Navy pensions and pay roll department, HMS Centurion, Portsmouth (a) ceases to be in the employ of the Royal Navy (b) ceases to be in the employ of his Department and (c) commences employment with the data supply company Informix.

Mr. Soames: Lieutenant Commander Christopher Parke RN will cease to be employed by the Royal Navy on 26 February. Between 9 and 29 January he worked, unpaid, with Informix under normal resettlement arrangements. From 30 January, he was on terminal leave and entitled to take up full-time employment, and I understand that he has worked full-time for Informix since that date. Service instructions require Lieutenant Commander Parke to seek permission to take up employment with Informix and this has now been sought retrospectively. I cannot speculate on the likely outcome of his application.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the role of Lieutenant Commander Chris Parke, of the Royal Navy pensions and pay roll department, HMS Centurion, Portsmouth, in the awarding of contracts on behalf of the Royal Navy to the data supply company Informix.

Mr. Soames: Lieutenant Commander Christopher Parke RN provided technical and administrative support to those responsible for the decision to award a contract for a relational database management system to Informix in April 1994.

Official Service Residences

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the expenditure for each of the official service residences in each of the previous five financial years before 1991–92.

Mr. Soames: Information prior to financial year 1991–92 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to close the RNAS base at Portland; and where he plans to relocate the search and rescue helicopters currently based there.

Mr. Soames: It is our intention to close RNAS Portland by 1999. The Royal Navy Sea Kings, which currently provide daytime-only search and rescue cover, are planned to join the Sea King Mk IV fleet at HMS Heron at Yeovilton. In the light of their planned withdrawal, future search and rescue coverage in the region is currently being considered with the coastguard.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to base search and rescue helicopter operations at RAF St. Athan in the next three years.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to base search and rescue operations permanently at RAF St. Athan. However, the station is often used as a temporary operating base and this practice is expected to continue.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Japan (Princess of Wales Visit)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost to public funds of the visit of HRH the Princess of Wales to Japan; on which vote it is met; and for what reasons.

Mr. Baldry: The costs of different activities related to this visit were borne by the Departments whose responsibilities they were as follows:

(i) The cost of the princess's travel to and from Japan was a charge—as for all air travel, whether official or unofficial, by the Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Queen Mother and the Prince and the Princess of Wales—to the Ministry of Defence.

(ii) The cost of the personal protection office who accompanied the princess was met by the Metropolitan police.

(iii) The visit involved some costs to the embassy in Tokyo on entertainment, transport and staff time. These are part of the normal functioning of an embassy.

(iv) The cost of travel for reconnaissance visits undertaken by the princess's private secretary and a press secretary—necessary to ensure the visit was properly prepared in relation to security and other aspects—was met by the FCO and amounted to £6,568—that is two business class return fares. The two officers were accommodated by embassy staff.

UN Social Summit

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Heads of State or of Government have indicated they will attend the United Nations social summit in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Goodlad: Over 90 Heads of State/Government have confirmed their attendance at the Summit. Several countries, including Japan, Canada, New Zealand, Austria, Ireland and Greece have not yet decided who will represent them.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Ministers who have represented the United Kingdom at preparatory meetings for the United Nations social summit in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Baldry: The four preparatory committee meetings held in New York to prepare the documentation for the summit have been attended by officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Overseas Development Administration, the Department of Social Security and the Department of Employment. The vast majority of countries, including all our European Union partners, felt that ministerial attendance was not appropriate.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom will support the common European position at the forthcoming United Nations social summit in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes. United Kingdom and European Union policies on the summit are in line. The United Kingdom has played a full part in European Union co-ordination during preparations for the summit.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the European Union policy to be presented at the United Nations social summit in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Goodlad: We are content with the European Union's position in relation to the summit. It is the result of active EU co-ordination in New York and Brussels during which many of our suggestions for strong texts on the three core issues were incorporated into the overall EU position.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will include representatives of the Confederation of British Industry and Trades Union Congress in the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations social summit in Copenhagen in March.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom delegation to the summit will not include representatives of non-governmental organisations. However, the Trades Union Congress, along with several other UK-based NGOs are planning to send representatives to the summit.

Chatham House Conference

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what public or private institutions will be invited as full participants in the forthcoming Chatham House conference on promoting British values, civilisation and the English language.

Mr. Baldry: The conference on "Britain in the World" is being organised by the Royal Institute of International Affairs, in association with Her Majesty's Government, as part of the institute's 75th anniversary celebrations.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will give the opening speech. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will give a lunch-time address. The hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) will also speak. Other contributors will include Dr. Henry Kissinger; Mr. Peter Bonfield, Chairman of ICL; and Dr. Josef Joffe, foreign editor of the "Süddeutsche Zeitung". The programme has been agreed jointly with the RIIA, which is inviting people from all walks of British life who will represent a wide range of interests and viewpoints. There will also be a smaller number of foreign guests.

Israel

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Israel concerning the treatment of Lebanese detainees being held in Khiam prison in southern Lebanon.

Mr. David Davis: We regularly raise our concerns about the treatment of Lebanese detainees being held in Khiam prison with the Israeli Government. We welcome recent reports that detainees are now being allowed visitors. However, we remain concerned about continued reports of ill treatment of detainees and urge those responsible for Khiam prison to grant the International Committee of the Red Cross full access.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the United Kingdom is taking, together with the other European Governments, to persuade Israel to withdraw its forces from southern Lebanon, in compliance with United Nations Security Council resolution No. 425.

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom has repeatedly called for the full implementation of Security Council resolution No. 425 and the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanese soil. The Israeli Government are well aware of our views.

Russian Federation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations between the Western European Union and the Russian Federation.

Mr. Baldry: A range of informal links have been developed between the Western European Union and the Russian Federation. Foreign Minister Kozyrev addressed the Assembly of the Western European Union on 1 December last year.

UN Peacekeeping Missions

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances it is the practice in a United Nations peacekeeping mission to install a radio station to communicate accurate information to the local population; and if he will make a statement on conclusions drawn on the desirability of such an action after the experiences of Rwanda and Somalia.

Mr. Baldry: The United Nations has no set criteria for the establishment of a radio station in any peacekeeping operation. It is clear to the UN Secretary-General, however, that peacekeeping operations need an effective information capacity to enable them to explain their mandate to the population and, by providing a credible and impartial source of information, to counter misinformation disseminated about them. We agree with his view that radio is the most effective medium for this purpose.

Iran

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, columns 519–20, what are the two exceptions which have received licence application approval for significant nuclear items destined for Iran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: The two exceptions for export licence approval for Iran were set out in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs Secretary's reply to the hon. Member for Finchley (Mr. Booth) on 1 March 1993, Official Report, column 8, namely that we should not approve licences for any goods or technology on the military or atomic energy lists—schedule 1, part 3, group 1 and 2—of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992 (as amended) unless they are:

(a) goods essential for the safety of civil aircraft and air traffic control systems;

(b) radioactive material in the form of sources for medical equipment and deuterium labelled compounds for medical use.

Iraqi British Interest Group

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if British officials in Amman have had meetings in the last 12 months with the Iraqi British Interest Group; and if British officials in Amman have assisted representatives of the Iraqi British Interest Group in the last 12 months.

Mr. David Davis: Officials in the embassy in Amman last had contact with the current head of the Iraqi British Interest Group, Mr. Stephen Crouch, in a private capacity in September 1994. They have not knowingly given any assistance to representatives of the Iraqi British Interest Group. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has only become aware of the existence of the group in the last few months.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 254

SESSION 1994–95

6th February—17th February 1995

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
